

Library of the Theological Seminary,

PRINCETON, N. J.

Division..... Sec

Section..... #12,623

Shelf..... 8

Number.....

v. 2-3

THE P S A L M S

TRANSLATED AND EXPLAINED

BY

J. A. ALEXANDER

PROFESSOR IN THE THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY AT PRINCETON

THREE VOLUMES IN TWO.

VOLUME II

SIXTH EDITION.

NEW YORK:
SCRIBNER, ARMSTRONG & CO., 654 BROADWAY.
1873.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1850, by JOSEPH ADDISON ALEXANDER, In the Clerk's Office of the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey.

THE PSALMS.

PSALM LI.

1, 2. To the Chief Musician. A Psalm. By David
When Nathan the Prophet came unto him, as he (i. e. David) had come unto Bathsheba. The first inscription was particularly necessary here, to show that the psalm was designed for permanent and public use, since it might otherwise have been regarded as expressive of mere personal emotions. It has reference to the one great crime of David's life, noted as such in the inspired history itself (1 Kings xv. 5), and involving the guilt of both adultery and murder. See 2 Sam. xi and xii. The significant repetition of the phrase came unto in v. 2 is lost in the English and most other versions. As is not a mere particle of time, simply equivalent to when, but suggests the ideas of analogy, proportion, and retaliation. The psalm consists of two parts, a prayer and a vow. In the first, he prays to be forgiven and restored to the divine favour, vs. 3—14 (1—12.) In the second, he shows how he means to testify his gratitude, vs. 15—21 (13—19.)

3 (1.) Be gracious to me, (oh) God, according to thy mercy; according to the abundance of thy compassions, blot out my transgressions. In this verse and the next, he presents the petition which constitutes the theme or burden of the psalm. The appeal to the divine grace, mercy, and compassion, involves a confession of his own guilt and the justice of his condemnation. According to, literally, like thy mercy, i. e. in accordance with it, in proportion to it. Here again there is a tacit admission of the greatness of his guilt, as requiring infinite mercy to forgive it. Abundance, increase, multitude. See above, on Ps. v. 8 (7.) Compassions, tender mercies, a term expressive of the warmest and tenderest affections. See above, on Ps. xviii. 2 (1.) Blot out, erase, from thy remembrance. The allusion is probably to a record or register of crimes, or to the cancelling of accounts, although the former seems to agree better with ancient and oriental usage. Compare Num. v. 23. Transgressions, or with closer adherence to the primary etymological import of the term, revolts, apostasies. See above, on Ps. xix. 14 (13.) xxxii. 1.

4 (2.) Thoroughly wash me from my iniquity, and from my sin cleanse me. The first word in Hebrew is the infinitive or imperative of a verb meaning to increase or multiply, but often used adverbially in the sense of plentifully, abundantly. The verb in the first clause properly denotes the act of washing the garments, as distinguished from that of bathing the body. See Num. xix. 19. The image here presented therefore is the same as in Jude v. 23, sin being represented as a stain, and the grace of God as purifying water.

5 (3.) For my transgressions I know, and my sin (is) before me always. His consciousness of guilt is urged, not only as a reason why he should ask forgiveness, but as a reason why God should grant it. As no one is forgiven unless convinced of sin, so this conviction constitutes a kind of claim to pardon, not as being meritorious or intrinsically efficacious, but as an indication of God's merciful intentions, since conviction and forgiveness are alike his gift. The same mutual connection of the two things is uniformly recognized in Scripture. See above, on Ps. xxxii. 5, and com pare 2 Sam. xii. 13. Prov. xxviii. 13. 1 John i. 9. The future in the first clause is significant. I know it and shall know it; I can never henceforth lose the sense or knowledge of it.

6 (4.) To thee, thee only, have I sinned, and done the evil in thine eyes, to the intent that thou mayest be just in thy speaking, and be clear in thy judging. The particle at the beginning denotes general relation, as to, or respecting. The precise relation meant must be determined by the context. See above, on Ps. xxxv. 19, 24. xxxviii. 17 (16.) It does not therefore directly and explicitly substitute God for man as the injured party, which is the only sense that can be put upon the English phrase against thee. This idea, however, is undoubtedly implied, as well as perfectly consistent with the usage of the Scriptures in describing all sin as committed against God. Even murder, the highest crime that can be committed against man, is condemned and punished as the violation of God's image (Gen. ix. 6.) It is also possible to understand thee, thee only, as opposed not to other objects, but to the sinner himself, as one of two contending parties. As if he had said, thou hast not sinned against me, but I have sinned against thee, thee only. The evil, not this evil, which restricts the acknowledgment too much, but that which is evil, meaning sin in general. To the intent that may have reference to the divine purpose in permitting David's sin to take this aggravated form, so that there could be neither doubt nor transfer nor participation of his guilt, and so that when God spoke in condemnation of it, he might not only be, but appear to be, entirely just. There is no need therefore of adopting the weaker meaning, so that, denoting a mere consequence but not a purpose, or of supposing the intention indicated to be merely that of the confession, 'I acknowledge this, that thou mayest be just, etc. Speaking, i. e. speaking as a judge, deciding, or more definitely still, condemning. It is therefore substantially equivalent to the parallel term judging.

7 (5.) Lo, in iniquity I was born, and in sin did my mother conceive me. The meaning of the first verb is determined by its use in Job xv. 7. Prov. viii. 24, 25, and that of the corresponding active form in Job xxxix. 1. The iniquity and sin meant are not those of his mother, but his own. Having just before confessed his actual transgressions, he now acknowledges the corruption of his nature. This has always been regarded as the locus classicus of the Old Testament, in reference to the doctrine of original sin.

8 (6.) Lo, truth thou hast desired in the inward (or secret) parts, and in the hidden (part) wisdom thou wilt make me know. The repetition of behold or lo, at the beginning of the sentence, seems to indicate a close connection with the preceding verse. That connection is most probably as follows: 'Since I am corrupted in my very nature, and thou canst be satisfied with nothing short of inward sincerity, thou must bestow what thou requirest, by imparting to me heavenly wisdom.' Truth, sincerity, reality, as opposed to hypocritical profession or pretence. The first verb means not merely to desire, but to will, as in Job xxxiii. 32. The past tense implies that it has always been so, that the requisition is no sudden or capricious one, but an eternal law founded in God's very nature. The inward and hidden parts are mentioned as opposed to the mere outside. Wisdom, divine illumination, without which no correct view either of sin or holiness is possible. Thou wilt make me know, involves a prayer, although in form it is an expression of strong confidence.

9 (7.) Thou wilt purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean; thou wilt wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow. What he asked in v. 4 (2) he here anticipates with confidence. The verb translated purge is very expressive, being a derivative of that which means to sin in v. 6 (4) above. It denotes specifically, therefore, purification from the stain of sin, either by actual payment of the penalty (Gen. xxxi. 39), or by vicarious satisfaction (Num. xix. 19.) Hyssop is mentioned as a plant much used in the Levitical purgations, either as a convenient instrument of sprinkling (Ex. xii. 22), or as an emblem of the divine condescension, viewed in contrast with the divine majesty (Isai. lxvi. 1, 2), as represented by the cedar, with which the hyssop is perpetually joined. See Num. xix. 18, and compare 1 Kings v. 13. iv. 33. In either case to purge with hyssop necessarily suggests the idea of a purification founded on atonement, as the hyssop was employed to sprinkle purifying substances, and sometimes mingled with them (Ex. xii. 22. Num. xix. 6, 18.) The second future in each clause expresses both consent and expectation. Whiter than snow is a natural hyperbole denoting perfect purity. See the same images applied to the same subject in Isai. i. 18. The last verb answers to the English whiten, being properly a causative, but sometimes used intransitively, just as we may say, that blushing reddens the face, or that the face reddens in the act of blushing. ‘Wash me and I shall whiten (become white) from (away from, as distinguished from, and by implication more than) snow.’

10 (8.) Thou wilt make me to hear joy and gladness ; (then) shall rejoice the bones (which) thou hast broken (bruised, or crushed.) What is formally expressed is still a confident expectation or assured hope, under which, however, an intense desire is implicitly contained. The joy here anticipated is that of pardoned sin. See above, on Ps. xxxii. 1. He expects to hear it, as communicated or announced by God. The word then is introduced in the translation for the sake of retaining the original arrangement of the sentence, closing, as it does in Hebrew, with the emphatic figure, crushed or broken, which expresses, in a very lively manner, the disorder and distress produced by consciousness of aggravated and unexpiated guilt. The change from this condition to a sense of safety and reconciliation with God, is not too strongly represented by the bold but most expressive figure of broken bones rejoicing. The ellipsis of the relative in this clause is common to both idioms.

11 (9.) Hide thy face from my sins, and all my iniquities blot out. The desire implied in the anticipations of the two preceding verses now breaks out into its proper form, that of direct petition. Hide thy face from them, so as not to see them, look no longer at them. The same figure is applied, in an unfavourable sense, to God's apparent neglect of his suffering servants, his refusal to behold them or to notice their condition. See above, on Ps. xiii. 2 (1.) xliv. 25 (24.) Blot out, expunge, from thy account, or from the book of thy remembrance, as in v. 3 (1) above. What he asks as to his sins is that God will cancel and forget them.

12 (10.) A pure heart create for me, (oh) God, and a fixed (or settled) spirit renew within me. The petition in the first clause involves a confession of impurity, and of dependence on almighty power and sovereign grace for its removal. A pure heart is a familiar Scriptural figure for affections free from the taint of sin. See above, on Ps. xxiv. 4, and below, on Ps. lxxiii. 1, and compare Matth. v. 8. Acts xv. 9. While the use of the word create implies the necessity of an almighty intervention, the additional phrase to (or for) me suggests the idea of a gift which is often expressed elsewhere in the same connection. See Jer. xxiv. 7. Ez. xi. 19. xxxvi. 26, and compare 1 Sam. x. 9. The gift demanded in the last clause is that of a firm, unwavering spirit, as opposed both to fickleness and cowardice. Compare the use of the same adjective or participle in Ps. lvii. 8 (7.) lxxviii. 37. cxii. 7. The word renew implies a previous possession of it, derived not from nature but from grace, and interrupted by his yielding to temptation. Though his faith and love could not utterly fail, his fixedness of purpose was destroyed for the time, and could only be recovered by a new conversion, as in the case of Peter (Luke xxii. 32.) Within me, in the midst (or in the inside) of me. The same Hebrew noun is repeatedly used elsewhere, to denote the inward dispositions and affections, as distinguished from a mere profession or appearance. See above, on Ps. v. 10 (9.) xlix. 12 (11.)

13 (11.) Cast me not away from thy presence, and thy Holy Spirit take not from me. As indispensable prerequisites and means to the possession of such a heart and spirit as he had just prayed for, he recognizes intimate communion with God, and the active influences of his Spirit. This prayer, unless we arbitrarily supply again or forever, seems to imply that David was in actual possession of these blessings and afraid of losing them. There may be an intentional allusion to his own reception of the Spirit and to Saul's privation of it, as recorded in 1 Sam. xvi. 1, 7, 13. Compare 1 Sam. x. 6, 10. Isai. xi. 2.

14 (12.) Restore to me the joy of thy salvation, and (with) a willing spirit uphold me. The first verb is a causative in Hebrew, meaning make to return, implying previous possession. The next phrase may be explained, according to a very common Hebrew idiom, thy joy of salvation, thy saving joy. See above, on Ps. ii. 6. But the obvious construction seems to yield the best sense, namely, that of joy occasioned by salvation, or relating to it as its subject. This joy was of course incompatible with any interruption of God's presence and the assurance of his favour. The word translated willing means spontaneous, prompt, forward to act without coercion; then liberal, generous, noble. See above, on Ps. xlvii. 10 (9.) It may be taken as an epithet of the Holy Spirit; but the omission of the pronoun (thy) which determines it in the foregoing verse, and the repeated use of spirit in the context to denote his own heart, makes it more probable that this is the sense here likewise. By such a spirit of spontaneous conformity to God's will he desires and hopes to be held up, i. e. preserved from falling as he fell before.

15 (13.) (Then) will I teach transgressors thy ways, and sinners unto thee shall return. Here begins the expression of his thankfulness, or rather a description of the way in which he is determined to express it. The word supplied at the beginning points out the connection of the verses. 'Then, when these petitions have been answered, I will teach, etc.' The form of the Hebrew verb denotes a strong desire and a settled purpose, as if he had said, 'I am resolved to teach.' Transgressors, rebels, traitors, apostates. See above, on v. 5 (3.) Thy ways, as well the ways in which thou walkest as the ways in which thou requirest us to walk, the course of providence and the course of duty. See above, on Ps. xviii. 22, 31 (21, 30.) In both these senses, he might naturally wish to "vindicate the ways of God to man." Of this resolution a partial fulfilment is recorded in Ps. xxxii. 8, 9. The effect of such instructions is recorded in the last clause of the verse before us. The Hebrew verb there used is not a passive (shall be converted) but an active form, shall turn or return to the Lord, perhaps with an allusion to the great original apostasy, in which the whole race is involved. See above, on Ps. xxii. 28 (27.) To this verse there seems to be particular allusion in our Saviour's words to Peter, Luke xxii. 32.

16 (14.) Free me from blood, (oh) God, God of my salvation, (and) my tongue shall celebrate thy righteousness. The first clause contains the condition of the second, and the whole is equivalent to saying, 'if thou wilt save me, I will praise thee.' Blood, literally bloods, the plural being idiomatically used when there is reference to murder. See above, on Ps. v. 7 (6.) There may be an allusion to the frequent personification of the victim's blood, as crying out for vengeance on the murderer or pursuing him (Gen. iv. 10. ix. 5, 6.) The verb translated free is applied to deliverance from enemies in Ps. vii. 2 (1), and from sins (as here) in Ps. xxxix. 9 (8.) The strength of the desire here expressed may derive some illustration from the threatening in 2 Sam. xii. 9, 10. Celebrate, applaud by shout or song. See above, on Ps. v. 12 (11.) xx. 6 (5.) xxxii. 11. xxxiii. 1.

17 (15.) Lord, my lips thou wilt open, and my mouth shall declare thy praise. The relation of the clauses to each other is the same as in the foregoing verse. 'If thou wilt open my lips, my mouth etc.' The first clause, therefore, really includes a petition that his lips may be opened; but it also includes more, to wit, a confident anticipation that his prayer will be granted. The sense is therefore only partially expressed by rendering the future as an imperative (open thou my lips.) The exact form as well as the sense of the original is given in the Prayer Book Version (thou shalt open my lips, oh Lord.) Open my lips, i. e. enable me to praise thee by affording an occasion, and empower me to praise thee, by removing this oppressive sense of guilt, which condemns me to perpetual silence. Compare Isai vi. 5—7 Declare, tell, utter, or proclaim. See above, Ps. xix. 2 (1.)

18 (16.) For thou desirest not sacrifice, else would I give (it), (in) burnt offering thou delightest not. He now assigns the reason why he is determined to requite God's favour by becoming praise. The literal translation of the first clause is, thou wilt not desire sacrifice, and I will give (it), i. e. but if thou dost desire it, I will give it. By sacrifice we must here understand the mere material oblation, apart from the penitent and thankful spirit, of which it was the required expression. See above, on Ps. xl. 7 (6.) The parallel terms, sacrifice and burnt-offering, are commonly regarded as generic and specific expressions of the same idea. But some interpreters deny that they are ever confounded or promiscuously used, and give the first the sense of thank offerings.

which are then joined with expiatory offerings, as a general description of all animal oblations.

19 (17.) The sacrifices of God (are) a broken spirit ; a heart broken and crushed, (oh) God, thou wilt not despise. These are natural and perfectly intelligible figures for profound and submissive sorrow on account of sin. There is great significance and beauty in what seems at first to be a solecism in the language of the first clause. The sacrifice of God is a broken spirit might seem to be a more correct expression ; but it would have failed to suggest the striking and important thought, that one such heart or spirit is equivalent to all the various and complicated sacrifices of the ritual. The sacrifices of God are those which he requires and is willing to accept. The use of the word contrite in the English versions mars the beauty of the metaphor, because that term is confined to the dialect of theology, whereas the Latin contritum, from which it was borrowed, as well as the original expression, exactly corresponds to broken, both in its literal and figurative usage. Thou wilt not despise, when it is offered, and especially when I present it, as the solemn expression of my thanks for this deliverance. The substitution of the present for the future would both weaken and obscure the sentence, and the same consideration might be urged in favor of a strict translation in the verse preceding. So far is a habitual sorrow for sin from being inconsistent with the joy of God's salvation, that David here engages to present it as a perpetual thank-offering. Compare the language of Hezekiah, Isai. xxxviii. 15.

20 (18.) Do good, in thy favour, to Zion ; thou wilt build the walls of Jerusalem. From his own personal necessities his mind now passes to those of the whole church, of which he was the visible head and representative, thereby implying that his sense of guilt and danger had been aggravated by the thought of his official relation to God's people, who must have shared in his disgrace and punishment. See above, on Ps. iii. 4 (3.) iv. 3 (2.) The change of construction from the imperative to the future marks a natural transition from importunate desire to confident anticipation. See above, on vs. 9—11 (7—9.) This delicate transition there is surely no need of obliterating by a gratuitous assimilation of the moods and tenses. The building of the walls is a poetical parallel to doing good or showing favour, and the opposite of dismantling in Ps. lxxxix: 41 (40.)

21 (19.) Then shalt thou be pleased with sacrifices of righteousness, burnt-offering and holocaust; then shall they offer on thine altar bullocks. Then, i. e. when thou hast done good to Zion and fortified Jerusalem. Sacrifices of righteousness, righteous or right sacrifices. See above, on Ps. iv: 6 (5.) Some have inferred from this verse, that the psalm was written in the Babylonish exile, when the temple was in ruins and the ceremonial law suspended, and that the Psalmist here anticipates the time when both should be restored. But this is forbidden by his saying, in v. 18 (16), that if God desired burnt offerings he would give them, plainly implying the continued observance of the sacrificial system. There is no ground, therefore, for disputing either the correctness of the title, which ascribes the psalm to David, or the genuineness of the last two verses, which some have rejected as an addition by a later hand. These verses are not only appropriate but necessary as a conclusion to the psalm, and every difficulty is removed by giving them their natural but figurative meaning, as an expression of desire and hope that God would favour his own people and graciously accept their service. Holocaust is here used to translate a single Hebrew word, meaning a sacrifice entirely consumed upon the altar. It does not describe something wholly distinct from the burnt offering, but the burnt offering itself considered as a complete and unreserved oblation. See 1 Sam. vii 9. Bullocks are mentioned as the choicest victims in point of species, size, and age. By a slight change of construction we obtain the bold and striking declaration that the bullocks shall themselves ascend the altar, i. e. as a living and spontaneous sacrifice. Compare Isai. lx. 7.

PSALM LII.

THIS psalm, besides the title, vs. 1, 2, contains three stanzas of three verses each. In the first, the Psalmist expostulates with an arrogant, cruel, and deceitful enemy, vs. 3—5 (1—3.) In the second, he foretells the destruction of this enemy by the divine judgments, and the contempt to be excited by his folly, vs. 6—8 (4—6.) In the third, he contrasts this fatal fruit of unbelief with the happy effects of his own trust in God, vs. 9—11 (7—9.) The two Selahs in vs. 5, 7 (3, 5), have reference not so much to the form of the psalm as to the feelings of the Psalmist, and are therefore placed irregularly. See above, on Ps. iii. 3 (2.) The variation of the English and the Hebrew Bible, in numbering the verses of this psalm, is the same, and arises from the same cause, as in the fifty-first.

1. To the Chief Musician. Maschil. By David. The psalm is expressly designated as a Maschil or didactic psalm, because its adaptation to this purpose might very easily be overlooked, in consequence of its avowed relation to a particular event in David's history. See above, on Ps. xxxii. 1. xlii. 1. xlv. 1. Though occasioned by this incident, however, it was written for the permanent and public use of the ancient church, and is therefore inscribed to (or for) the Chief Musician. See above, on Ps. iv. 1. li. 1.

2. When Doeg the Edomite came and told Saul, and said unto him, David is come to the house of Ahimelech. This is merely the beginning of the story, which is supposed to be familiar to the reader of the psalm, and which is given at length in 1 Sam. xxii. Doeg is mentioned only as the witness or informer, by whose means the matter came to Saul's knowledge. When he came, literally, in his coming, the same form of expression as in Ps. li. 2.

3 (1.) Why wilt thou boast thyself in evil, mighty (man)? The mercy of the Almighty (is) all the day. The future form of the verb suggests the idea of obstinate persistency. Boast thyself in evil, exult or triumph in the injury of others. The mighty man is not Doeg but Saul, who, of all the characters in sacred history, approaches nearest to the classical idea of a hero. There is something therefore of respect and admiration implied in the address, as if he had said, 'How can one who might have been so eminent in well-doing, glory in his shame or boast himself in evil?' In the last clause there is an obvious antithesis between the malice of this mighty man and the unfailing goodness of the mighty God. The particular divine name here used therefore is peculiarly significant. See above, on Ps. v. 5 (4.) l. 1. As if he had said, 'Mighty and malicious as thou art, the might and mercy of Jehovah are still greater.' All the day, i. e. perpetual, unceasing. See above, on Ps. xlii. 11 (10)

4 (2.) Mischief's will thy tongue devise, like a razor whetted, working deceitfully. The first word means calamitous events, brought on one man by the malice of another. See above, on Ps. v. 10 (9.) xxxviii. 13 (12), and below, on Ps. lvii. 2 (1.) The distinctive meaning of the future is the same as in v. 3 (1.) The torgue is here said to meditate or devise mischief, because it is personified, or poetically substituted for the speaker. The allusion is to Saul's cutting words when he accused Ahimelech and David of conspiracy against him (1 Sam. xxii. 13.) This false charge, or the tongue which uttered it, is likened to a razor, not merely sharp but sharpened, whetted, for the purpose or occasion. See above, on Ps. xlv. 6 (5.) Similar comparisons occur in Ps. lv. 22 (21.) lvii. 5 (4.) lix. 8 (7.) lxiv. 4 (3.) Jer. ix. 2, 7 (3, 8.) Working deceitfully, literally, deceit or fraud. These words may be grammatically referred to the speaker or his tongue as practising deceit; but it yields a more striking sense to understand them of the razor, as working deceitfully, i. e. moving silently and smoothly, when it cuts most keenly.

5. Thou hast loved evil (more) than good, falsehood (more) than speaking righteousness. The past tense, like the futures in the foregoing verses, includes the idea of the present; but unlike them, it represents the love of sin as already long-continued and habitual. Compare the form of expression with that in Ps. xlv. 8 (7.) Righteousness includes truth or veracity, as the genus comprehends the species. The particular unrighteousness here meant is falsehood, as appears from the antithesis. The selah tacitly suggests the writer's abhorrence of that which he describes

6 (4.) Thou hast loved all devouring words, tongue of fraud. This is not so much a continuation of the foregoing discourse, as a resumption or recapitulation for the purpose of drawing a conclusion from it. In periodic style, the connection of the ideas might be thus exhibited: 'Since then thou lovest, etc., therefore God will, etc.' Devouring words, literally, words of swallowing or deglutition. The second noun occurs only here; but the verb to swallow up is continually used in Hebrew to express the idea of complete destruction. See above, on Ps. xxi. 10 (9.) xxxv. 25. Tongue of deceit or deceitful tongue. This phrase may be governed by the verb, thou hast loved all devouring words (and or even) a deceitful tongue. But it adds to the strength of the expression, and agrees better with the form of the context, to make it an apostrophe or direct address to the deceitful tongue itself.

7 (5.) (So) likewise shall God destroy thee forever ; he shall take thee away, and pluck thee out of (thy) tent, and root thee out of the land of life. Selah. The particle at the beginning, also, likewise, shows the dependence of this verse upon the one before it, which is really conditional, though not in form. 'As thou, on thy part, lovest all devouring words, so likewise God, on his part, will destroy thee.' No exact translation can convey the full force of the verbs in this verse, which suggest a variety of striking figures for destruction or extermination. The first denotes properly the act of pulling down or demolishing a house (Lev. xiv. 45), and this would also seem to be the primary meaning of the third (Prov. xv. 25), although some suppose it to denote the act of pulling up, and to be the opposite of plant, as the first verb is of build. The second verb, in every other place where it occurs, has reference to the handling and carrying of fire or coals. See Prov. vi. 27. xxv. 22. Isai. xxx. 14. To a Hebrew reader, therefore, it would almost necessarily suggest not the general idea of removal merely, but the specific one of removing or taking away like fire, i. e. as coals are swept out from a hearth, or otherwise extinguished. The remaining verb adds to these figures that of violent eradication, and is well represented by its English equivalent. The land of life, or, as it is commonly translated, 'and of the living', is a poetical description of life itself, or the present state of existence, under the figure of a country. See above, on Ps xxvii. 13. The quick recurrence of the pause implies excited feeling and invites attention to the threatening which immediately precedes.

8 (6.) And the righteous shall see, and they shall fear, and at him they shall laugh. The fear meant is that religious awe produced by any clear manifestation of God's presence and his power. In Ps lxiv. 9, 10 (8, 9), it is assumed to be compatible with joy, and here with laughter at the wicked, not a selfish exultation in his sufferings, which is explicitly condemned in the Old Testament (Prov. xxiv. 17. Job xxxi. 29), but that sense of the absurdity of sin, which must be strongest in the purest minds, and cannot therefore be incompatible with pity, the rather as it is ascribed to God himself (Ps. ii. 4.) The paronomasia of the verbs translated see and fear is the same as in Ps xl. 4 (3.) Shall see, i. e. the destruction threatened in v. 7 (6.) At him, the person thus destroyed, the same who is addressed directly in the foregoing context. The enallage personae may be avoided by exchanging at him for at it, i. e. the destruction itself; but this is not so agreeable to Hebrew usage, which always prefers personal to abstract forms of speech.

9 (7.) Behold the man (who) will not make God his strength, but will trust in the increase of his wealth, (and) will be strong in his wickedness. This may be regarded as the language of the laughers mentioned in v. 8 (6.) Behold the man, see to what he is reduced. The effect of the behold is similar to that of the interrogation in Isai. xiv. 16. The word translated man is not one of the usual terms, but one implying strength or power, so that its use here gives a kind of sarcastic import to the passage. See the analogous use of an opposite expression in Ps. viii. 5 (4.) x. 18. The future expresses fixed determination and anticipated perseverance in refusing. Make, literally, place or set. See above, on Ps. xl. 5 (4.) His strength, or more exactly, his stronghold or fortress. See above, on Ps. xxvii. 1. xxxvii. 39. xliii. 2. Increase, or simply, abundance, greatness. See above, on Ps. v. 8 (7.) li. 3 (1.) The word translated wickedness is the singular of that translated mischiefs in v. 4 (2) above. It seems to signify particularly an inclination to malicious mischief.

10 (8.) And I (am) like a green olive-tree in the house of God; I have trusted in the mercy of God (to) eternity and perpetuity He expects not only the destruction of the wicked but his own salvation. To express the connection of the verses clearly, our idiom would require an adversative particle at the beginning, but I. See above, on Ps. ii. 6. A verdant fruitful tree is a favourite emblem of prosperity. See above, on Ps. i. 3. The olive is here specified, as palms and cedars are in Ps. xcii. 13, 14 (12, 13.) The imagery of the verse before us is copied in Jer. xi. 16. The house of God, the tabernacle, considered as his earthly residence, in which he entertains his friends and provides for his own household. See above, on Ps. xv. 1. xxiii. 6. xxvii. 4, 5. xxxvi. 9 (8.) The mixed metaphors only show that the whole description is a figurative one and should be so interpreted. I have (already) trusted, which includes his present trust, but also includes more, to wit, that it is not a new or sudden impulse, but a settled habit of his soul. The two nouns, eternity and perpetuity, are combined in the adverbial sense of forever and ever. See above, on Ps. x. 16. xxi. 5 (4.) xlv. 7 (6.) xlviii. 15 (14.) This qualifying phrase relates, not to the act, but to the object, of his trust. His meaning is not, 'I will trust forever in God's mercy,' which would have required a future verb; but, 'I have already trusted, and do still trust, in his mercy, as a mercy that will last forever.'

11 (9.) I will thank thee to eternity because thou hast done (it), and will hope (in) thy name—because it is good—before thy saints. The common version of the first verb (praise) is not sufficiently specific, as it properly denotes a particular kind of praise, namely, that for benefits received. See above, on Ps. vi. 6 (5.) vii. 18 (17.) xlix. 19 (18.) The object of the verb hast done is to be supplied from the context. See above, on Ps. xxii. 32 (31.) xxxvii. 5. xxxix. 10 (9.) Thy name, the manifestation of thy nature. See above, on Ps. v. 12 (11.) xx. 2 (1.)

xxiii. 3. xlvi. 11 (10.) To expect God's name, or wait for it, is to trust in the future exercise and exhibition of the same divine perfections which have been exhibited already. The common version, I will wait on thy name, is not so happy as the one in the Prayer Book, I will hope in thy name. Here again, as in v. 10 (8), the epexegetical clause, for it is good, relates not to the act of expectation but its object. He does not mean, 'because it is good to hope in thy name,' but 'because thy name is good, and is therefore to be hoped in.' This is clear from the analogy of Ps. liv. 8 (6.) lxix. 17 (16.) cix. 21, which also shows that the concluding words, before thy saints, are to be construed neither with what follows, it is good before thy saints i. e. in their estimation, nor with the remoter antecedent I will thank thee, but with the nearer antecedent, I will wait for thy name before thy saints, i. e. I will profess my trust in thy mercy, not in private merely, but in the presence of thy people, of the church. Compare Ps. xxii. 23 (22.) For it is good must then be read as a parenthesis. Thy saints, the merciful objects of thy mercy. See above, on Ps. iv. 4 (3.) l. 5. It is here used simply as a general designation or description of God's people.

P S A L M L I I I .

A SECOND edition of the fourteenth psalm, with variations, more or less important, in each verse. That either of these compositions is an incorrect copy of the other, is highly improbable, because two such copies of the same psalm would not have been retained in the collection, and because the variations are too uniform, consistent, and significant, to be the work of chance or mere traditional corruption. That the changes were deliberately made by a later writer is improbable, because such a liberty would hardly have been taken with a psalm of David, and because the later form, in that case, would either have been excluded from the Psalter, or substituted for the first form, or immediately connected with it. The only satisfactory hypothesis is, that the original author afterwards rewrote it, with such modifications as were necessary to bring out certain points distinctly, but without any intention to supersede the use of the original composition, which therefore still retains its place in the collection. This supposition is confirmed by the titles, which ascribe both psalms to David. Of this kind of retractatio, which is not unknown to the practice of uninspired hymnologists, we have already met with a remarkable example in the case of David. See above, the concluding note on Ps. xviii, vol. 1. p. 153. As a general fact, it may be stated, that the variations in the psalm before us are such as render the expression stronger, bolder, and in one or two cases more obscure and difficult. To these variations the remarks which follow will be restricted. For the exposition of the parts which are common to both psalms, the reader is referred to that of Ps. xiv.

1. To the Chief Musician—upon Mahalath—Maschil—by David. Between the inscription to the Chief Musician and the name of David, which are also found at the beginning of Ps. xiv, we have here two additional expressions. The first of these is by some regarded as the name or description of an instrument; but as it is so used nowhere else, and as forms almost identical occur more than once in the sense of sickness or disease, (Ex. xv 26. Prov. xviii. 14. 2 Chr. xxi. 15), it seems most natural to take the phrase as an enigmatical enunciation of the subject of the psalm, which is in strict accordance both with general usage and with that of David in particular. See above, on Ps. v. 1. xxii. 1 xlv. 1. By disease we may then understand the spiritual malady with which mankind are all infected, and which is really the theme or subject of the composition. In the only other title where it reappears (Ps. lxxxviii. 1), it denotes corporeal disease. The other addition (maschil) describes the psalm as a didactic one. See above, on Ps. lii. 1

2 (1.) The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God They have done corruptly, they have done abominable wickedness, there is none doing good. See above, on Ps. xiv. 1. The only variation in this verse is the substitution of (עָרַב) iniquity for (עֲשֵׂי-רָעָה) deed or act. Instead of saying, they have made (their) conduct abominable, the Psalmist uses the stronger expression, they have made iniquity abominable, or done abominably (in their) wickedness.

3 (2.) God from heaven has looked down on the sons of man, to see if there is (any) acting wisely, seeking God. See above, on Ps. xiv. 2. The only difference in the Hebrew of these verses is that the name Elohim is here substituted for Jehovah. The same change occurs below, in vs. 5, 6, 7 (4, 5, 6.) The name Jehovah is not used at all in the psalm before us, but occurs four times in Ps. xiv, and Elohim thrice. This difference seems to mark Ps. liii as the later composition, in which the writer aimed at an external uniformity, which did not occur to him at first. This is a much more natural supposition than that he afterwards varied what was uniform at first. The attempts which have been made to account, still more particularly, for the use of the divine names in these two psalms, have entirely failed.

4 (3.) All of it has apostatized; together they have putrefied; there is none doing good; there is not even one. See above, on Ps. xiv. 3. For all of it we there have the whole, i. e. the whole human race. The same thing seems to be intended by a more obscure phrase, all of it, in which the pronoun it, refer to man, in the collective sense of mankind or the human race. The idea of departure from God, apostasy, is expressed in the parallel places by two verbs almost identical in form (כר and כג), the one of which means properly to turn aside and the other to turn back.

5 (4.) Do they not know—(these) workers of iniquity—eating my people 'as) they eat bread—(and on) God call not? See above, on Ps. xiv. 4. The only variation here, besides the change of the divine name which has been already mentioned, is the omission of the all before workers of iniquity. This has been noted by some critics as the only case in which the language of the fourteenth psalm is stronger than the parallel expression of the fifty-third.

6 (5.) There have they feared a fear, because God hath scattered the bones of thy besieger; thou hast put (them) to shame, because God hath rejected them. See above, on Ps. xiv. 5, 6. The design to strengthen the expression is particularly clear in this case, where two verses are compressed into one, and the other changes all enhance the emphasis. Thus instead of a general assurance of divine protection, God is in the righteous generation, we have here a description of their enemies' destruction, in the most poetical and striking terms, God hath scattered the bones of thy besieger, literally, thy encamper, him that encampeth against thee. So too instead of the complaint, that the wicked treat the faith of pious sufferers with contempt—the counsel of the sufferer ye will shame because Jehovah is his refuge—we have here the tables turned upon the scoffers by the scorn both of God and man—thou hast put to shame (the individuals included in the collective phrase thy besieger), because God has rejected them, an act implying both abhorrence and contempt. In this, which is by far the most considerable variation of the two editions, the existence of design is so apparent, that the supposition of an in-advertent or fortuitous corruption seems preposterous. So far are the two psalms from being contradictory or even inconsistent, that they might be sung together, by alternate or responsive choirs, with the happiest effect. Nothing can be more natural, therefore, than the supposition that David gave the psalm this new shape, to express the same essential feelings in a higher degree and a more emphatic form.

7 (6.) Who will give out of Zion salvations (to) Israel—in God's returning (to) the captivity of his people—let Jacob exult, let Israel joy! See above, on Ps. xiv. 7. The only variations are the change of Jehovah to Elohim, and of the singular salvation to its plural, denoting variety and fulness. See above, on Ps. xviii. 51 (50.) The exact translation is, salvations of Israel, and the meaning of the next clause, 'when God revisits, (or in God's revisiting) his captive people.'

P S A L M L I V .

1. To the Chief Musician. With (or on) stringed instruments A didactic psalm. By David. This is the title of Ps. iv, but with a change of the generic term mizmor to the specific one maschil. See above, on Ps. liii. 1. According to some modern interpreters, the plural neginoth does not denote a plurality of stringed instruments, but simply that kind of music, with its complex variety of tones. The psalm consists of a prayer for deliverance from wicked enemies, vs. 3—5 (1—3), with a confident anticpation of success and a promise of thanksgiving, vs. 6--9 (4--7.) As to the numbering of the verses, see above, on Ps. li. 1. lii 1.

2. In the coming of the Ziphites, and they said to Saul, (Is) not David hiding himself with us? The verse gives the historical occasion of the composition, in the same form as in the titles of Ps. li and lii. Such an occurrence is twice recorded in the history, 1 Sam. xxiii. 19. xxvi. 1. The verbal coincidence is greater in the first case. The words of the Ziphites seem to have been remembered on account of some peculiarity in the expression, perhaps the use of the reflexive participle (מִסְתַּפֵּר) which remains unchanged in all three places, the earliest of which is probably the one before us. The interrogation implies surprise that Saul should be ignorant of what was so notorious. Hiding himself, now engaged in doing so, not merely wont to do so, or already hidden. With us, among us, or in our land, i. e. the wilderness or pasture-ground of Ziph, (1 Sam. xxiii. 14, 15,) in or near which was a town of the same name (Josh. xv. 55, 2 Chron. xi. 8,) the ruins of which are thought to be still visible, not far from what the natives call Tell Ziph or the Hill of Ziph. (Robinson's Palestine, II. 191.)

3 (1.) Oh God, by thy name save me, and by thy might thou wilt judge me. The insensible transition from the imperative to the future shows the confidence with which the prayer is offered. By thy name, i. e. the exercise of those perfections which have been already manifested. See above, on Ps. lii. 11 (9.) That it is not a mere periphrasis for God himself, is clear from the parallel expression, might or power. Judge me, do me justice, vindicate my innocence, by saving me from spiteful enemies and false accusers. See above, on Ps. vii. 9 (8.) xxvi. 1

4 (2.) Oh God, hear my prayer, give ear to the sayings of my mouth. See above, on Ps. iv. 2 (1.) v. 2 (1 \)

5 (3.) For strangers are risen up against me, and oppressors seek my soul (or life); they have not set God before them. Selah. To the earnest petitions in the two preceding verses, he now adds a particular description of his danger. Strangers, not foreigners, but aliens in spirit, both to him and to Jehovah, with special reference to Saul. See below, on Ps. cxx. 5. Oppressors, persecutors, tyrants. The original expression implies the possession of power and its lawless exercise. See above, on Ps. xxxvii. 35. Not to set God before them is to act as if they did not remember or believe in his existence and his presence. The Selah indicates a pause of indignation and abhorrence. See above, on Ps. lii. 5 (3.)

6 (4) Behold, God (is) a helper for me; the Lord is among the upholders of my soul. From the party of his enemies he looks to that of his defenders, and joyfully recognizes God, not merely with, but in (the midst of) them, among them. The behold is expressive of surprise, and at the same time of a perspicacious faith. With the form of expression in the first clause, compare Ps. xxx. 11 (10); with the second Ps. cxviii. 7. Judg. xi. 35. The upholders of his soul are the defenders of his life against those who seek it. See above, v. 5 (3.) Adhonai, the divine name properly translated Lord, because expressive of God's sovereignty. It is peculiarly appropriate here, where he is claiming God as his protector.

7 (5.) The evil shall return to my enemies; in thy truth destroy them. The future here runs into the imperative, as the imperative does into the future, in v. 3 (1) above. The imperative in this case is only a stronger form of prediction. The evil, which they mean to do me. Return to or upon them, i. e. shall befall themselves. See above, on Ps. vii. 17 (16.) This is the sense required by the reading in the text (יִשְׁרֹב), which the modern critics commonly regard as the most ancient. The marginal or mascretic reading (רשיב) must be rendered, he will cause to return, repay, requite. Thy truth, the truth of thy promises and threatenings, thy veracity. See above, on Ps. xxx. 10 (9.) The certain foresight of the doom of the wicked, which is expressed in the first clause, makes the prayer (if such it be considered) in the first clause, a mere iteration of the previous threatening. A prayer that God will do what we are certain that he will do can be little more than an expression of that certainty. See above, on Ps. v. 11 (10.)

8 (6) With a free-will-offering will I sacrifice unto thee ; I will praise thy name, Jehovah, for it is good. In the confident assurance of a favourable answer to his prayer, he promises a suitable acknowledgment. See above, on Ps. v. 8 (7.) A free-will or voluntary offering, as opposed to one prescribed by law, not to one rendered obligatory by a vow, for then a voluntary offering would in this case be impossible. The Hebrew word is the technical term applied to such an offering in the Law. See Lev. vii. 16. xxii. 23, and compare Ex. xxv. 2. xxxv. 29, Num. xv. 3. With the last clause compare Ps. lii. 11 (9.)

9 (7.) For out of all distress he hath delivered me, and on my enemies my eye has looked. In his confident assurance of a favourable issue, he speaks of it, though future, as already past. The sudden change of person may be avoided by translating the first verb, it (i. e. thy name) has delivered me, according to the prayer in v. 3 (1.) My eye has looked or gazed, with an implication of delight, or at least of acquiescence, which is commonly conveyed by this construction. See above, on Ps. l. 23. This kind of satisfaction in the execution of God's threatenings is sinful only when combined with selfish malignity. Apart from this corrupt admixture, it is inseparable from conformity of will and coincidence of judgment with God. The same kind and degree of acquiescence which is felt by holy angels in heaven may surely be expressed by saints on earth, especially in their collective capacity as a church, in whose name the psalmist is here speaking, and not merely in his own or that of any other individual.

PSALM LV.

1. To the Chief Musician. With (or on) stringed instruments. A Didactic Psalm. By David. The psalm is designated as a Maschil, because it might at first sight seem to have relation merely to a case of personal maltreatment and distress, whereas it is a general description of the sufferings of God's people, or the righteous as a class, at the hands of false friends and malignant enemies. Although there seem to be allusions to the writer's own experience, in the times both of Saul and Absalom, the whole description can be applied exclusively to neither. The only natural division of the psalm is the one suggested by the fact, that in the first part the sufferer complains of his enemies in general, vs. 2—12 (1—11); in the second, he singles out the case of one who had seemed to be his friend, but treacherously turned against him, vs. 13—16 (12—15); in the third, he confidently anticipates his own deliverance and the destruction of his enemies, vs. 17—26 (16—25.)

2 (1.) Give ear, oh God, to my prayer, and hide not thyself from my supplication. This is the general introductory petition, which is afterwards amplified and rendered more specific. The last word strictly means a cry or prayer for mercy. See above, on Ps. vi. 10 (9.) To hide one's self is an expression used in the Law to describe the act of wilfully withholding aid from one who needs it. See Deut. xxii. 1—4, and compare Isai. lviii. 7.

3 (2.) Hearken to me and answer me; I will give loose to my thought, and I will make a noise. The first verb means to attend, especially to one speaking, to listen, to hearken. See above, on Ps. v. 3 (2.) x. 17. xvii. 1. Answer or hear, in the sense of receiving a prayer favourably. See above, on Ps. iii. 5 (4.) xxxviii. 16 (15.) The literal translation of the next words is, I will suffer to wander in my thinking, i. e. I will let my mind wander, or my thoughts rove as they will. He is resolved not only to think freely but to express his thoughts aloud. The same use of the Hebrew verb occurs in Micah ii. 12. The thinking or meditation here meant is reflection on his sufferings, to which the Hebrew verb is specially applied. With the whole verse, and with this clause in particular, compare Job vii. 11.

4 (3.) From the voice of the enemy, from before the persecution of the wicked; for they will shake over me iniquity, and in wrath will oppose me. He now declares from what his distress arises. The preposition, in Hebrew as in English, has a causal meaning, or at least suggests a relation of cause and effect. From the voice, i. e. because of it. From before or from the face conveys the same idea still more strongly, by a kind of personification of the evil dreaded. Persecution of the wicked: compare the oppression of the enemy, in Ps. xlii. 10 (9.) Shake over me, or cause to slide upon me, a striking figure for the wilful infliction of evil on another. Iniquity may here be put, as it sometimes is, for active wickedness towards others, the cause of suffering rather than suffering itself. With this clause compare Ps. xli. 9 (8.) Oppose me, be my adversaries, whether in the way of resistance or assault. The Hebrew verb is a cognate form to that from which comes Satan or the Adversary.

5 (4.) My heart writhes in the midst of me, and terrors of death have fallen upon me. The future form of the first verb implies an apprehension that the pain will continue and be permanent In the midst of me, inside of me, within me. He is not merely involved in outward troubles, but pained at heart. Terrors of death might be strictly understood as meaning fear or dread of death; but it agrees better with the strong figurative language of the first clause, to take it in the sense of deadly, mortal terrors. An analogous expression is death-shade or shadow of death. See above, on Ps. xxiii. 4. xlv. 20 (19.) The figure of falling necessarily suggests the idea of infliction by a superior power.

6 (5.) Fear and trembling enter into me, and horror hath covered me. The future in the first clause represents the action as not yet completed, and might be rendered, they are entering or about to enter. The Hebrew verb with this preposition denotes more than come upon; it describes the terror as not only on him but within him. The word translated horror is a stronger synonyme of trembling, and might be translated shuddering or a shudder. Covered me, i. e. overspread or overwhelmed me.

7 (6.) And I said, who will give me a pinion like the dove? I will fly away and be at rest. This is equivalent to saying, if I had the pinions of a dove, I would fly away, etc. Who will give is an idiomatic optative expression, tantamount to saying, oh that I had, etc. See above, on Ps. xiv. 7. The word translated pinion properly denotes the penna major or flag-feather of a bird's wing, and is here put poetically for the wings themselves. The two last verbs are in the paragogic or augmented form, expressing strong desire or settled purpose. See above, on Ps. ii. 3. The last verb usually means to dwell, but has either the primary or secondary sense of reposing, resting. See above, on Ps. xxxvii. 3. The first verb is immediately dependent on the last of the preceding verse, a grammatical relation which may be expressed thus in our idiom: 'horror hath covered me so that I say, etc.'

8 (7.) Lo, I will wander far, I will lodge in the wilderness. Selah. The lo or behold is tantamount to pointing with the finger, or to saying there! see there! The next phrase is highly idiomatic and literally means, 'I will make remote to wander.' To lodge is here to take up one's abode, to dwell, as in Ps. xxv. 13. The wilderness, not necessarily a barren desert, but an uninhabited region, the essential idea here being that of separation from human society, a strong though indirect mode of affirming its extreme corruption. The strength of the feeling which prompted this desire is indicated by a solemn pause.

9 (8.) I will hasten my escape from rushing wind, from tempest. Another construction of the first clause makes the verb intransitive and the noun a local one, as indicated by its form, I will hasten (to) my refuge. It is better, however, to give the hiphil verb its proper meaning, and nouns of the form here used denote not only the place of action but the act itself. My escape, literally, an escape for me or for myself. The preposition in the last clause, though it properly means from, is constantly employed in Hebrew to denote or indicate comparison. If thus explained in this case, it would make the clause descriptive of the speed with which he wishes to escape, more than the rushing wind and tempest. This sense is preferred by some interpreters; but the other is more obvious and simple, and is also recommended by the frequent representation of calamity under the figure of a storm or tempest, which would hardly have been joined with that of wind, if the only idea meant to be conveyed had been that of great velocity.

10 (9.) Destroy, oh Lord, divide their tongue; for I have seen violence and strife in the city. The first word properly means swallow up. See above, on Ps. xxi. 10 (9.) The object to be supplied is not their tongue but themselves. Divide their tongue, i. e. confound their speech or make it unintelligible, and as a necessary consequence confound their counsels. There is obvious reference to the confusion of tongues at Babel (Gen. xi. 7—9), as a great historical example of the way in which God is accustomed and determined to defeat the purposes of wicked men and execute his own. The word translated cruelty denotes violent injustice, or injustice accompanied by violence. See above, on Ps. vii. 17 (16.) In the city is supposed by some to mean nothing more than among men, in human society; but the words could hardly fail to suggest to any Hebrew reader the idea of the holy city, as the place directly meant, although the words themselves may be applied to any other place where the same state of things exists.

11 (10.) Day and night they will surround her on her walls; and iniquity and trouble (will be) in the midst of her. The Violence and Strife of the preceding verse are here personified as a besieging enemy. At the same time the interior is occupied by Iniquity and Trouble, no less formidable enemies. Her walls, those of the city mentioned in the foregoing verse. Iniquity and trouble are here, and often elsewhere, put together as cause and effect, the last denoting the distress or trouble, which the wickedness of one man brings upon another. See above, on Ps. vii. 15 (14.)

12 (11.) Mischiefs (are) in the midst of her, and from her street will not depart oppression and deceit. The first word in Hebrew necessarily suggests the two ideas of calamities and crimes, i. e. calamities occasioned by the crimes of others. See above, on Ps. v. 10 (9.) xxxviii. 13 (12.) lii. 4, 9 (2, 7.) The word translated street denotes a wide place and is specially applied to the square or open space surrounding the gates of oriental cities, and used both for markets and for courts of justice. See

Neh. viii. 1, 3, 16. The word therefore very nearly corresponds to the Greek agora and the Latin forum, and may be here used to suggest the idea both of legal and commercial malfeasance. Neither their markets nor their courts are ever free from these two forms of gross injustice, namely, fraud and violence.

13 (12.) For (it is) not an enemy (that) will revile me, else would I bear it; (it is) not one hating me (that) has magnified (himself) against me, else would I hide myself from him. The Hebrew word answering to else, is, in both these cases, the usual copulative particle, and the original construction seems to be, and (if it is) I will bear it, and (if it is) I will hide myself. See above, on Ps. li. 18 (16.) The act of reviling here includes both calumny and insult. The future in the first clause suggests the idea of an indignity or injury about to be endured. As if he had said, 'when I go forth among my neighbours, it is not my open enemy that will malign me.' But that such treatment had already been experienced, is intimated by the preterite of the last clause. The verb to magnify is here used reflexively or absolutely, as in Ps. xxxv. 26. xxxviii. 15 (16.) There is no need therefore of supposing an ellipsis or identifying this form of expression with the one in Ps. xli. 10 (9) Hide myself, literally be hidden; but the passive forms in Hebrew not unfrequently imply a reflex act, like the middle voice in Greek. The negation in this verse is of course not absolute but relative, and must be qualified by due regard to the circumstances of the case. That he was reproached and threatened by avowed enemies, is not only a frequent subject of complaint elsewhere, but sufficiently implied in v. 4 (3) above. The true solution of this seeming contradiction is, that he here passes from a general description of the prevalent iniquity to a particular case, in which his feelings were personally interested. In this particular case, it was not an open enemy that slandered or insulted him. It is therefore as if he had said, 'but it is not of this open and unblushing wickedness that I especially complain, but rather of the perfidy of false friends.' Thus understood, the verse, instead of contradicting v 4 (3), presupposes what is there affirmed.

14 (13.) But thou, a man mine equal, my associate, my acquaintance. It is a striking illustration of the difference between the Hebrew and English idiom, that the former uses and at the beginning of this sentence, where in English but is absolutely indispensable. The word for man is that denoting frailty and mortality. See above, on Ps. viii. 5 (4.) ix. 20, 21 (19, 20.) x. 18. But it seems to be used here without any emphasis, in simple apposition with what follows, or as a vocative, thou, oh man, mine equal. This last expression is in Hebrew, according to my valuation, the noun being a technical term of the Mosaic Law, denoting the official estimation of the priest, in certain cases of redemption or pecuniary penalty. See Lev. v. 15, 18. xxvii. 12. The whole phrase here employed is understood by some to mean one whom I value, i. e. highly, or more specifically, one whom I value as myself. More probably, however, it means one who is (or may be) estimated at the same rate with myself, which is precisely the idea conveyed by the common version, my equal, one of my own rank and circle, my associate. This last is the sense put by the modern interpreters on the next word in Hebrew. The old translation (guide) rests on a doubtful etymology, and the authority of the ancient versions. (LXX ἡγεμών. Vulg. dux.) Acquaintance seems to be a weaker expression than the others; but the Hebrew word always implies very intimate association. See above, Ps. xxxi. 12 (11), and below, Ps. lxxxviii. 9, 19 (8, 18.)

15 (14.) (With) whom we take sweet counsel; in the house of God we march with noise. The future forms can only be accounted for by supposing that he here anticipates a violation of the laws of friendship which had not yet visibly occurred. The false friend, of whom he is complaining, seems to be one with whom he was still intimate, but whose defection he clearly fore-saw. As if he had said, 'with this man I must still continue to be associated, although he is eventually to betray me.' In this particular, the case described resembles that of our Lord and Judas Iscariot, which may indeed be considered as included in the general description. The form of the first clause is idiomatic and peculiar: who (or as to whom) together we will sweeten counsel, or rather confidential intercourse. See above, on Ps. xxv. 14. The other clause may possibly mean, we march to the house of God. But the strict sense of the particle may be retained and the whole referred to solemn processions within the sacred enclosure or court of the tabernacle. With noise, i. e. with festive tumult. See above, on Ps. xlii. 5 (4.)

16 (15.) Desolations (are) upon them! They shall go down to Sheol alive! For evils are in their dwellings, in their heart. The optative form given to this sentence in most versions is entirely gratuitous. All that the Hebrew words express is a confident anticipation. The common version of the first words (let death seize upon them) is founded on the masoretic reading (מְשִׁיבָה מְרֵחָה); but the best critics now prefer the older reading in the text (רִשְׁעֵי מוֹתָה), which, instead of a verb and a singular noun, exhibits one noun in the plural number, meaning desolations, and agreeing with the substantive verb understood. Upon them, hovering or impending over them. Sheol, the grave, the state of the dead, the wide old English sense of hell. See above, on Ps. vi. 6 (5.) There is an obvious allusion to another great historical type of God's retributory judgments, the destruction of Korah and his company, who went down alive into the pit, Num. xvi. 33. The word quick, in the common English version of this sentence, is an adjective synonymous with living or alive, and not an adverb meaning soon or swiftly. Evils, i. e. evil deeds and evil thoughts. In their heart, or inside, inner part, as in Ps. v. 10 (9., xlix. 12 (11.)) This is a much better sense than in the midst of them, among them.

17 (16.) I to God will call, and Jehovah will save me. The pronoun is emphatic, I on my part. While they are brought to desolation and to death, I, on the contrary, will call to God. If the use of two divine names has any significance beyond the requisitions of the parallelism, the meaning may be, 'I will call to God, and as the covenant God of Israel he will save me.' Compare Ps. xviii. 4 (3.)

18 (17.) Evening and morning and noon I will muse and murmur—and he has heard my voice. The first clause is supposed by some to prove that the observance of three stated hours of prayer was as old as David; others suppose the observance to have been suggested by the clause itself. But the natural and obvious division of the day here mentioned may have given occasion both to the clause and the observance. Muse and murmur is a combination descriptive of prayer; both as mentally conceived and audibly expressed. Murmur is perhaps not strong enough to convey the full sense of the Hebrew verb, which elsewhere means to make a loud noise. See above, on Ps. xlii. 6, 12 (5, 11) xlii. 4, 7 (3, 6.) The assimilation or confusion of the tenses in this verse by some translators is not only arbitrary but injurious to the sense. What is mentioned in the first clause as still future is recorded in the last clause as already past. As if he had said, 'thus did I resolve to pray, and now my prayer has been already made and answered.' Such transitions are among the characteristic beauties of the Psalter, and ought not to be gratuitously sacrificed, still less at the expense of violating usage and the rules of grammar.

19 (18.) He redeemed in peace my soul from the war against me, for many were with me. In peace or with peace, as the result of this redemption. Against me, literally, to me, the war that was to me, that I had. The last clause, to an English ear, conveys the idea that his friends or champions were many but the meaning of the Hebrew is directly opposite, with me being used in such connections to denote a relation of hostility, as we speak of fighting, quarrelling, contending with one. In either case, the particle expresses really no more than joint or simultaneous action, the idea of enmity or opposition being gathered from the context. The literal translation of the last clause is, in many were (those) with me, i. e. consisting in many. The adverse party was composed of many individuals. This usage of the in is strictly appropriate only to numerals. See Deut. x. 22 xxviii. 62.

20 (19.) God will hear and answer them, and (He) inhabiting antiquity (will hear and answer those) to whom there are no changes, and (who) fear not God. As he has heard me in mercy, so will he hear them in wrath. As he has answered my prayer in the way described above, v. 19 (18), so will he answer them in the way described below, v. 24 (23.) In this case, what is heard and answered is not prayer, but the voice of the enemy, v. 4 (3), and his malignant slanders, v. 13 (12.) Inhabiting antiquity, or as the English Bible phrases it, he that abideth of old. The first Hebrew verb however could not fail to suggest its primary meaning, which is to sit, and more especially to sit enthroned, as a sovereign and a judge. See above, on Ps. ix. 5, 12 (4, 11.) The phrase may therefore be said to represent God as having been a king and a judge from the remotest antiquity. The last clause is by some supposed to mean, that the persons here referred to undergo no moral change, but still persist in their refusal to fear God; by others, that they undergo no outward changes, no vicissitudes of fortune, and for that reason will not fear him. But as the word translated changes is repeatedly employed by Job in a military sense, to signify either an alternate service, as for instance in relieving guard, or a succession in the service, as when one corps is disbanded and another takes its place, some of the best interpreters suppose this clause to mean that those enlisted in this evil warfare have no such reliefs or discharges to expect, but must continue in the unremitting service of sin, and as a necessary consequence cannot fear God. The grammatical structure of the whole verse is peculiar and can be made intelligible only by supplying the ellipses.

21 (20.) He has stretched out his hands against his allies ; he has profaned his covenant. This might seem at first sight to refer to God ; but such a reference, if not forbidden by the nature of the acts alleged, would be at variance with the subsequent context, where the subject is undoubtedly the wicked enemy. The sudden change of number is in strict accordance with the usage of the Psalmists in speaking of their enemies, or in this case may arise from the same cause as in v. 13 (12) above. See above, on Ps. x. 10. The word translated allies is the plural of one meaning peace, but seems to be poetically used here to denote those at peace with him, his friends or allies. Compare the analogous expressions in Ps. vii. 5 (4.) xli. 10 (9.) To profane a covenant is to treat it as no longer sacred, and by implication to break it. Compare Isai. xxxiii. 8. This is a varied repetition, under military figures, of the description in v. 13-15 (12-14.)

22 (21.) Smooth are the butterings of his mouth, and (yet) war (is in) his heart ; soft are his words, more than oil, and (yet even) they are drawn (swords.) To the charge of violence he adds that of treacherous hypocrisy, thus amplifying the laconic phrase, oppression and deceit, in v. 12 (11) above. The English Bible, following some older versions, assimilates the clauses by making both comparative, smoother than butter, softer than oil. But in order to sustain this construction of the first clause, it is necessary to change the pointing of one Hebrew word, and to supply another as the nominative of the plural verb, which cannot without violence agree with moult. The letter prefixed to the first noun is a part of it, and not a particle meaning than or more than, and the whole word denotes preparations of butter, cream, or rather curdled milk, which is the meaning of the primitive noun. As to the adversative use of and in both these clauses, see above, on v. 14 (13.) War (is in) his heart, or still more simply, because not requiring the insertion of the particle, war (is) his heart, i. e. his cherished wish and purpose. The word translated war is a poetical term, the same that is employed above in v. 19 (18.) In the last clause, even is supplied as well as yet, in order to convey, as far as possible, the emphasis of the Hebrew pronoun. And they themselves, i. e. the very oily words just mentioned, are drawn swords. This last expression is in Hebrew properly an adjective or participial form, but is specifically used in application to the sword, as brandished is in English, and so comes to be employed absolutely or as a substantive, expressing the entire complex idea of drawn swords, as weapons of attack, ready for use or on the point of being used forthwith.

23 (22.) Cast upon Jehovah (what) he gives thee, and he will sustain thee; he will never suffer the righteous to be moved What he gives thee to endure, what he lays upon thee, cast thou upon him, by trusting in him. The phrase he gives thee (or has given thee) may also be explained as a noun with a possessive pronoun, thy gift, not in the active sense of what thou givest, but in the passive sense of what is given to thee. Sustain does not here mean to hold up or support under the burden, but to nourish or sustain life by administering food and other necessaries, to provide for. Compare the primitive use of the Hebrew verb in Gen. xlv. 11. xlvii. 12. l. 21. The common version of the last clause above given is a correct paraphrase of the original, the form of which is highly idiomatic. A literal translation would be, he will not give forever moving (or movement) to the righteous. The verb to give is often used in Hebrew in the sense of allowing or permitting. The word translated moving is the one so often used to signify the violent disturbance of a person in the midst of his prosperity. See above, on Ps. x 6. xvi. 8, etc.

24 (23.) And thou, God, wilt bring them down to the pit of corruption; men of blood and fraud shall not live out half their days. The first verb is a causative and as such may be rendered, thou wilt cause them to descend. The word translated pit is the common term in Hebrew for a well, but is here used in a wide sense including all such excavations. The next word is (תַּחַץ) a derivative of the verb (תַּחַץ) to corrupt or destroy. The sense of pit, as if derived from the verb (תַּחַץ) to sink, would convert the phrase into a weak tautology. See above, on Ps. xvi. 10. Men of bloods and deceit, i. e. bloody (or murderous) and deceitful men, as in Ps. v. 7 (6) above. The literal translation of the last words is, they shall not halve their days, a form of expression copied in the margin of the English Bible, as well as in the Septuagint (ἡμισέσωσι) and Vulgate (dimidiabunt.) The meaning of course is, that they shall not live half so long as they might have lived, but for their bloody and deceitful acts. This is not asserted as a general fact. but uttered as a threatening to the murderers and traitors whom the Psalmist had directly in his eye.

P S A L M L V I.

AFTER the title, v 1, comes a general petition for deliverance from persecution and oppression, vs. 2, 3 (1, 2), followed by a strong expression of trust in God, vs. 4, 5 (3, 4), a description of the malice of the enemy, vs. 6, 7 (5, 6), and a confident anticipation of his punishment, vs. 8—10 (7—9), founded on faith in the divine promise, vs. 11, 12 (10, 11), and a vow or resolution to make due acknowledgment of the mercy experienced, vs. 12, 13 (11, 12.)

1. To the Chief Musician. Upon Jonath-elem-rehokim. By David. Michtam. When the Philistines took him in Gath. The last clause of this inscription seems to refer to the incident recorded in 1 Sam. ch. xxi. See above, on Ps. xxxiv. 1. An enigmatical allusion to the same event seems to be latent in the obscure phrase, Jonath-elem-rehokim, in which the first word means a dove, a favourite emblem of suffering innocence; the second means silence, dumbness, sometimes put for uncomplaining submission; and the third means distant or remote, agreeing with places or persons, probably the latter, in which sense it is applicable to the Philistines, as aliens in blood and religion. Compare Ps. xxxviii. 14 (13.) lvi. 2 (1.) lxxv. 6 (5.) lxxiv. 19. Thus understood, the whole is an enigmatical description of David as an innocent and uncomplaining sufferer among strangers. For the most probable etymology and sense of Michtam, see above, on Ps. xvi. 1.

2 (1.) Be merciful unto me, oh God, for man pants for me (or is gaping after me); all the day, he devouring (or the devourer) is pressing on me. The word for man is that denoting human frailty and implying the unreasonableness of such rage in one so impotent. See above, on Ps. ix. 20, 21 (19, 20.) x. 18. The image here presented is that of a devouring monster or voracious beast. Instead of pants or gapes, some suppose the second verb to mean snorts or snaps, as an animal expression of rage. For the meaning of the word translated devouring, see above, on Ps. xxxv. 1. Pressing on me, or pressing me. See Num xxii. 25

3 (2.) My enemies have gaped upon me all the day ; for (there are) many devourers to me, oh Most High. The word translated enemies is that supposed by some to mean spies or watchers. See above, on Ps. xxvii. 11. liv. 7 (5.) Having first spoken of his enemy in the singular number, he now substitutes the plural, to explain which seems to be the object of the last clause. ‘I say enemies, because my devourers are many.’ The last word in the verse strictly means a high place, and particularly heaven, but is sometimes applied to God himself. See below, on Ps. xcii. 9 (8.) Some interpreters, however, understand it as an abstract noun meaning loftiness or pride, and then used as an adverb in the sense of arrogantly, proudly. Compare Ps. lxxiii. 8.

4 (3.) The day I am afraid, unto thee will I confide. The complaint is followed, as in many other cases, by an expression of his confidence in God. The day I am afraid is an unusual expression, meaning simply when I am afraid, and probably belonging to the dialect of poetry. Unto thee suggests the act of turning and looking towards the quarter from which help is expected. The same form of expression occurs above, Ps. iv. 6 (3.) xxxi. 7 (6.)

5 (4.) In God I will praise his word, in God I have trusted, I will not fear ; what can flesh do unto me ? The meaning of the first clause seems to be, that in the general praise of God he will include a particular acknowledgment of his gracious word or promise upon this occasion. The construction of the last clause in the English Bible, I will not fear what flesh can do unto me, gives substantially the same sense, but does not agree so well with the masoretic interpunction of the sentence. Flesh, humanity, as opposed to deity. See below, on Ps. lxxv 3 (2), and compare Isai. xxxi. 3. xl. 6.

6 (5) All the day my words they wrest ; against me (are) all their thoughts for evil. The word translated wrest means strictly rex or pain, but is here used in the sense of twisting or distorting language by putting false constructions on it. Thoughts, purposes, designs. For evil, tending to my injury.

7 (6.) They will gather, they will hide—they, my supplinters, will watch, as they have (already) waited for my soul. They will gather or combine against me. They will hide (themselves or their devices) they will plot, or lie in wait, for my destruction. The common explanation of the next phrase, they mark my steps or my heels, does not account for the emphatic pronoun they. The Hebrew word has probably the same sense as in Ps. xlix. 6 (5) above. Waited for my soul or life, i. e. waited to destroy it.

8 (7.) By iniquity (there is) escape to them; in anger bring down nations, oh God! The first clause is obscure, but may mean either that they have hitherto escaped by their iniquity, or that they now depend, rely upon it for deliverance. The interrogative construction commonly adopted ought not to be assumed, in the absence of an interrogative particle, without a decided exegetical necessity. The Hebrew particle at the beginning sometimes indicates the means or instrument, with the additional idea of dependence or reliance, as in the English phrase to live on bread and water. See Gen. xxvii. 40.

9 (8.) My wanderings thou hast told; put thou my tears into thy bottle; are they not in thy book? The Hebrew words for wanderings and tears are both in the singular number. See above, on Ps. vi. 7 (6) xxxix. 13 (12.) The first of these words suggests the ideas of flight and exile, and may contain an allusion to the wanderings of Cain in a country designated by this very word, the Land of Nod, Gen. iv. 16, although this phrase may really mean nothing more than the land of (his) banishment or exile. The English word told is here retained because the Ho-brew one is equally ambiguous. In this case the primary idea is to count or number. See above, Ps. xxii. 17 (16.) xl. 5 (4) xlviii. 13 (12.) The act of counting implies particular attention. The idea of recollection is expressed by the strong figure which follows, put my tears into thy bottle, i. e. preserve them in thy memory. This singular metaphor is thought by some to have been suggested by the word for wandering (נָדַד or נָדַד,) which is almost identical with that for bottle (בֹּטְלָה) The latter strictly means a skin or leathern bottle, such as is still used in the East. See below, on Ps. exix. 83. The interrogation in the last clause has the force of a direct assertion. Thy book, the book of thy remembrance, another figurative expression for the memory itself. Compare Mal. iii. 16.

10 (9.) Then shall my enemies turn back, in the day I call; this I know, that God is for me. The particle of time at the beginning of the verse has reference to what follows, in the day I call, but as this was to be connected closely with the last clause, the natural order of the sentence was inverted. Turn back, be repulsed, defeated, disappointed. See above, on Ps. vii. 12 (11.) ix. 4 (3.) In the day (that) I shall call: the ellipsis of the relative is equally common in Hebrew and in English. Call may mean simply call for help or pray; but some connect it with the last clause thus: in the day that I shall call (or cry as follows) "this I know," etc. There is also an ambiguity in the phrase this I know, which may either mean, 'I know that my enemies shall thus turn back, because God is for me,' or, 'my enemies shall turn back when they hear me cry. This much I know, to wit, that God is for me.' The last phrase may be also rendered to me, he belongs to me, he is my God, which of course includes the idea of his favour or his being on the speaker's side.

11 (10.) In God I will praise (this) word; in Jehovah I will praise (this) word. This unusual form of speech must have the same sense as in v. 5 (4) above. Some understand it to mean by God's help, others, in union with God, I will praise (his) word. But on the whole, the most natural explanation still seems to be, 'what I shall particularly praise in God, both as God, and as the tutelary God of Israel and my own, is the word of promise, which he has uttered and fulfilled in this case.'

12 (11.) In God have I trusted; I will not fear; what can man do unto me? As the foregoing verse is a resumption and emphatic iteration of the first clause of v. 5 (4), so this seems to bear the same relation to the last clause of that same verse. The only variation in the form of expression is the substitution of the literal term man (or mankind) for the more obscure term flesh. See above, on v. 5 (4.) Here again it is a possible construction, although not so agreeable to the masoretic accents, to make the interrogation an oblique one. 'I will not fear what man can do unto me.'

13 (12.) Upon me, oh God, (are) thy vows; I will pay thanksgiving unto thee. The first clause represents his vows or voluntary obligations as incumbent on himself and due to God, and he resolves to discharge them by thanksgivings, not merely verbal acknowledgments, but sacrificial tokens of his gratitude, such as were familiar to the ancient saints and recognised in the Law of Moses.

14 (13.) For thou hast delivered my soul from death; (wilt thou) not (deliver) my feet from falling, to walk before God in the light of life? The ellipsis in the second clause may also be supplied as follows, hast thou not delivered, as the only terms expressed are those of interrogation and negation. The word translated falling is a very strong one and means thrusting, casting down. The verbal root occurs above, in Ps. xxxv. 5. xxxvi

13 (12.) To walk before God is to live in the enjoyment of his favour and protection. The light of life is opposed to the darkness of death. It may also be and usually is translated, in the light of the living, i. e. the light which living men enjoy. See above, on Ps. xxvii. 13.

PSALM LVIII.

IN the first part of this psalm a sufferer describes his own afflictions, occasioned by the malice of his enemies, and earnestly prays to be delivered from them, vs. 2—5 (1—4.) In the second, he anticipates a favourable answer to his prayer, and praises God for it, vs. 6—12 (5—11.)

1. To the Chief Musician. Destroy not. By David. A Secret. When he fled from before Saul in the cave. The enigmatical inscription, Al-tashketh, destroy not, reappears in the titles of the next two psalms and of the seventy-fifth. As in other cases of the same kind, some interpreters regard it as a musical expression, others as the first words of a well-known poem, to the air of which this was to be sung. The best explanation is the one suggested by the Chaldee Paraphrase, to wit, that the Psalms which bear this title belong to that period of David's history, when he was under the perpetual necessity of saying Destroy not, and are therefore suited to all similar emergencies of other saints. It is not at all impossible, that this was a favourite saying of David in real life, the rather as it is borrowed from the prayer of Moses in Deut. ix. 26, of which it may be said to be an abbreviated citation, not unlike the Latin designations, De Profundis, Miserere, Venite Exultemus, Non Nobis Domine, Te Deum, etc

The explanation above given is corroborated by the obvious allusion in these three psalms (lvii—lix) to the Sauline persecution. The very expression may be traced in 1 Sam. xxvi. 9, where David utters, as a command to his followers, what he so often had occasion to utter as a prayer in his own behalf. The psalm is described as a michtam, mystery, or secret, on account of the extraordinary consolation and support which he experienced, enabling him to triumph even in the midst of enemies and dangers. See above, on Ps. 16: 1. In the cave of Adullam (1 Sam. xxii. 1), or of Engedi (1 Sam. xvi. 1—3), or more indefinitely in the cave, equivalent to saying in caves, as a generic description of the mode of life which he then led (Heb. xi. 38), not without some reference to the subterraneous cavern, as an emblem of solitude and darkness. Hence the absence of any more specific allusion to particular incidents which occurred in caves, such as that recorded in 1 Sam. xxiv, and the obvious reference to the whole period of the Sauline persecution, as a time of wandering, danger, and distress. Hence, too, the striking similarity, in sentiment and form, between this psalm and the one before it.

2 (1.) Be merciful unto me, oh God, be merciful unto me, for in thee has my soul sought refuge, and in the shadow of thy wings will I seek refuge, until (these) calamities be overpast. The repetition of the prayer for mercy shows the intensity of his desire. Sought refuge from the persecutions mentioned in Ps. lvi. 2 (1.) The soul is mentioned as the object of pursuit. See above, on Ps. liv. 5 (4.) lvi. 7 (6), and compare 1 Sam. xxiv. 12. (11.) The shadow of thy wings: the same beautiful figure for protection is presented in Ps. xvii. 8. xxxvi. 8 (7.) Calamities, occasioned by the crimes of others. See above, on Ps. lii. 4, 9 (2, 7.)

3 (2.) I will cry unto God Most High, unto the Almighty, finishing for me, i. e. perfecting what he has begun. Compare Phil. i. 6. This verse assigns two reasons for his crying unto God. The first is the supremacy and omnipotence of God himself, the second is the previous experience of his faithfulness in fully performing whatever he has promised. See below, on Ps. cxxxviii. 8.

4 (3.) He will send from heaven and save me—(when or whom) the devourer reviles, Selah!—God will send his mercy and his truth. The first verb may govern hand, as in Ps. cxliv. 7, or help, as in Ps. xx. 3 (2), or be used absolutely, as in Ps. xviii. 17 (16.) The devourer, literally the one gaping after me, snorting with rage against me, or panting for my destruction. See above, on Ps. lvi. 2, 3 (1, 2.) Without supplying anything, this clause may be taken as a short independent proposition—the devourer has reviled—interposed between the two principal members of the sentence. See above, on Ps. xxvii. 8. xlv. 6 (5.) In the last clause, Mercy and Truth seem to be personified, like Integrity and Uprightness in Ps. xxv. 21, Violence and Strife in Ps. lv. 10 (9.) With this clause compare Ps. xliii. 3.

5 (4.) My soul (is) in the midst of lions; I will lie down (among) burning ones, sons of man, (whose) teeth (are) spears and arrows, and their tongue a sharp sword. By his soul he means himself, or rather his endangered life. Lions, as often elsewhere, means ferocious enemies. See above, on Ps. vii. 3 (2.) xxii. 13, 14 (12, 13.) The form of the verb which follows is the one denoting fixed determination. ‘Though surrounded by lions I will fearlessly lie down, etc.’ Among or upon them. Burning may possibly refer to lions and mean raging; but the indefinite application is more natural. Sons of man is added to show that what precedes is to be figuratively understood; but in the very next clause, the writer relapses into language still more highly metaphorical. In likening their teeth to swords he presents the double image of a wild beast and a warrior. The mention of the tongue has reference, no doubt, to the slander and abuse, which entered so largely into the Sauline persecutions. These had already been referred to in the middle clause of v. 4 (3), of which this may be regarded as an amplification.

6 (5) Be high above the heavens, oh God, above all the earth thy glory! Some, in the last clause, read on all the earth and then explain on the heavens to mean nothing more than in heaven. The whole verse then is the expression of a wish that God may be exalted both in heaven and earth. But this is far less natural than the usual construction, which supposes a comparison, and makes the verse exalt God above all his works. Compare Ps viii. 2 (1.)

7 (6.) A net they prepared for my steps; he pressed down my soul; they digged before me a pit; they fell into the midst of it. Selah. This verse assigns the reason or occasion of the praise ascribed to God in that before it. The image here presented is the same as in Ps. vii. 16 (15.) ix. 16 (15.) The sudden change of number is particularly common in the psalms when speaking of an ideal person, representing many real individuals. See above, on Ps. lvi. 3 (2.) The phrase pressed down is borrowed from the Prayer Book version, and is well suited to convey the idea of an animal caught and held down by a trap or snare. That version is also more correct than the English Bible in giving to the verb an active meaning; of the neuter or passive there is no example elsewhere. Before me, in my path, where I am walking. The Selah at the close is almost equivalent to an Amen, as expressing acquiescence in God's righteous retributions.

8 (7.) Fixed (is) my heart, oh God, fixed (is) my heart; I will sing and play. The repetition adds solemnity and force to the declaration. Fixed, i. e. firmly resolved and proof against all fear. See above, on Ps. li. 12 (10.) and below on Ps. cxii. 7. The two verbs in the last clause are properly descriptive of the two kinds of music, vocal and instrumental ; but in the usage of the psalms they always have reference to the praise of God

9 (8.) Awake my glory! awake lute and harp! I will awaken morning. The same idea is now expressed in the form of a poetical apostrophe. By glory most interpreters understand the soul, as the glory of the whole man, but some the tongue, as the glory of the body. See above, on Ps. vii. 6. (5.) xvi. 9. xxx. 13, and below, on Ps. cviii. 2 (1.) It is possible however that it here means that in which he gloried, his inspiration as a sacred poet, and which he personifies, as the heathen poets invoked the muse. Lute and harp is the translation in the Prayer Book. Any other combination, denoting two familiar instruments, such as harp and lyre, would be here appropriate. The verb in the last clause is a causative of that in the first, and is related to it as the English verb awaken to awake. Strictly translated, this clause contains a bold but beautiful poetical conception, that of awakening the dawn instead of being awakened by it, in other words, preventing or anticipating it by early praises. In like manner, Ovid says the crowing of the cock ecocat auroram. We thus obtain the same sense, in a far more striking form, than is expressed by the inexact and prosaic version, I will awake early. The intransitive sense given to the verb, and the adverbial sense given to the noun, are both without sufficient authority in usage. From this verse some have inferred, that the psalm was expressly designed to be an even-song ; but he does not say, I will do thus to-morrow. The meaning rather is that he will do it daily. See above, on Ps. xvii. 15. The summons to the harp and lyre may be understood as implying, that they have long slept without occasion for such praise as they are now to utter.

10 (9.) I will thank thee among the nations, Lord; I will praise thee among the peoples The divine interposition to be celebrated is so great and glorious as to be entitled to the praises of the whole world. See above, on Ps. xviii. 50 (49.)

11 (10.) For great unto the heavens (is) thy mercy, and unto the clouds thy truth. By a natural and favourite hyperbole, God's goodness is described as reaching from earth to heaven. See above, on Ps. xxxvi. 6 (5), and compare Jer. li. 9.

12 (11.) Be thou high above the heavens, oh God, above all the earth thy glory! The strophe ends as it began in v. 6 (5) above. In the last clause the verb of the first may be repeated be thy glory high; or the substantive verb alone may be supplied, let thy glory be above all the earth!

P S A L M L V I I I.

1 To the Chief Musician. Al-tashheth. By David. Mich-tam. See above, on Ps. lvii. 1. The Psalmist complains of unjust, spiteful, hardened enemies, vs. 2—6 (1—5), and prays that their power may be broken, vs. 7—12 (6—11). The contents of the psalm agree with its title in showing that it belongs to the period of Saul's persecutions, when David had to contend with unjust rulers, who were at the same time his personal enemies. But although suggested by his own experience, the psalm was designed for permanent and public use, and is therefore inscribed to the Chief Musician.

2 (1.) Are ye indeed dumb (when) ye (should) speak righteousness (and) judge equitably, sons of man? The first words are exceedingly obscure. One of them (כִּפְזִי), not expressed in the English and the ancient versions, means dumbness, as in Ps lvi. 1, and seems to be here used as a strong expression for entirely speechless. In what respect they were thus dumb, is indicated by the verb which follows, but the connection can be made clear in English only by a circumlocution. The interrogation, are ye indeed, expresses wonder, as at something scarcely credible. Can it be so? is it possible? are you really silent, you whose very office is to speak for God and against the sins of men? See Deut. i. 16, 17. That the speaking here meant is judicial speaking, appears from the more specific parallel expression. The word translated equitably is a plural noun meaning equities or rectitudes. See above, on Ps. xvii. 2. Strictly understood, it is not a qualifying term, but the object of the verb judge, as in the other clause righteousness is governed directly by the verb speak. The address to them as sons of man reminds them of their own dependence and responsibility.

3 (2.) Nay, in heart, iniquities ye practise; in the land, the violence of your hands ye weigh. The particle at the beginning is as usual emphatic, meaning, not only this but something more. See above, Ps. xviii. 49 (48.) xlv. 10 (9.) Not contented with neglecting their official functions, they were guilty of positive injustice. The Hebrew for iniquities is the plural of a word used in Ps. xxxvii. 1. xliii. 1, and denotes various acts of injustice. The future forms (ye will do, ye will weigh) implies an obstinate persistency in evil. To do or practise wickedness in heart may mean to plan or contrive it, as in Mic. ii. 1, leaving the execution to be inferred as a matter of course. Or the phrase may be translated with the heart, i. e. cordially, ex animo, con amore, or to use an idiomatic English expression, with a will. The first words of the last clause, in the land, may seem, from their position, to be in contrast with the phrase in heart; but the antithesis, if any, is between the heart and hands, and in the land suggests the aggravating circumstance, that all this was practised by persons in authority under the theocracy, among the chosen people. Violence, violent injustice. See above, on Ps lv. 10 (9.) The last verb in this sentence means to level or make even, and in that sense is repeatedly applied to paths. See Isai. xxvi. 7. Prov. iv. 26. v. 6, 21. But as the derivative noun (𐤔𐤓𐤕) means a balance (Prov. xvi. 11. Isai. xl. 12), the verb may here denote the act of weighing, levelling the balance, rendering it even, which some without necessity ascribe to it in several of the places above cited, where its constant combination with a way or path seems to exclude the idea of weighing as incongruous, and to require that of smoothing or levelling as peculiarly appropriate. This last might be retained even here and the metaphor be understood to mean that they facilitated or promoted violence (q. d. levelled or prepared its way); but the sense of weighing is equally appropriate and agrees well with the favourite idea of the scales of justice, which is found not only in the classics but in Scripture. See Job xxxi. 6. The meaning then is, that these wicked rulers, instead of weighing out justice to their subjects, weighed out, administered, dispensed, the most violent injustice, and that too devised and practised by themselves.

4 (3.) Estranged are the wicked from the womb; they go astray from (their) birth, speaking lies. The first verb in Hebrew is not a passive but a neuter form, denoting the condition of estrangement, alienation, from God and from all goodness. The wicked thus described are the whole class, of which his persecutors formed a part. The preterite tense is used in the original (were estranged, went astray) on account of the retrospective reference to the beginning of life. The verb translated go astray is one frequently applied to moral aberrations. From their birth, literally, from the belly. See above, Ps. xxii. 11 (10.) Speaking lies, or with closer adherence to the form of the original, speakers of falsehood, i. e. habitual liars. The other version seems to mean that they begin to lie as soon as they are born, a hyperbolical expression, of which some interpreters relieve the sentence by making this the subject of the proposition and parallel to wicked in the other clause. Speakers of falsehood go astray from (their) birth. In this description of the wicked there is nothing inconsistent with the doctrine of universal depravity, as recognised in Ps. xiv. 1. li. 7 (5) above, and in Gen. viii. 21. Job xiv. 4, because the holiness of some men is a mere exception to the general rule, produced by the distinguishing grace of God, which frees them from the paramount influence of that corruption to which others still continue subject.

5, 6 (4, 5.) There is poison to them like the poison of a serpent, as a deaf adder stops its ear, which will not hearken to the voice of enchanters, of (one) charming charms, (of one) most wise. The first words are equivalent to the English construction, they have poison. The Hebrew noun originally signifies heat, and especially the heat of anger, in which sense it repeatedly occurs above, Ps. vi. 2 (1.) xxxvii. 8. xxxviii. 2 (1.) The same sense is retained here by the ancient versions (θυμός, furor), and agrees well with the popular idea of vindictive spite, as a natural instinct of this class of animals. But most interpreters explain the word, here and in Deut. xxxii. 24, as meaning venom, animal poison, so called from its inflammatory effects upon the person bitten. The Hebrew phrase translated like means strictly after (or according to) the likeness of. Compare its use in Gen. i. 26. It may be here employed, instead of the simple particle of comparison, for the sake of emphasis, as we say like, but more emphatically just like. As to the species of serpent mentioned in the second clause of v. 5 (4), all that is necessary to a correct interpretation of the verse is to understand it as denoting a variety regarded as peculiarly malignant, and therefore resisting the incantations by which other species were subdued, especially in:

Egypt. See the allusions to this practice in Eccl. x. 11. ver. viii. 17. This clause admits of a different construction, like the deaf adder he stops his ear, which some interpreters prefer because an adder cannot stop its ears, and need not stop them if naturally deaf, whereas it is by stopping his that the wicked man becomes like a deaf adder. The word translated enchanters properly means whisperers or mutterers, in allusion to familiar practices of the ancient wizards. Charming charms, laying spells, or as the Hebrew words are commonly supposed to signify originally, tying knots with a magical design. The last word in v. 6 (5) is a passive participle, analogous to our word learned, and here meaning skilful. The English versions and the Vulgate make it an adverb (sapienter, never so wisely;) but the Septuagint and Jerome give it its proper meaning as an adjective, in which case it is probably in apposition with the nouns preceding, and connected in like manner with the voice of the first clause. The general idea of the verse, however construed, is that the malice of his enemies is stubborn and inexorable.

7 (6.) Oh God, crush their teeth in their mouth; the grinders of the young lions shatter, oh Jehovah! The complaint is now followed by a prayer, that these ferocious enemies may be disarmed and disabled. This idea is expressed by the use of the same figure as in Ps. iii. 8 (7), that of wild beasts rendered harmless by the breaking of their teeth. Compare Job xxix. 17. Hence in the last clause they are expressly called lions. See above, Ps. lvii. 5 (4.) Young lions, not mere whelps, from which they are distinguished in Ezek. xix. 2, 3, but full-grown lions, in the first maturity of their strength, and therefore more to be dreaded than when older or younger. See above, Ps. xvii. 12. xxxiv. 11 (10.) xxxv. 17. The Hebrew verbs in this verse are peculiarly expressive, and, though wholly unconnected with each other, are both used elsewhere to express the ideas of violently breaking, breaking down, breaking out, breaking off, and breaking through. See Ex. xv. 7. xix. 21. Lev. xiv. 45 Judg. vi. 30 1 Kings xviii. 30.

8 (7.) Let them melt away as waters, let them go their way; let him bend his arrows, as if they were cut off. The optative meaning of these futures seems to be determined by the imperatives in v. 7 (6.) There is nothing ungrammatical, however, in retaining the strict future sense, and regarding the verse as an expression of strong confidence as to the event. The first verb elsewhere has the sense of being rejected with contempt, and is so used in Ps. xv. 9; but as two of its radical letters coincide with those of a verb meaning to be melted, most interpreters prefer this sense. The other might however be retained, and the phrase explained to mean that they should be cast aside as water, and especially as filthy water, is rejected. Go their way, literally, go to them or to themselves. Some understand it to mean for themselves, i. e. for their own benefit, their destruction being represented, by a sort of irony, as all that they have gained by their hostility. Compare the use of the same phrase in Ps. lxiv. 6 (5.) lxvi. 7 (6.) In the next clause, most interpreters assume a sudden change of number, such as frequently occurs in speaking of an ideal person representing a plurality of real individuals. See above, on Ps. lvii. 4, 7 (3, 6.) He (i. e. the enemy) shall bend his arrows, literally, tread them, i. e. bend by treading on them. This expression is applicable strictly to the bow, and it is so applied repeatedly above. See Ps. vii. 13 (12.) xi. 2. xxxvii. 14. Having thus acquired the secondary sense of fitting, making ready, it is transferred from the bow to the arrows, not only here but in Ps. lxiv. 4 (3) below. If the last verb be construed with the arrows as its subject, they would seem to be described as blunted or deprived of their points, and the meaning of the clause is, that the weapons of the enemy take no effect. The whole clause, however, will admit of a different construction, which refers the singular verb and pronoun to God himself, and the plural verb to these rebellious sinners. Let him bend his arrows, as if they were cut off, i. e. so that they may be cut off. Notwithstanding the obscurity of this clause, the connection is preserved unbroken by the obvious meaning of the other.

9 (8.) As a snail melts, let him go; (like) the untimely birth of a woman, they have not beheld the sun. The idea of speedy and entire disappearance is still more strongly expressed here. The meaning of the word translated snail rests upon rabbinical tradition and a doubtful etymology. The point of comparison may relate to some popular belief or to some apparent idiosyncrasy in this class of animals, perhaps to the idea of its losing a portion of its body by locomotion. The next noun primarily signifies what falls from the tree, unripe fruit, and is then transferred to animal abortions. The past tense in the last clause seems to mark it as a kind of reflection introduced into the midst of the prayer 'So far from living too long, as I feared, they seem scarcely to have lived at all.'

10 (9.) Before your pots can feel the thorn, whether raw or done, he will blow him away. This is one of the obscurest and most difficult verses in the book, and yet the general idea is sufficiently clear. The he in the last clause relates to God, the him to his wicked enemy. The verb translated blow away means properly to storm away, or carry away with (or like) a tempest. The rapidity of this movement is expressed by a familiar comparison. Your pots, your vessels used in cooking. The address seems to be to the sinners, afterwards referred to as a single person. Feel, perceive the heat. Compare Job vi. 30. The thorn, used as fuel, kindles quickly and immediately burns out, so that this comparison suggests the idea of a very sudden change. The singular expression which follows literally means as (well) living as heat; but as the adjective is elsewhere used to signify raw.

not cooked (1 Sam. ii. 15), the noun joined with it may be taken in the opposite sense of cooked or done. This may be a proverbial expression, borrowed from the dialect of common life, to convey the idea of a sudden change, which waits for nothing, but carries men away in the midst of their employments. This, though still an unusual form of speech, will seem less unnatural if we suppose the process of cooking to be here used as a figure for the plots and devices of the enemy, a metaphor by no means far-fetched or unknown to other writers. The idea then is that while these devices, so to speak, are cooking, the cooks are snatched away by a superior power, without caring whether the operation is complete or not. 'Before the seething pot of your contrivances begins to feel the quickly kindled heat which you apply to it, the tempest of divine wrath carries you away, whether your mess be cooked or raw.'

11 (10.) Rejoice shall the righteous because he has seen vengeance ; his steps he shall bathe in the blood of the wicked. The vengeance in which he shall rejoice is not his own but God's, in the vindication of whose righteousness and honour all holy beings must rejoice forever, although not in the suffering of those who perish. The same idea is expressed more strongly in the last clause by a martial figure. To bathe his feet (or rather his steps) in the blood of others is to walk where their blood is flowing, to tread the battle-field where they have fallen, to gain a sanguinary triumph over them, or rather it is to partake in the triumph of another. Thus one of the old commentators says, that David washed his feet in Saul's blood, Elijah in Ahab's, Hezekiah in Sennacherib's, without any agency or share in their destruction, and without any selfish or malignant exultation in their ruin. Let it also be observed that in this, as in many like cases, the act is ascribed to an ideal person, and is therefore no example for our imitation.

12 (11.) And man shall say, yes, there is fruit to the righteous, yes, there is a God judging in the earth. This shall be said not by a man, nor by any particular man, but by men in general, by man as opposed to God. The particle translated yes really means only, and denotes that this and nothing else is true. See above, on Ps xxxix. 12 (11.) There is fruit to the righteous, or in our idiom, he has fruit, i. e. he reaps what he has sown. Compare Isai. iii. 10, 11. The very power that destroys his enemies is his protector. The idea of existence is expressed in the last clause contrary to usage, and is therefore emphatic. THERE IS, notwithstanding all denials, doubts, and false appearances, THERE IS a God, judging in the earth. Another unusual circumstance in this clause is that not only the divine name, but the participle agreeing with it, is in the plural number. The same thing occurs in Josh. xxiv. 19. 1 Sam. xvii. 26. In this case it may possibly be intended to suggest the idea, that although these earthly representatives of God are so unfaithful, there are nevertheless gods judging in the earth, i. e. one God who possesses in himself the source of all the justice exercised by other beings. See above, on Ps. xi. 7.

PSALM LIX.

THIS psalm consists of two parallel parts, in both which the succession of ideas is substantially the same. A sufferer complains of treacherous and cruel enemies, vs. 2—5 (1—4), prays to be delivered from them, v. 6 (5), and confidently anticipates their ruin, vs. 7—12 (6—11.) In the second part, we have again, in the same order, the complaint, v. 13 (12) the prayer, v. 14 (13) and the anticipation, vs. 15—18 (14—17.)

1. To the Chief Musician. Al-tashheth. By David. Mich-tam. When Saul sent, and they watched the house to kill him. This remarkable incident in David's life, which was the beginning of his long and painful wanderings, is recorded, almost in the same words, 1 Sam. xix. 11. The title or inscription is the same as in the two preceding psalms.

2 (1.) Free me from my enemies, my God, from those rising up (against) me thou wilt raise me, i. e. place me beyond their reach. Here, as often elsewhere, the tone of supplication is insensibly exchanged for that of confident anticipation. But the change is momentary, and the form of supplication is immediately resumed. My insurgents or assailants: see above, on Ps. xvii. 7. The idea and expression at the close are the same as in Ps. xx. 2 (1.) Compare Ps. xviii. 49 (48.)

3 (2.) Free me from workers of iniquity, and from men of blood save me. The same words and phrases have occurred repeatedly before. See above, Ps. v. 6 (5.) vi. 9 (8.) xiv. 4. xxvi. 9. xxviii. 3. This verse and the one before it constitute the general introductory petition, the ground and reason of which are afterwards assigned.

4 (3.) (This I ask) because (such enemies as I have just described) have laid wait for my soul (or life); there assemble against me strong ones, not (for) my transgression and not (for) my sin, Jehovah! Or, (it is) not my fault nor my sin, Jehovah.

5 (4.) Without iniquity (on my part, to excuse or even to provoke them) they run and set themselves (against me.) Both these are military terms and seem to denote strictly the scaling of a wall. See above, on Ps. xviii. 30 (29.) Awake (arouse thyself from this apparent inactivity) to meet me (to respond to my petition), and see (my danger and the malice of my enemies.)

6 (5.) And thou, Jehovah, God, (Lord of) Hosts, God of Israel, awake to visit all the nations; spare not all traitors of iniquity. Selah. The accumulation of divine names is not unmeaning, but suggestive of reasons why the prayer should be answered, to wit, because He to whom it was addressed was not only the Eternal, Self-existent God, the Sovereign of the Universe, but the God of Israel, and therefore bound by covenant to save his people. All the nations, i. e. such as are the enemies of God and of his people; and if whole nations are thus dealt with, how much more may Jehovah be expected to destroy his individual enemies. Traitors of iniquity, wicked traitors. The depth of the feeling here expressed is further indicated by the Selah.

7 (6.) Let them return at evening, let them howl like the dog, and go around the city. The verbs may also be rendered as simple futures, expressive of a confident anticipation: they shall return, etc. In either case, the verse contains a metaphorical description of the disappointment of the enemy, who are here compared to the gregarious untamed dogs, by which the oriental cities are infested. As these dogs prowl about the streets in search of food and howl for want of it, so let (or so shall) my wicked enemies. Others, with equal probability, explain this verse as a description of their present fierceness and avidity.

8 (7.) Lo, they pour out with their mouths; swords (are) in their lips; for who (is) hearing? He here reverts to his description and complaint of his enemies. The first verb is expressive of a constant flow or gush. See above, on Ps. xix. 3 (2.) What it is that they thus pour out, although not expressed, may be readily gathered from the context, namely, slanders and re proaches. The swords in their lips are significant of sharp and cutting speeches. See above, on Ps. lv. 22 (21), and compare Ps. lii. 4 (3.) The English version, by supplying "say they," makes the last clause the language of these wicked foes, who are then to be understood as denying God's omniscience or his justice. See above, on Ps. x. 11, 13, and compare Ps. xiv. 1. xlii. 11 (10.) But a still more striking sense may be obtained by making this clause the complaint of the Psalmist himself, as if he had said: no wonder that they thus pour out their bitter words; for who is there to observe and punish them? The question implies that God himself had ceased to notice their offences, and the participial form, that this neglect had now become habitual.

9 (8.) And thou, Jehovah, wilt laugh at them; thou wilt mock at all nations. The resistance of whole nations, or of all collectively, is but an object of contempt to thee; how much more that of even the most potent individuals. See above, on Ps. ii. 4. xxxvii. 13. The connection between this verse and the one before it depends upon the meaning of the question with which v. 8 (7) closes. If that be regarded as the language of the enemy, the thought to be supplied is, 'but although they thus imagine that thou dost not hear, thou wilt soon undeceive them by deriding them.' On the other supposition it is this: 'although I am continually tempted to say, who doth hear? I am nevertheless persuaded that thou dost hear and despise their impotent malignity.'

10 (9.) His strength unto thee will I keep, for God is my high place. The first clause is so obscure that some interpreters have thought it necessary to change the text (רַחֲמֶיךָ for הַיְהוָה) and read my strength, i. e. thou who art my strength, for thee will I watch or wait. Some who retain the common text suppose a sudden change of person, (as for) his strength, i. e. God's, I will watch for thee, oh God! But this is much less natural than the common version, (because of) his strength, i. e. the enemy's, will I wait upon thee. According to the first translation above given, the meaning of the clause is, I will reserve the strength and violence of the enemy, to be dealt with and disposed of by Jehovah. My high place, beyond the reach of enemies and dangers. See above, on Ps. ix. 10 (9.) xviii. 3 (2.) xlv. 8, 12 (7, 11.)

11 (10.) My God (with) his mercy will meet me; God will make me to gaze upon my enemies. This translation of the first clause follows the reading in the text of the Hebrew Bible. The common version exhibits the marginal or masoretic emendation, the God of my mercy, i. e. my merciful God, or the God who shows me mercy, shall prevent me, in the primary and proper sense of coming before me. The idea here is that of coming to meet one in a friendly manner. See above, on Ps. xxi. 4 (3), and compare the unfavourable meaning of the same verb in Ps. xvii. 13. xviii. 6 (5), 19 (18.) To gaze, i. e. with joy and triumph. See above, on Ps. liv. 9 (7.) This is equivalent to saying, he will give me the victory. The word for enemies is the same as in Ps. v. 9 (8.)

12 (11.) Slay them not, lest my people forget; make them wander by thy power and bring them down, our shield, oh Lord! The meaning of the first clause, as appears from the context, is, destroy them not utterly, or once for all. My people, i. e. Israel, the chosen race. Make them wander, like Cain and like Israel in the wilderness, to both which cases the same verb is applied, Gen. iv. 12. Num. xxxii. 13. These are tacitly referred to, as familiar examples of this kind of punishment, inflicted both on individuals and nations. Bring them down, cause them to descend, from their present high position, humble them, and make their humiliation an example and a warning to all others. This was signally fulfilled in the case of Saul and his household, as well as in that of the nations which resisted the divine will and oppressed the chosen people, to both which cases the expressions of this psalm are designedly appropriate. Our shield, our protector; not only mine but ours; not only David's but all Israel's. The figure of a shield is a favourite one with David. See above, on Ps. iii. 4 (3.) xviii. 3 (2.) xxviii. 7. It is not only striking and expressive, but historically associated with the origin of the nation in the calling of Abraham and the patriarchal promises. See Gen. xv. 1.

13 (12.) The sin of their mouth—the word of their lips—and they shall be taken in their pride—and from cursing and falsehood they will tell. This is a close translation of this very obscure verse, that is to say, obscure in its particular expressions, though its general sense is obvious enough. The construction given in the English versions, (for) the sin of their mouth (and) the word of their lips, they shall be taken, either overlooks the copulative particle before the verb or makes it unmeaning, they shall even be taken. The latest interpreters prefer to render it, the sin of their mouth (is) the word of their lips, i. e. the word of their lips is the sin of their mouth; whatever they speak is spoken sinfully; they cannot speak without committing sin. They shall be taken, caught, surprised, as they have sought to surprise others. See above, Ps. ix. 16 (15.) xxxv. 8. It may also be read as an expression of desire, may they be taken! In their pride, not merely on account of it, although this is included, but in the midst of it, in the act of indulging it. From cursing represents their capture as arising (or proceeding) from their cursing, and may therefore be translated for, as in the English Bible. Cursing, or rather swearing in attestation of a falsehood. See above, on Ps. x. 7. The phrase to tell a falsehood is common to both idioms. Most interpreters supply a relative, (which) they tell, or will tell. Otherwise, from must be understood as meaning of, concerning.

14 (13.) Consume in wrath, consume (them), and let them be no more, and let them know that God (is) ruling in Jacob, unto the ends of the earth. The first verb strictly means to cause to cease, to finish, to destroy so that nothing is left. Let them be no more, let them cease to be. By itself, the Hebrew phrase would seem to mean, and they are not, but the tense, which is not expressed in the original, must be determined by the prayer preceding. The last clause might at first sight seem to mean, let my enemies know that God rules not only in Israel but throughout the earth. But this is forbidden by the prayer that they may cease to be, and would require a connective particle of some sort after Jacob. The true construction, indicated by the accents, is, and let them (i. e. men in general) know, to the ends of the earth, that God (is) ruling (i. e. habitually rules) in Jacob. This description of the whole world as witnessing and interested in God's dealings with his chosen people, is in strict accordance with the very end for which he chose them, and is particularly characteristic of David. See above, on Ps. xviii. 50 (49.) lvii. 6, 10, 12 (5, 9, 11), and compare his language to Goliath, 1 Sam. xvii. 46: "this day will Jehovah deliver thee into my hand, and I will smite thee that all the earth may know, that there is a God in Israel."

15 (14.) Then let them return at evening, howl like the dog, and go around the city. The first word in Hebrew is a simple copulative, meaning and; but the connection seems to be, since God is my protector and these enemies are doomed to destruction, let them threaten as they will, I shall not fear them. It is equally grammatical, though not so natural, to understand the verse as a prediction or confident anticipation of the miserable state to which these enemies should be reduced, like a herd of oriental dogs without a master or a home, prowling about in search of food, and howling with hunger, but remaining still unsatisfied. See above, on v. 7 (6.)

16 (15.) They shall wander (in quest of something) to eat, (and) if they are not satisfied, remain all night. This sentence is obscure, whether it be understood as a defiance or a threatening, though the latter construction is recommended by the emphatic pronoun at the beginning. They themselves, the very persons who now threaten me, shall roam about in search of food, etc. The most probable meaning of the last clause is: and not being satisfied, not finding what they seek, they must continue seeking it by night as well as by day. The conversive particle before the last word seems to be here equivalent to then or still after a conditional clause—‘if they are not satisfied, then they shall remain all night’—or ‘though they be not satisfied, yet must they remain all night.’

17 (16.) And I will sing thy strength, and celebrate in the morning thy mercy; for thou hast been a high place to me, a refuge in my distress. The pronoun at the beginning is emphatic, I, on my part, as contrasted with these wretches. Thy strength or power, thus exerted in my behalf. In the morning, or at break of day, which is the primary meaning of the term. The phrase is in obvious antithesis to at evening in v. 15 (14.) There may also be allusion to the frequent use of night and morning, as emblems of suffering and relief. Compare the words of David in 2 Sam. xxiii. 4. A height, high place, or place of safety, as in v. 10 (9) above. In my distress, or retaining the original construction, in distress to me. The form of expression is the same as in Ps. xviii. 7 (6.)

18 (17.) My strength, unto thee will I sing; for God is my high place, the God of my mercy. The most natural construction of the first phrase is that which makes it a direct address to God, as the author of his strength. But as the structure of the clause is precisely similar to that at the beginning of v. 10 (9), some adopt a similar construction, my strength will I sing unto thee. I will praise my strength to thee, because shall thereby praise thyself. This is equivalent to saying, I will celebrate thee as my strength. High place, place of safety, refuge, or asylum, as in vs. 10, 17 (9, 16.) God of my mercy, my merciful God, or the God who shows me mercy. See above, on v 11 (10.)

P S A L M L X .

1. To the Chief Musician. On the Lily of Testimony. A Mystery. By David. To be Learnt. The lily is probably, in this case as in Ps. xlv. 1, an emblem of beauty or loveliness. The testimony is a name given to the Law, as God's testimony against sin. See above, on Ps. xix. 8 (7), and compare 2 Kings xi. 12, where the term is applied absolutely to the Law, considered as a book or writing. This enigmatical inscription, therefore, may be understood as representing the theme or subject of the psalm to be the beauty of the law, or something lovely in it, with reference most probably to the gracious promise cited from it. At the same time, there seems to be an allusion to the precept in Deut. xxxi. 19, "Now therefore write ye this song for you, and TEACH it the children of Israel; put it in their mouths, that this song may be a WITNESS for me against the children of Israel." To this verse there seems to be a double allusion in the one before us; first in the word testimony, which is a cognate form to that translated witness, and then in the concluding words, to teach, where the verb is the same with that in Deuteronomy. The title before us, therefore, seems to say, this song is like the song of Moses, which was to be taught to the people, as a witness or testimony against them, in case of unbelief or disobedience. To teach then means to be taught or to be learned by heart, committed to memory. Compare 2 Sam. i. 18, where the English version incorrectly supplies (use of) the bow, instead of (song of) the bow, meaning the elegy on Saul and Jonathan which immediately follows, so called, according to an ancient custom, from the mention of Jonathan's favourite weapon in v. 22. See above, on Ps. ix. 1. From this enigmatical allusion, and the disguised form under which the truth is here revealed, the psalm is justly represented as a Michtam, mystery, or secret. See above, on the titles of the four preceding psalms. The body of the psalm, apart from the additional title or historical inscription in v. 2, may be divided into three equal stanzas or strophes, each consisting of four verses. In the first, the Psalmist takes occasion from God's seeming desertion of his people, to recall his former interventions in their favour, vs. 3—6 (1—4.) In the second, he pleads an express promise, as a ground of present hope, vs. 7—10 (5—8.) In the third, he expresses his confidence of safety and success, in the proposed expedition against Edom, vs. 11—14 (9—12.) Throughout the psalm the ideal speaker is Israel, considered as the chosen people.

2. When he conquered Aram Naharaim and Aram Zobah, and Joab. returned and smote Edom in the Valley of Salt, twelve thousand men. The common version of the first verb (strove with) seems too weak, as a victory is clearly presupposed, and the idea of contention is conveyed by a cognate form of the same verb. The name Aram corresponds to Syria in its widest and vaguest sense, and is joined with other names to designate particular parts of that large country. It even includes Mesopotamia, which is a term of physical rather than political geography, and denotes the space between the Tigris and Euphrates, corresponding to Aram-Naharaim, or Syria of the Two Rivers, in the verse before us. The king of this country was tributary to the king of Aram Zobah, as appears from the account of David's second Aramean war (2 Sam. x. 16, 19.) It was after the return of the victorious army from this war, that Joab marched against Edom and achieved the victory here ascribed to him, as the leader of the army, but in 1 Chron. xviii. 12, to his brother Abishai, who probably commanded under him, as he did in a subsequent campaign (2 Sam. x. 10), and in 2 Sam. viii. 13 to David himself as the sovereign whom they both represented. The Valley of Salt has been identified by modern travellers with a valley south of the Dead Sea, on the ancient confines of Israel and Edom. See Robinson's Palestine, vol. ii. p. 483. The number killed on this occasion is stated in 2 Sam. viii. 13 and 1 Chron. xviii. 12 at eighteen thousand. But this diversity might easily arise from different modes of computation, and seems at least to show that the writer of the verse before us did not blindly copy the historical books, while the smaller number which he gives evinces his exemption from all disposition to embellish or exaggerate.

3 (1.) Oh God, thou hast cast us off; thou hast broken us; thou hast been angry; thou wilt restore to us (thy favour or our previous prosperity.) Clear as the marks of thy displeasure have been, we still confidently look for thy returning favour. This may refer to disasters experienced in the former part of the campaign. Cast us off, with abhorrence and contempt, as in Ps. xliii. 2. xlv. 10, 24 (9, 23.) Broken us, or made a breach in us, which appears to be a military figure, and a favourite with David in real life. See 2 Sam. v. 20. vi. 8, and compare Judg. xxi. 15. Job xvi. 14. xxx. 14. The last verb means to restore, as in Ps. xix. 8. (7.) xxiii. 3, but in application to a different object. Compare Isai. lviii. 12.

4 (2.) Thou hast made the earth quake, thou hast riven it, heal its breaches, for it moves. The idea of social disaster and calamity is here expressed by the figure of an earthquake and its natural effects, to which God is besought to put an end by the removal of the cause.

5 (3.) Thou hast made thy people see (what is) hard; thou hast made us drink wine of staggering (or reeling.) The meaning of the first clause is, that God had made them experience hardship. See a similar expression in Ps. lxxi. 20. Wine of staggering, wine that causes men to reel or stagger, here used as a figure for confusion, weakness, and distress. The same image reappears in Ps. lxxv. 9 (8.) Isai. li. 17, 22. Jer. xxv. 15. xlix. 12. See above, on Ps. xi. 6.

6 (4.) Thou hast given to those fearing thee a banner to be lifted because of (thy) truth. Selah. In the sight of thy discomfited and downcast people, thou hast set up a signal, as a rallying point, and an assurance of the truth of thy engagements. The word (צַיִת) translated banner means anything elevated as a signal, being derived from the following verb, which, in the form here used, means properly to raise itself, as in Zech. ix. 16. The word for truth is not the one commonly so rendered, but has the same meaning in Prov. xxii. 21, and in the Aramaic dialects. See Dan. ii. 47. iv. 34. Because of, literally, from before or from the face of, an expression indicating, as the cause of the effect described, the truth or veracity of God himself. The translation of the last clause in the ancient versions and some modern ones, to flee from before the bow, gives an unauthorized meaning both to the verb and noun.

7 (5.) In order that thy beloved ones may be delivered, save (with) thy right hand and hear (or answer) us. This is a prayer naturally prompted by the previous experience of God's favour, as recorded in the foregoing verse Thy beloved, an epithet applied to Benjamin in Deut. xxxiii. 12, and forming a part of Solomon's additional name Jedidiah, 2 Sam. xii. 25. See also Ps. xlv. 1. The common version of the last words (hear me) rests upon the marginal reading or Keri.

8 (6.) God hath spoken in his holiness; I will triumph; I will divide Shechem, and the Valley of Succoth I will measure. As a further ground for his petition, the Psalmist, speaking in the name of Israel, appeals to the promise of Jehovah, that his people should possess the entire land of Canaan. The reference is not to any insulated promise, but to that pervading the whole Law. There God had spoken, uttered his promise, in his holiness, i. e. as a Holy God, and as such incapable of failing to perform it. See the similar expressions in Ps. lxxxix. 36 (35.) Am. iv. 2. Some understand what follows as the words which God had spoken; but as v. 11 (9) is confessedly the language of the people or their representative, and as no intermediate point of transition can be well assumed, it seems better to explain these also as the words of David or of Israel. 'God hath spoken in his holiness (and therefore) I will triumph.' Because he has promised me victorious possession of the land, I exult in confident anticipation of it. This idea of triumphant occupation is expressed in terms appropriate to the times of the original conquest, when the land was measured and distributed among the tribes. See Josh. xiii. 7. xviii. 5. The two great divisions of the country, east and west of Jordan, are denoted by Shechem and Succoth, the places where Jacob pitched his tent on his return from exile, as if to claim the Land of Promise as his heritage. See Gen. xxxiii. 17, 19.

9 (7.) To me (belongs) Gilead and to me Manasseh, and Ephraim the strength of my head, Judah my lawgiver. The idea still is that the whole of Canaan rightfully belongs to Israel. The form of expression is analogous to that in the preceding verse, but with a beautiful variation. As the two great divisions of the country, east and west of Jordan, are there represented by detached points, Shechem and Succoth, so here by the names of extensive districts, Judah and Ephraim, the two largest territories on the west, Bashan and Gilead on the east, the latter called by its own name, the former by that of the tribe which occupied the greater part of it. See Deut. iii. 12, 13. The last clause does due honour to the military strength of Ephraim (Gen. xlviii. 19. Deut. xxxiii. 17), but asserts the civil supremacy of Judah (Gen. xlix. 10.) The phrase translated strength of my head might seem to mean my chief strength; but that would require the terms to be inverted, head of my strength. Compare Gen. xlix. 3. It rather means the protection of my head, as strength of my life in Ps. xxvii. 1 means that which protects my life, the head being mentioned as the vital part peculiarly exposed. Compare Ps. lxxviii. 22 (21.) ex. 6. Some suppose the figure to be that of a helmet, which is too specific. In the last clause there is obvious allusion to the prophecy in Gen. xlix. 10. Lawgiver has its proper sense of ruler, sovereign. That of rod or sceptre, which some give it, rests upon a doubtful explanation of Numb. xxi. 18.

10 (8.) Moab (is) my wash-pot; at Edom will I throw my shoe; at me, Philistia, shout aloud! The three hostile powers, with which Israel was most frequently at war, are here put together, as the objects of a contemptuous address. Moab is likened to the humblest household utensil, the vessel in which slaves were wont to wash their master's feet. Edom is likened to the slave himself, to whom or at whom the master throws his shoe when about to bathe his feet. Compare Matth. iii. 11. Acts xiii. 25. This is much better suited to the context than the allusion, which some assume, to the practice mentioned in Ruth iv. 7, where the removal of the shoe is a symbol of renunciation, and could not be here used to express the opposite idea of seizure or triumphant occupation. Shout aloud, or make a noise, is by some explained as an expression of triumph, and the whole clause treated as ironical. Others understand it of the acclamation or shout of welcome and applause by which subjects recognise and hail their sovereign. See above, on Ps. ii. 11, where the exhortation to rejoice with trembling is, by the same interpreters, explained in the same manner. In either case, the clause implies superiority in him who speaks, and willing or compulsory subjection on the part of those whom he addresses.

11 (9.) Who will bring me (to) the fenced city? Who has led me up to Edom? In reliance on God's promise, and in the possession of the hope and courage just expressed, his people are ready to go forward, and only waiting, as it were, for some one to conduct them into the enemy's country, nay, into his very citadel. The fenced city, literally, city of defence or fortification, a phrase already used in Ps. xxxi. 22 (21,) is Petra, the famous capital of Idumæa, hewn in the rock, and almost perfectly impregnable. See Robinson's Palestine, vol. II. pp. 573—580. The past tense in the last clause represents the question as already answered. Up to, even to, as far as, implying not mere motion or direction, but actual arrival.

12 (10.) (Is it) not thou, oh God, (who) hast cast us off and wilt not go forth with our hosts? A simpler construction of the first clause would be, hast thou not cast us off? But it seems better to explain the verse as an indirect answer to the question in the one preceding. Who has brought us into Edom, if not He who had rejected us? The terms are borrowed from Ps. xlv. 10 (9), which seems to have been written in the midst of the distress here spoken of as past. 'Wilt not thou, of whom we lately were compelled to say, thou hast forsaken us and wilt not go forth with our hosts?' Compare 2 Sam. v. 24.

13 (11.) Give us help from trouble (or from the enemy); and

(the rather because) vain (is) the salvation of man, i. e. the deliverance which man affords. The causal particle, for, because, which seems necessary to connect the clauses, is implied but not expressed in Hebrew. The second noun (רַצָּע) may either mean distress, as in Ps. iv. 2 (1.) xviii. 7 (6), or one who gives distress, a persecuting or oppressing enemy, as in Ps. iii. 2 (1.) xiii. 5 (4.) xxvii. 2, 12. xlv. 6, 8, 11 (5, 7, 10.) Either sense would be appropriate, but the latter is strongly recommended by its occurrence in the next verse.

14 (12.) In God we will make (i. e. gain or gather) strength, and he will tread down (or trample on) our adversaries (persecutors or oppressors.) The prayer is followed by the confident anticipation of the answer. In God, i. e. in union with him, in possession of him. See above, on Ps. xviii. 30 (29.) The common version of the next phrase (shall do valiantly) is vague and dubious, being inadmissible in several of the cases where the phrase occurs, whereas they all admit of the translation make or gather strength, in reference to the acquisition or recovery of force by those who had before been in a state of weakness. See below, on Ps. cviii. 14 (13.) cxviii. 15, 16, and compare Ezek. xxviii. 4. Ruth iv. 11. Deut. viii. 17, 18. Num. xxiv. 18, to the last of which places there is obvious allusion here, as relating to the very same enemies. Treading or trampling, as an emblem of violent subjection, occurs above in a contemporaneous passage, Ps. xlv. 6 (5.) The last eight verses reappear as a part of Ps. cviii, in the exposition of which the points of difference and the general relation of the passages will be considered.

P S A L M L X I .

1. To the Chief Musician—on a stringed instrument (or with an instrumental accompaniment)—of David. The peculiar form of the original construction (הַגִּיטָה לְדָוִד) cannot be reproduced in English, but seems to connect the name of David both with the Hebrew word preceding, as the owner or conductor of the music, and with the psalm itself as the author. That is to say, the words are so combined as to convey both these ideas—a stringed instrument of David—and a psalm of David. The musical term (neginath) is the same as in the titles of Ps. iv, vi, liv, lv, but in the singular number and the construct form. The psalm itself consists of a prayer with an expression of strong confidence, vs. 2—5 (1—4), and an appeal to the divine promise, as the ground and object of that confidence, vs. 6—9 (5—8.)

2 (1.) Hear, oh God, my cry; attend unto my prayer! The psalm opens with an introductory petition to be heard. See above, on Ps. v 2, 3 (1, 2.) xvii. 1. lv. 2 (1), and compare Ps xxxix. 12 (13.) The word translated cry, which sometimes means a joyful shout or thankful song—Ps. xxx. 6 (5.) xlii. 5 (4.) xlvii 2 (1)—is here determined by the parallelism and the context to denote a cry for help or mercy.

3 (2.) From the end of the earth unto thee will I call, in the covering of my heart (when it is covered, i. e. overwhelmed, or covered with darkness.) To a rock (that) is high from me, (i. e. higher than I, or too high for me) thou wilt lead me. To the saints of the Old Testament exclusion or involuntary distance from the sanctuary seemed equivalent to exile in the remotest countries, sometimes called the end of the earth (Deut. xxviii. 64), sometimes the end of heaven (Deut. iv. 32), although this last phrase may be understood to mean the sensible horizon or boundary of vision (Isai. xiii. 5.) A rock, often mentioned as a place of refuge. See above, on Ps. xviii. 3 (2.) xl. 3 (2.) Too high for me to reach without assistance. In the last clause an earnest prayer is latent under the form of a confident anticipation. The feelings here expressed, and the terms used to express them, are peculiarly appropriate to David's situation during Absalom's rebellion. See above, on Ps. iii. 1. xlii. 1.

4 (3.) For thou hast been a refuge to me, a tower of strength (or strong tower) from before (from the face or presence of) the enemy. He appeals to former mercies as a ground for his present expectation. The verb of existence is here emphatic and cannot, without a violation of usage, be translated as a present, which is almost invariably suppressed in Hebrew. The enemy is a collective term, or one denoting an ideal person, including many real individuals.

5 (4.) I will sojourn (or abide) in thy tent (or tabernacle) ages (or eternities, i. e. forever); I will trust (take refuge or find shelter) in the shadow of thy wings. The first verb is in the paragogic form, expressing strong desire or fixed determination. See above, on Ps. ii. 3. To dwell in God's tent or house is to be a member of his family, to enjoy his bounty and protection and to live in intimate communion with him. See above, on Ps. xv. 1. xxiii. 6. xxvii. 4, 5. David here tacitly appeals to the promise recorded in 2 Sam. ch. vii. See above, on Ps. xxi. 5 (4.)

The beautiful figure for protection in the last clause is the same as in Ps. xvii. 8. xxxvi. 8 (7.)

6 (5.) For thou, oh God, hast heard (or hearkened to) my vows (and the prayers which they accompanied); thou hast given me the heritage of those fearing (or the fearers of) thy name, i. e. the reverential worshippers of thy revealed perfections. See above, on Ps. liv. 3 (1.) The heritage here mentioned is participation in the honours and privileges of the chosen people, with particular though tacit reference to the vicarious royalty conferred on David, and ensured to his posterity in answer to his prayers. See above, on Ps. xxi. 3—5 (2—4), and compare 2 Sam. vii. 16.

7 (6.) Days to the days of the king thou wilt add; his years (shall be, or, thou wilt multiply) like generation and generation. The preposition in the first clause strictly means upon, and suggests the idea not of mere addition but accumulation, which would also be conveyed in English by the literal translation, days upon days. His use of the third person shows that he does not mean himself alone, but the king of Israel as an ideal or collective person, comprehending his posterity. The life of this ideal person would of course not be restricted to a single generation but continued through many, which is the meaning of the idiomatic expression in the last clause.

8 (7.) He shall sit (enthroned) to eternity before God; mercy and truth do thou provide; let them preserve him (or they shall preserve him.) The first verb suggests the two ideas of continuance or permanence and regal exaltation. See above, on Ps. lv. 20 (19), and compare 2 Sam. vii. 29. Before God, in his presence and under his protection. See above, on Ps. lvi. 14 (13.) Provide, prepare, afford, or have in readiness. Mercy and Truth are personified, as in Ps. xl. 12 (11.) lvii. 4 (3.) Compare Ps xliii. 3. They seem to be here represented as God's messengers or agents in preserving his Anointed.

9 (8.) So will I celebrate thy name forever, that I may pay my vows day (by) day. The so at the beginning may mean, on this condition, when this prayer is granted; or more probably, in this assurance, in the confident expectation of this issue. Celebrate musically, both with instrument and voice. See above, on Ps. lvii. 8 (7), and compare Ps. lix. 18 (17.) That I may pay, literally, to (or for) my paying, or, as some explain it, by my paying, which however is a rare and dubious use of the infinitive. Day (by) day or day (and) day, i. e. one day with or after another, implying not only frequency but regularity. The Vulgate version of this idiomatic phrase is de die in diem.

PSALM LXII.

1. To the Chief Musician over Jeduthun. A psalm by David. Jeduthun seems here to mean the family or choir so called from the Chief Musician of that name. See above, on Ps. xxxix. 1. The psalm consists of three equal stanzas or strophes, each beginning with the particle (אָן) only, and the first and second ending with selah. In all these parts, the theme or burden is the same, to wit, a contrast between God and man, as objects of confidence.

2 (1.) Only to God (is) my soul silent; from him (is) my salvation. The frequent repetition of the first word (אָן) is characteristic of the psalm before us. In all these cases it is to be taken in its strict exclusive sense of only. See above, on Ps. lviii. 12 (11.) Only in looking towards God as my Saviour, is my soul silent, literally, silence. See above, on Ps. xxii. 3 (2.) xxxix. 3 (2.) This trust, and this alone, can set his mind at rest, and free him from the natural disquietude of man when alienated from his God.

3 (2.) Only He (is) my rock and my salvation, my height (high place, refuge, or asylum); I shall not be shaken (moved from my firm position) much (or greatly) The adverbial use of much is the same in Hebrew and in English. This qualified expression seems to be intended to suggest, that he does not hope to escape all disaster and calamity, but only such as would be ruinous. See above, on Ps. xxxvii. 24. As to the figures in the first clause, see above, on Ps. ix. 10 (9.) xviii. 3 (2.) He only, God and no one else, can be such a protector.

4 (3.) Until when (how long) will ye break loose upon (or against) a man, will ye murder (i. e. seek to murder him) all of you (combined against a single person, who is consequently) like a wall inclined (or bent by violence), a fence (or hedge) crushed (broken down?) That the last clause relates to himself and not his enemies, is clear from the continuation of the same description in the next verse.

5 (4.) Only from his elevation they consult to thrust (him, and as a means to this end) they delight in falsehood; with his mouth, (i. e. with their mouths) they will bless, and in their inside (inwardly, or with their heart) they will curse. Selah. The sudden change of number in the middle of the verse, and indeed the whole description, are like those in Ps. v. 10 (9.)

6 (5.) Only to God be still my soul, for from him (is) my hope. The view just taken of his fellow men drives him back to God.

and he exhorts himself to cherish the same confidence which he had before expressed. Be still, silent, trusting, and submissive. See above, on v. 2 (1), and compare Ps. xxxvii. 7. The meaning of the last clause is, from him proceeds whatever I desire or hope for.

7 (6.) Only He is my rock (the foundation of my hope) and my salvation (i. e. its source and author)—my high place (refuge or asylum)—I shall not be moved (or shaken.) This more absolute expression, as compared with v. 3 (2), seems to indicate a stronger faith, derived from the previous comparison of God and man as objects of trust and affection.

8 (7.) Upon God (i. e. dependent, founded on him) is my salvation, and my honour (both official and personal); the rock of my strength (my strong rock, or the basis upon which my own strength rests); my hiding place (my refuge) is in God. It is in his presence, favour and protection, that I hide myself from all my enemies and all my dangers. See above, on Ps. vii. 11 (10.) lxi. 4 (3.)

9 (8.) Trust in him at every time, oh people, pour out before him your heart; God (is) a refuge for us. Selah. The faith which he cherishes himself he recommends to others also. At every time, not merely in prosperity, but even in the sorest trials and the worst extremities. People, not merely men or persons, but people of God, his chosen people. To pour out the heart is a natural and lively figure for a full disclosure of the thoughts and feelings. See above, on Ps. xlii. 5 (4), and below, on Ps. cxlii. 3 (2), and compare 1 Sam. i. 15. Lam. ii. 19. The last clause gives the reason of the exhortation, and indicates its earnestness by a solemn pause.

10 (9.) Only vanity (are) sons of Adam, a falsehood sons of Man ; in the scales (they are sure) to go up ; they are of vanity (or less than vanity) together. As to the supposed antithesis between men of high and low degree in the first clause, see above, on Ps. iv. 3 (2.) xlix. 3 (2.) Only vanity, see above, on Ps. xxxix. 6 (5.) A falsehood, something that deceives expectation, a false confidence. See above, on Ps. iv. 3 (2.) Of vanity, composed of it, containing nothing else ; or giving the particle its frequent comparative sense, (less) than vanity, or (vainer) than vanity (itself.) The same doubt exists as to the meaning of the similar expressions in Isai. xl. 17. xli. 24.

11 (10.) Trust not in oppression, and in robbery become not vain ; (on) wealth, when it grows, set not (your) heart. The first two nouns are used together in Lev. v. 23 (vi. 4) to signify that which is acquired by violence. They are not therefore to be taken as distinct grounds of confidence, but as different parts or different descriptions of the same. Become not vain, by being assimilated to the vain, unsatisfying objects of your love and hope. See 2 Kings xvii. 15, and compare Jer. ii. 5. Job xxvii. 12. The word translated wealth means strictly strength or power, but is applied to pecuniary as well as military force. See above, on Ps. xlix. 7 (6.) Grows, literally sprouts, or springs up of its own accord, perhaps with an antithetical allusion to wealth gained by violence. Even when lawfully or accidentally acquired, set not your heart upon it. This phrase in Hebrew sometimes means nothing more than to apply the mind or give attention, and so some understand it here, ‘when wealth increases, take no notice, think not of it’ ; but the stronger sense of fixing the affections on it, loving it, and trusting it, is better in itself and better suited to the context.

12, 13 (11, 12.) One (thing) hath God spoken, these two (things) have I heard, that strength (belongeth) unto God, and (that) unto thee, oh Lord (belongeth) mercy, (but) that thou wilt render to a man according to his deed (or doing.) There are really three attributes of God here mentioned, his power, his mercy, and his justice; but as the last is only introduced to qualify the second, by a kind of afterthought, they may still be reckoned as but two. The construction given in the English and many other versions separates the sentences, and makes the first refer to a repeated utterance or revelation of the one truth there propounded, namely, that power belongeth unto God. Instead of one thing, two things, we must then read once and twice. But this, though favoured by the imitation of the verse before us in Job xxxiii. 14. xl. 5, is not the most obvious construction here. It is evident that one and two, when absolutely or elliptically used, may sometimes mean one time, (i. e. once) and two times, (i. e. twice); but it does not follow that the same words, in a different connection, may not mean one word or thing, two words or things. It is also a familiar practice of the sacred writers to borrow one another's words, or to repeat their own, with some slight change of sense or application. The pronoun (אָנֹכִי) in v. 12 (11) may be either a demonstrative or relative, and on the latter supposition we may read, (there are) two (things) which I have heard; but the other is a simpler and more obvious construction. The apostrophe or sudden change of person in v. 13 (12) is a figure of speech common in the psalms of David, and indicates a growing warmth of feeling, so that He who had just been calmly spoken of as absent, is abruptly addressed as if seen to be personally present.

P S A L M L X I I I .

1. A Psalm by David, in his being (when he was) in the wilderness of Judah This is the wilderness along the eastern frontier of the tribe of Judah. It is frequently mentioned in the history of Absalom's rebellion and of David's flight before him. See 2 Sam. xv. 23, 28. xvi. 2, 14. xvii. 16. In that history we also meet with several of the very same expressions that are here used, which, together with the strong internal similarity of this psalm to some others having reference to Absalom's rebellion, such as Ps. iii, iv, xlii, lxi, suffice to show that it belongs to the same period, and not to that of Saul's persecution, which is indeed forbidden by the mention of the king in v. 12 (11.) The psalm consists of two parts, each exhibiting essentially the same succession of ideas, but with the variation usual in all such cases. Both begin with the expression of intense desire for God's presence and communion with him, and end with a confident anticipation of his mercy; but in the first, vs. 2—9 (1—8), this is supposed to be displayed in the deliverance of the Psalmist from his sufferings; in the second, vs. 7—12 (6—11), it is viewed as securing the destruction of his enemies.

2 (1.) O God, my God (art) thou; I will seek thee early; for thee thirsts my soul; for thee longs my flesh, in a dry land, weary, without water. The second divine name is the one denoting power, and might be translated here, my Mighty (One) The very use of it involves a direct appeal to God's omnipotence. The verb in the first clause is connected in its etymology with a noun meaning the dawn of day, which occurs above, Ps. lvii. 9 (S.) The modern lexicographers exclude the sense of early, and suppose the verb to mean nothing more than seek in English, or at most to seek with eagerness. But that the notion of time is really included, seems to follow from the antithesis in Isai. xxvi. 9. The act of seeking a thing early implies impatience or importunate desire. The soul and the flesh together mean the whole man. See above, on Ps. xvi. 9. There is evident allusion to the actual privations experienced by David in the wilderness of Judah. See the places cited in the note upon v. 1, to which add 2 Sam. xvii. 2. The Hebrew word for weariness is there applied to David himself, which requires or allows the same application in the case before us, especially as the form of the adjective is masculine, and land is feminine. The strict grammatical concord is perhaps with flesh, which is a masculine in Hebrew.

3 (2.) To see thy power and thy glory, so (as) I have beheld thee in the sanctuary. The first clause states the object of the strong desire expressed in the preceding verse. To make this connection clear, the clauses are transposed in the common version, which is here retained, as being, on the whole, the best among the many which have been proposed. One of the latest makes the verse an acknowledgment, that he had actually found a sanctuary in the desert, because it is always to be found where God is pleased to manifest his presence. But however sound and scriptural this sentiment may be, it can hardly be extracted from the verse before us without violence.

4 (3.) Because thy favour is better than life, my lips shall praise thee A simpler construction, and perhaps more agreeable to Hebrew usage, is that which makes the first clause give a reason for the strong desire expressed in the foregoing verses, for thy favour is better than life, and the last clause merely add a pledge of thankful acknowledgment, my lips shall praise thee. Better than life, not merely than the life I now live, which was scarcely entitled to be so considered, but better than any life I could live, destitute of God's favour, which is therefore more than a sufficient substitute or compensation.

5 (4.) So will I bless thee in my life, in thy name will I raise my hands. So, that is, according to the gift bestowed. Bless, i. e. praise and thank thee. See above, on Ps xvi. 7. xxxiv. 2 (1.) In my life may either mean as long as I live, which is the obvious and usual interpretation, or when restored to life, from this state of living death, which is the sense preferred by some of the best interpreters, on account of the supposed allusion to better than life in the preceding verse; but it is far from being the most natural construction. In thy name, invoking thee as the object of my worship, and particularly of my thankful praise. Lift up my hands in prayer, and more specifically here, in thanksgiving. See above, on Ps. xxviii. 3 (2.)

6 (5.) As (with) marrow and fatness shall my soul be satisfied, and (with) lips of rejoicing shall my mouth praise (thee). He continues the expression of his joyful confidence and hope. Marrow and fatness are used to represent two Hebrew words both meaning animal fat, here put for rich food, and that for abundant supplies of every kind. Lips of rejoicings may denote either joyful lips, or lips by which rejoicings are uttered. The unconditional engagement to praise God implies, as usual, a firm belief that he will have occasion so to do. See above, on Ps. v. 8 (7.)

7 (6.) When I remember thee upon my bed, in the watches I will meditate upon thee. The first word in Hebrew is the one commonly translated if; but the condition indicated by it is sometimes specifically that of time. There seems to be reference in this verse to the old division of the night, for nautical and military purposes, into three watches, the first (Lam. ii. 19) the middle (Judg. vii. 19), and the morning watch (Ex. xiv. 24. 1 Sam. xi. 11.) See below, on Ps. xc. 4. I will meditate of thee, or more literally, in thee, implying an entire absorption of his powers and affections in the object. See above, on Ps. i. 2.

8 (7.) For thou hast been a help to me, and in the shadow of thy wings will I rejoice. The protection which he has experienced already he is sure of still enjoying in the time to come. The translation of the first verb as a present (thou art my help) not only weakens the antithesis but violates a constant usage. See above, on Ps. lix. 17 (16.) lxi. 4 (3.) The image presented in the last clause is the same as that in Ps. xvii. 8. xxxvi. 8 (7.) lvii. 2 (1.) lxi. 5 (4.)

9 (8.) My soul cleaves after thee, thy right hand holds me. This is a strong metaphorical description of the mutual relation between God and the believer; a relation of trustful dependence on the one hand, and of constant favour and protection on the other. Cleaves after is a frequent phrase for follows cleaving to thee. The right hand is the constant symbol of strength. See above, on Ps. xviii. 36 (35.) xlv. 4 (3.) lx. 6 (5.)

10 (9.) And they to (their) ruin are seeking my soul; they shall go into the depths of the earth. The phrase to ruin has precisely the same sense as in Ps. xxxv. 8, namely, to their own destruction. Are seeking, will seek; the idea suggested by the future is, that if they still persist in seeking it, they will do so to their own destruction. Some obtain the same sense by a different construction, they (shall come) to ruin (who) are seek- ing my soul; but this supposes two ellipses, which are not to be assumed without necessity. Still less satisfactory is the construction which regards the whole verse as a single proposition: they (who) seek my soul to ruin (or destroy it) shall go, etc. To seek the soul implies a purpose of destruction, without any qualifying adjunct, even in prose. See 2 Sam. xvi. 11. The depths of the earth, literally, its lower or lowest parts, which may simply mean the grave (as we say under ground), or contain an allusion to the fate of Korah and his company (Num. xvi. 31—34.) See above, on Ps. lv. 16 (15.)

11 (10.) They shall be abandoned to the power of the sword, the prey of jackals shall they be. The literal translation of the first clause is, they shall pour him out upon the hands of the sword, where the use of the plural verb in an indefinite or passive sense, and the sudden alternation of the singular and plural form in speaking of the enemy, together with the bold and idiomatic figures of a sword with hands and men poured on them, present such a concurrence of apparent solecisms as can be made intelligible only by a paraphrase. The word translated prey means properly a share or portion; it occurs above, Ps. xi. 6. xvi. 5. The other noun in this clause is the common Hebrew word for foxes, but is used with so much latitude as to include the jackal, which sense must be here preferred, as the fox does not prey upon dead men, unless the clause be understood to mean nothing more than that they shall be left lying in the desert, where these creatures have their home, which is a good sense, but much weaker than the one just put upon the words.

12 (11.) And the king shall rejoice in God; (in him) shall every one boast (or glory) that swears by him, because the mouth of those speaking falsehood shall be shut (or stopped.) Instead of the personal pronoun he inserts his official title, the king, i. e.

I as king. Rejoice in God, i. e. in union with him and in the experience of his favour. Boast or praise himself, i. e. felicitate himself on the possession of these glorious distinctions and advantages. Swearing by him, i. e. as some suppose, by the king here mentioned, according to the old Egyptian custom (Gen. xlii. 15, 16), of which we find some traces even in Israel (1 Sam. xvii. 55. xxv. 26. 2 Sam. xi. 11.) If this were the true grammatical construction we might perhaps explain the phrase to mean swearing to him, i. e. swearing fealty or allegiance, doing homage to him as a rightful sovereign. But there is in fact no sufficient reason for departing from the obvious construction which refers the pronoun to the nearest antecedent, God. The last clause assigns the immediate occasion of the joy and triumph here predicted, namely the defeat of false and treacherous insurgents. See above, on Ps. lxii. 5 (4), and compare 2 Sam. xviii. 7, 8.

PSALM LXIV.

1. To the Chief Musician. A Psalm by David. The correctness of this title is abundantly established by the marked internal similarity between this and other psalms of David. Its very structure is Davidic, exhibiting the two familiar elements of a prayer for deliverance from wicked enemies, vs. 2—6 (1—5), and a confident anticipation of a favourable answer, vs. 7—11 (6—10.)

2 (1) Hear, oh God, my voice in my complaint; from fear of the enemy thou wilt preserve my life. Here, as in Ps. liv. 3 (1) the expression of confidence insinuates itself into the prayer itself. Complaint, literally, musing, meditation, but with special reference to suffering and danger. See above, on Ps. lv. 3 (2.) Fear of the enemy, that which I have reason to fear from him.

3 (2.) Thou wilt hide me from the secret of evil doers, from the tumult of the workers of iniquity. By secret we are here to understand their confidential consultations and the devices there matured. See above, on Ps. xxv. 14. The participle doing evil, used as a noun (evil doers) to describe the whole class of wicked men, is a favourite expression of David's. See above, Ps. xxii. 17 (16.) xxvi. 5. xxvii. 2. xxxvii. 1, 9. As secrecy belongs to the formation of the plot, so does noise or tumult to its execution. The same figures are combined, but in a very different application, Ps. lv. 15 (14.)

4 (3.) Who have sharpened, like the sword, their tongue, have strung their arrow, bitter speech. The figure in the first clause is a favourite with David. See above, on Ps. lii. 4 (2.) lvii. 5 (4.) lix. 8 (7.) Strung their arrow, literally trod (i. e. bent) it, which must either be explained as an ellipsis—bent their (bow to shoot their) arrow—or as a poetical transfer to the arrow of what is strictly applicable only to the bow. See above, on Ps. lviii. 8 (7.) The figure of an arrow is peculiarly appropriate to the poignant pain produced by insult and calumny, which is also well expressed by the epithet bitter. Compare Deut. xxxii. 24. 1 Sam. xv. 32.

5 (4.) To shoot in secret places (at) the perfect; suddenly they will shoot him, and will not fear. With the first clause compare Ps. x. 8. xi. 2. The perfect, the sincere and upright servant of God, who is free from all fatal and essential defect of character. See above, on Ps. xv. 2. xviii. 24. (23.) vii. 9 (8.) xxv. 21. xxvi. 1, 11. xxxvii. 37, in the last of which places the Hebrew adject-tive has the same form as in the case before us. And will not fear, i. e. without being deterred by the fear of God or man. See above, on Ps. lv. 20 (19.)

6 (5.) They will strengthen for themselves an evil word; they will tell about hiding snares; they have said, who will see to them? To strengthen is to make strong, to construct so as to be strong. An evil word is an idiomatic phrase for a malignant plot, so called because it is the fruit of mutual discourse and consultation. See above, on Ps. xli. 9 (8.) Tell about, count and recount their various devices, past and present. See above, on Ps. lix. 13 (12.) The interrogation in the last clause is an indirect one, the equivalent direct form would be, who will see to us, i. e. regard us? Compare Ps. x. 11. lix. 8 (7.)

7 (6.) They search out iniquities; (they say) We are ready—a consummate plan! and the inward thought and heart of (every) man (is) deep. They rack their invention and ransack their memory for modes of doing mischief. We are ready, literally finished, just as we might say in English, we are done. The next phrase consists of a passive participle, derived from the verb at the beginning of the sentence, and a cognate noun. The participle here corresponds to exquisite, recherché, something not to be had without laborious search, and the noun describes the product of the search itself. The last clause is added to enhance the danger, by representing the device as springing not from shallow, superficial, but profound contrivance. Inward thought, literally inside, an equivalent to heart often used by David. See above, on Ps. v. 10 (9.) xlix. 12 (11.) lv. 16 (15.) lxii. 5 (4.)

8 (7.) But God has shot them—with an arrow—suddenly—the wounds are theirs. By an abrupt but beautiful transition he describes the tables as completely turned upon the enemy. The antithesis is rendered very striking by the repetition of the verb, noun, and adverb used in vs. 4, 5 (3, 4.) Just as they are about to shoot an arrow suddenly at the righteous, God shoots an arrow suddenly at them. The wounds which they intended to inflict on others have become (פָּרַף) their own. When they thought to strike others, they were struck themselves. The general idea is the same as in Ps. vii. 12—17 (11—16.) liii. 6 (5.) lvii. 7 (6.) The adversative particle at the beginning is substituted for the simple copulative of the Hebrew, to make the transition or antithesis more obvious in English. See above, on Ps. lii. 10 (8.) lv. 14 (13.)

9 (8.) And he has cast them down; upon them (comes) their own tongue; all shall flee gazing at them. Cast down, literally, made to fall or stumble. See the use of the same verb in historical prose, 2 Chron. 25. 8, and compare the original of 2 Chron. xxviii. 23. The construction is indefinite, as in Ps. lxiii. 11 (10), they have cast him down, i. e. he is cast down, meaning the enemy as an ideal person, who, according to the usage of these psalms, is immediately afterwards referred to in the plural number. Their tongue, i. e. the consequences of their false, malignant speeches and their mischievous deliberations. The verb in the last clause is an intensive form of the one used in Ps. xxxi. 12 (11.) lv. 8 (7.) Gazing at them, not simply seeing them, but seeing with emotion, whether that of wonder, joy, or terror. See above, on Ps. liv. 9 (7.) lix. 11 (10.) The clause seems to contain an allusion to the flight of the people, when the earth opened to devour Korah and his company, Num. xvi. 34.

10 (9.) And all men fear, and pronounce (it) God's doing, and his work they understand. The conversive futures show the dependence of the sentence upon that which goes before it and describe the action not as actually past, but as directly consequent upon the great catastrophe described in the preceding context. And declared the work of God, i. e. pronounced it to be such. Compare Ex. viii. 19. His work they understand, i. e. no longer foolishly ascribe it to mere chance or human agency.

11 (10.) Glad shall the righteous be in Jehovah, and shall trust in him; and (in him) shall boast (or glory) all the upright in heart. Having described the effect of the divine interposition on the wicked and on men in general, he now shows how it will affect the righteous. In Jehovah means, as usual, in union with him and possession of him. The word translated trust is that which seems originally to denote the act of seeking shelter under an overshadowing object. See above, on Ps. lxiii. 8 (7.) With the last clause compare Ps. lviii. 11 (10.) lxiii. 12 (11.)

PSALM LXV.

1. To the Chief Musician. A Psalm. By David. A Song, i. e. a song of praise. See above, on Ps. xlviii. 1. xlii. 9 (8.) God is first praised in general, as a God of mercy and benevolence to all men, vs. 2—9 (1—8), and then in particular, as the giver of fruitful seasons and abundance, vs. 10—14 (9—13.)

2 (1.) To thee (belongeth) silence, praise, oh God, in Zion, and to thee shall be paid the vow The two words silence-praise form a kind of compound term, like humility-righteousness in Ps. xlv. 5 (4,) meaning, as some suppose, silent praise, but this is hardly consistent with the fact that the praise here offered is vocal. More probably it means such praise as is accompanied by a cessation of all tumultuous and passionate excitement. See above, on Ps. lxii. 2, 6 (1, 5.) In Zion, as the appointed place of prayer and praise under the old economy. The last clause implies that fresh occasion was continually given for thankful vows and their fulfilment, by the constant repetition of God's providential favours.

3 (2.) Hearer of prayer, up to thee shall all flesh come. The first word in Hebrew is a participle, hearing, thou who habitually hearest prayer. This is mentioned as one of the divine characters or attributes. Up to thee, even to thee, implying actual arrival, and therefore a stronger expression than unto thee. All flesh sometimes means all animals, all living creatures (Gen. vi. 17, 19), but is here used in its narrower sense of all mankind (Gen. vi. 3, 12.) To thee they shall come, i. e. must come, for the supply of their necessities, the forgiveness of their sins, and in short for every good and perfect gift (James i. 17), both of a temporal and spiritual nature.

4 (3.) Words of iniquities are too strong for me; (as for) our transgressions, thou wilt expiate them, or forgive them for the sake of an atonement. Words of iniquities is by some regarded as a pleonastic paraphrase for iniquities themselves. More probably, however, the phrase means the charge or accusation of iniquity. See above, on Ps. vii. 1. xli. 9, (8), and below, on Ps. cv. 27. Too strong for me, more than I am able to account for or endure. See above, on Ps. xl. 13 (12), and below, on Ps. cxxx. 3. The last clause contains the encouragement suited to the alarming situation mentioned in the first.

5 (4.) Happy (he whom) thou wilt choose and bring (him) near, i. e. admit him to thy presence and to intimate communion with thee, (so that) he shall inhabit thy courts; we shall be sated, satisfied or filled, with the good, i. e. the pleasure, the enjoyment, of thy house, the holy (place) thy temple, or thy holy temple, thy sanctuary, an expression used both of the tabernacle and the temple properly so called. See above, on Ps. v. 8 (7.) The privilege described is not merely that of public worship at the place of God's appointment, but of residence in his family and participation in the privileges of his household. See above, on Ps. xv. 1. xxiii. 6. The change from the third person singular to the first plural shows that the former was only an individualization of the church or chosen people.

6 (5.) Fearful things in righteousness thou wilt answer us, oh God of our salvation, the confidence of all the ends of the land and sea—(even) the furthest. Thou wilt give us fearful answers to our prayers, i. e. such as are suited to excite religious reverence and awe. The confidence, the object of their trust. Earth (or land) and sea are put together to describe the whole world, and the ends of both for the remotest countries, which idea is then expressed directly, by the word at the end of the sentence. The superlative cannot be expressed in Hebrew, but is here suggested by the context. The sense is not that all men actually feel this trust in God, but that whether they feel it or not, they are really dependent upon him alone. Compare Isai. xlii. 4.

7 (6.) Fixing the mountains by his strength, girded with power. This verse accounts for the dependence of all creatures upon God by a reference to his almighty power, which is not described in general terms, but by one of its effects or acts, the settling of the mountains, as the most solid and immovable portions of the earth. He is then metaphorically represented as girded or invested with power. See below, on v. 13 (12.)

8 (7.) Stilling the roar of seas, the roar of their waves, the tumult of nations. The sentence is continued from the foregoing verse. God not only formed the material universe at first, but still controls it. There is here a beautiful transition from the literal to the figurative use of the same language. It is true, in the strict sense, that God stills the raging of the seas; but it is also true that he subdues the commotion of human societies and states, of which the sea is a natural and common emblem. See above, on Ps. xlv. 3, 4 (2, 3.) Hence he adds in express terms, the tumult of nations.

9 (8.) Then were afraid those inhabiting the ends (or most distant parts) of thy signs; the outgoings of morning and evening thou wilt make to shout (or sing.) Then is not expressed in Hebrew, but employed in the translation to show the dependence of the verb on that of the preceding sentence. The sense is that whenever God thus stills the tumult of the nations, even the remotest are affected by his signs, i. e. the sensible indications of his presence and immediate agency. Outgoings is a local noun in Hebrew, and denotes the places where the evening and the morning come forth or begin, i. e. the points at which the sun sets and rises, the east and west, here put for eastern and western lands, and these for their inhabitants. That the fear mentioned in the first clause is not mere slavish dread, but an affection perfectly compatible with joy, is clear from the remainder of the sentence.

10 (9.) Thou hast visited the earth and drenched it; thou wilt much enrich it; the river of God is full of water; thou wilt prepare their corn, for thus thou dost prepare it, i. e. the earth, for this very purpose. God is said to visit his creatures when he manifests his presence with them, whether in the way of judgment or of mercy. See above, on Ps. viii. 5 (4.) Drenched, soaked, or made to overflow. The word translated much is the same as in Ps. lxii. 3 (2.) The river of God, as opposed to earthly streams. However these may fail, the divine resources are exhaustless. Their corn, that required for men's subsistence. See above, on Ps. iv. 8 (7.) The meaning of the last clause seems to be that he who provides rain to fertilize the earth, may be expected to provide the fruit itself.

11 (10.) Its furrows drench, its ridges beat down; with showers thou wilt soften it; its vegetation thou wilt bless. The first verb means to water abundantly, the second to lower or beat down, implying a great violence of rain. The word translated showers, according to its etymology and usage, denotes frequent and abundant rains. Soften, dissolve, or loosen it. The Hebrew verb is a derivative of that in Ps. xlvi. 7 (6.) Vegetation, germination, that which sprouts or springs up from the seed when sown. Some make the verbs in the first clause infinitives, determined by the finite tenses which precede and follow. But their form permits them to be taken as imperatives, from which the transition to the future is entirely natural and in accordance with the usage of David's psalms, whenever an expression of confident anticipation is to be immediately subjoined to one of strong desire. See above, on Ps. liv. 3 (1.)

12 (11.) Thou hast crowned the year of thy goodness, and thy paths drop fatness. The first clause may either mean, thou hast crowned the year with thy goodness, or, as some prefer to construe it, thou hast crowned the year of thy goodness, the year distinguished by thy goodness, with particular instances and proofs of that goodness. The obvious meaning of the strong but beautiful figure in the last clause is, that wherever he appears his movements are attended by a rich and fertilizing influence. Fatness is as usual a figure for rich food, and that for general abundance

13 (12) They drop—the pastures of the wilderness, and (with) joy the hills are girt. The word translated pastures properly means dwellings, but is specially applied to folds and pastures, as the places to which flocks resort. See above, on Ps. xxiii. 1. The word translated wilderness, according to its most probable etymology, originally signifies, not a barren desert, but a tract of country neither tilled nor thickly peopled, though perhaps luxuriant and abundant as a pasture ground. The general metaphor of clothing which occurs in the next verse, is here anticipated by the specific one of a girdle, as that which surrounds the body and confines the dress. See above, on Ps. xviii. 33 (32.)

14 (13.) The pastures are clothed with flocks, and the vales shall be robed in grain; they shall shout (for joy), yea, they shall sing. Some translate the first clause, the flocks are clothed with lambs, denying that the first noun in Hebrew ever means pastures. But see above, on Ps. xxxvii. 20. The image presented in the first translation is certainly more natural and beautiful. It also makes the parallelism more complete, the fields being covered by the waving crops in the same sense that the meadows are covered by the grazing flocks. In the last clause the pastures and valleys, by a beautiful personification, are described as breaking forth into shouts of joy and songs of praise. See above, on Ps. lx. 10 (8.)

PSALM LXVI.

1. To the Chief Musician. A Song. A Psalm. Shout unto God, all the earth! The second clause of the inscription represents it as a psalm of praise. See above, on Ps. lxxv. 1. This is confirmed by the contents and structure of the psalm itself, in which we have, first, a general celebration of God's wonderful dealings with his people in all ages, vs. 1—7; then a similar acknowledgment of what he had done in a particular case.

vs. 8—12 ; and lastly a pledge or promise of thanksgiving, vs. 13—20. The resemblance to the forty-sixth psalm has led some to suppose, that this psalm was occasioned by the same event, or composed in imitation of the other, for the use of the church in similar emergencies. The verb shout is plural in its form, which shows that earth has a collective sense.

2. Sing the honour of his name ; give (him) honour, (give) him praise. The honour or glory of his name is that due to his manifested excellence. See above, on Ps. xxix. 2. Give, literally place or put, the verbs expressing these ideas being often interchanged in Hebrew. The same phrase that is here used occurs also in Josh. vii. 19. Isai. xlii. 12, and is clearly equivalent to give honour in Ps. xxix. 1, 2. lxviii. 35 (34.) Jer. xiii. 16. The form of the last clause is peculiar, give honour (as or to) his praise.

3. How fearful are thy doings ! In the greatness of thy strength shall thine enemies lie to thee. Here begin, as some interpreters suppose, the words in which the required praise is to be rendered to Jehovah ; an admissible, though not by any means a necessary supposition. The first clause may likewise be translated, how fearful (art thou in) thy doings, after the analogy of v. 5 below, the ellipsis of the pronoun being similar to that in Ps. lxviii. 36 (35.) In the greatness of thy strength, i. e. because of it, or rather in the knowledge and belief of it. See above, on Ps. v. 8 (7.) Lie to thee, make false professions of allegiance, yield a feigned obedience, through the influence of fear. See above, on Ps. xviii. 45 (44.)

4. All the earth shall worship thee and sing to thee ; they shall sing thy name. Selah. Here again the verbs are plural, showing that all the earth is to be taken in a collective sense, as meaning all lands, or all the dwellers upon earth. See above, on v. 1

Worship thee, bow or prostrate themselves before thee, as an act both of civil and religious homage. See above, on Ps. v. 8 (7). They shall not only sing to thee but sing thy name, i. e. not only celebrate thy being but thy manifested nature, the attributes revealed by thy previous works. This anticipation of universal homage to Jehovah is in strict accordance with the whole spirit and design of the Mosaic dispensation.

5. Go, see the works of God, fearful (in) action on the sons of man. The verb go is often used in Hebrew, as a formula of invitation or of challenge, where in English we say come. See below, v. 16, and compare Isai. 2. 3, 5. In this case, however, go may be intended to express something more than would have been expressed by come. The meaning may be, if you do not believe these general declarations of God's power and dominion, go and see for yourselves the proofs already given in the history of mankind, and more especially in that of Israel: go to Egypt, to the Red Sea, to the Wilderness, to Jordan, and in the wonders there performed and still repeated in the experience of the church, see the evidence that God is indeed possessed of a tremendous power to control and influence mankind. With the first clause compare Ps. xlv. 9 (8), the only other place where the word מפעלות occurs.

6. He turned the sea into the dry (land); through the river they shall pass on foot; there will we rejoice in him. There is an obvious allusion to the crossing of the Red Sea and the Jordan, not as mere historical events, but as types or samples of God's extraordinary interpositions on behalf of Israel, such as might be realized again in their experience. Hence the promiscuous use of preterite and future forms, as if to say, the God of Israel will again turn the Red Sea into dry land for the passage of his people; if need be, they shall again cross the Jordan dry shod; there, on the scene of these miraculous events, shall we again rejoice in him. The combination of sea and river seems to show that by the latter we must understand Jordan, and not as some interpreters suppose, the Euphrates, which is commonly so called. But see Isai. xi. 15, 16. Zech. x. 11.

7. Ruling by his might forever ; his eyes over (or among) the nations watch ; let not the rebels exalt themselves. Selah. The participle in the first clause is expressive of habitual action, 'he constantly, habitually rules.' See above, Ps. xxii. 29 (28.) By his might, with which he was before described as girded. See above, Ps. lxxv. 7 (6.) The noun eternity is used adverbially to mean forever. The divine inspection here described implies that man can no more evade God's power than resist it. The last clause may be either a prayer to God or an admonition to his enemies. Exalt themselves: the Keri or marginal reading is be high for them (or for themselves); the Kethib or textual reading, lift (or raise) for themselves, in which case horn may be supplied from Ps. lxxv. 5, 6 (4, 5), or head from Ps. cx. 7. The rebels, i. e. against God, his stubborn and incorrigible enemies.

8. Bless, oh ye nations, our God, cause to be heard the voice of his praise! To the general description of God's gracious dispensations towards his people there seems now to be added the commemoration of a particular event of this kind; not one of merely local interest, however, but of such importance, that the nations are invited to unite in praising God for it. See above, on Ps. xviii. 50 (49.) xxii. 28 (27.)

9. The (one) putting, who puts, our soul in life, and has not given (up) to removal our foot, has not allowed it to move or slip. The unusual expression in the first clause seems to mean restoration to life, a figure for relief from great distress, which is not unfrequently described as death. See above, on Ps. xxx. 4 (3.) xlix. 16 (15.) To set in life is not unlike the phrase to set in safety, Ps. xii. 6 (5.) The form of expression in the last clause is analogous to that in Ps. lv. 23 (22) above, and identical with that in Ps. cxxi. 3 below. Given up to removal, suffered to be moved from its firm position or its place of safety.

10. For thou hast tried us, oh God, thou hast purged (or assayed) us like the purging of silver, as silver is purged, with particular reference, as some suppose, to the long continued and repeated process of refinement necessary in the case of silver. See above, on Ps. xii. 7 (6.) xxvi. 2, and compare Isai. i. 25. xlvi. 10. Zech. xiii. 9. 1 Pet. i. 7. The general idea here is that of affliction, as a means both of trial and purgation, and is carried out in the following verses.

11. Thou hast caused us to come into the net; thou hast put pressure in our loins. The first clause is descriptive of complicated difficulties and embarrassments, the second of suffering and weakness. The word translated net occurs above in the very different sense of a tower or fortress, Ps. xviii. 3 (2.) But even when so used, it strictly means a hunting tower, i. e. a post of observation and of safety used by hunters, and from the same root (רֶשֶׁת to hunt) may be deduced the sense of net or snare, as a customary implement of hunting, in which sense it is certainly employed by Ezekiel (xii. 13.) The word translated pressure occurs only here, but its essential meaning is clear from its etymological affinities. Compare the cognate form in Ps. lv. 4 (3.) Some suppose the idea to be that of a superincumbent pressure, load or burden, corresponding to the verb as used in Amos ii. 13. Others make pressure mean contraction, stricture, and by necessary implication, pain or anguish. The loins are mentioned as the seat of strength (Deut. xxxiii. (11), an injury to which implies both pain and weakness. See below, on Ps. lxix. 24 (23.)

12. Thou hast caused (or suffered men to ride at our head, we came into the fire and into the waters, and (now) thou hast caused us to come forth to abundance, overflow, i. e. of enjoyment. Man, frail or mortal man, whose tyranny is therefore the more insupportable. See above, on Ps. viii. 5 (4.) This first clause is ambiguous, in Hebrew as in English. To ride at our head, though an exact translation, suggests only the idea of command or guidance, whereas some kind of suffering is required by the context. The common version, to ride over our heads, presents the image of horsemen trampling on their conquered enemies. Some suppose the idea to be that of riding on us, as a man controls and guides the horse that carries him. The head must then be mentioned only as the noblest part, without implying that the rider actually sits upon it. But this very circumstance makes the interpretation an unnatural and forced one. Fire and water, as the two great destroying elements, are common figures for distress and danger. Compare Isaiah xliii. 2. The last Hebrew word in the verse occurs only here and in Ps. xxiii. 5.

13. I will come (to) thy house with burnt-offerings; I will pay to thee my vows, i. e. the offerings thus promised. His acknowledgments shall not be merely verbal or mental, but ceremonial, i. e. expressed in the symbolical form required by the dispensation under which he lived. The reference is neither to internal feelings nor to outward rites exclusively, but to both together. See above, on Ps. xl. 7 (6.) l. 8. li. 18 (16.) With the last clause, compare Ps. lxxv. 2 (1.) The sudden change of number, from the plural to the singular, shows that what follows is the words of an ideal speaker, representing the same persons who had spoken in the foregoing context, if not identical with them.

14. Which my lips uttered and my mouth spake in my distress The first verb is a very strong and expressive one, in this connection not unlike our familiar phrases, bolted, blurted out, implying that he spoke from some irresistible impulse, and thus suggesting what is afterwards explicitly affirmed, that the vows in question were occasioned by extreme distress. The Hebrew verb originally means to open or distend the lips, whether as a gesture of mockery (Lam. ii. 16) or menace (Ps. xxii. 14), or for the purpose of articulate speech (Job xxxv. 16.) That its absolute use, in special reference to vows spontaneously and hastily uttered, was familiar to the ancients, may be seen from Judg. xi. 35, 36. In my distress: the original expression is, in the distress to me. See above, on Ps. xviii. 7 (6.)

15. Burnt-offerings of fatlings will I offer to thee, with incense of rams; I will make (an oblation of) cattle with he-goats. Selah. The word translated fatlings is especially applied to lambs, Isai. v. 17. The verb is the first clause in the one from which the noun rendered burnt-offering is derived, and strictly means I will cause to ascend, i. e. upon the altar, or in vapour from it. Incense may here be taken in its etymological sense of something burnt sacrificially, although in usage limited to aromatic fumigations, which is also the case with the Hebrew word in every place but this, where it seems to mean the sacrificial fat that was burned upon the altar. The verb to make is absolutely used, as a technical term of the Mosaic Law, to denote the act of sacrifice. See Ex. xxix. 36. Lev. ix. 7, and compare Judg. vi. 19. 1 Kings xviii. 23, 26. The different species of victims are enumerated here, to convey the idea of a regular and perfect sacrifice, implying more than ordinary thankfulness.

16. Go (or in our idiom, come), hear, all ye fearers of (ye that fear) God, and I will tell you what he hath done to (or for) my soul. The fearers of Jehovah is a common description of believers or the people of God. See Ps. lx. 6 (4.) lxi. 6 (5.) The invitation is like that in Ps. xxii. 24 (23.) Tell, in the primary sense of counting or numbering, and the secondary one of recounting or relating. To my soul, i. e. to me, whose life or soul was threatened. To me as the object of the act alluded to, or for me, as the person to be benefited. This address prepares the way for the ensuing declaration, founded on his own experience, that it is only by sincere submission and devotion to God that his protection is to be secured.

17. To him (with) my mouth I called, and high praise (exaltation) was under my tongue. By a slight change in the pointing, or by supposing an irregularity of punctuation, the last clause may be rendered, he was extolled under my tongue, i. e. by means of it as an instrument of praise. But as a corresponding plural form occurs below, Ps. cxlix. 6, the Hebrew word (רָוַחַם) is probably a noun, meaning lofty praise, or exaltation by means of praise. Under my tongue may be simply equivalent to on or with my tongue, or it may be intended to suggest the additional idea of a store or deposit of such praises still in reserve, to be employed hereafter, which some suppose to be the meaning of the phrase in Ps. x. 7.

18. Iniquity if I have seen in my heart, the Lord will not hear. If I had any wicked end in view, God would not hear my prayer. The same idea is expressed in Prov. xv. 29. Isai. i. 15. lix. 2 John ix. 31. 1 John iii. 22. It is here stated as the ground on which he means to argue his own innocence of any such corrupt design, and actually does so in the next verse.

19. (But) verily God hath heard; he hath attended to the voice of my prayer. The Hebrew particle at the beginning is strictly not adversative but affirmative. See above, on Ps. xxxi. 23 (22.) It is equivalent in force to our expressions, whereas, really, in fact, etc. The doubt subjected in the foregoing verse had been removed in his case by the application of the test there mentioned. God had already heard his prayer and thereby borne witness that he was not guilty of the duplicity a question.

(20.) Blessed (be) God who hath not put away my prayer (from him) and his mercy from me. Here as elsewhere, when applied to God, blessed can only mean praised or entitled to be praised. The double application of the verb in the last clause cannot well be imitated in translation. The same word in Hebrew may be used to express the act of rejecting a petition, and that of withdrawing or withholding favour.

P S A L M L X V I I .

1. To the Chief Musician. With (or on) stringed instruments. A Psalm, a Song, i. e. a psalm of praise. See above, on Ps. lxi. 1. For the meaning of the second clause of this inscription, see above, on Ps. lv. 1, and compare Ps. lxi. 1. The psalm before us, like the sixty-fifth, seems to have special reference to the manifestation of God's goodness in the gift of fruitful seasons and abundant harvests. See below, on v. 7 (6), and above, on Ps. lxxv. 1. But from this the Psalmist, or the Church, of which he is the spokesman, takes occasion to anticipate the extension of God's covenanted gifts, both temporal and spiritual, to all the nations of the earth. This expectation is indeed the burden of the psalm, its immediate occasion being only mentioned incidentally near the close, yet not so obscurely as to make it doubtful. Any formal division of this short and simple composition can only tend to mar its beauty

2 (1.) God be merciful unto us and bless us, and cause his face to shine upon us! The form of expression is evidently borrowed from the sacerdotal benediction, Num. vi. 24, 25, but with a substitution of the first person plural for the second singular, so as to convert the authoritative blessing upon others into an expression of desire for themselves. The optative meaning of the sentence is determined by the form of the second verb in Hebrew. Upon us, literally with us, a form of speech probably intended to suggest the idea of the divine presence and communion. As to the figure in the last clause, see above, on Ps. iv 7 (6.) xxxi. 17 (16.)

3 (2.) That thy way may be known in the earth, in all nations thy salvation. The original construction of the first clause is, to know in the earth thy way; but the sense can only be made clear in English by a passive form. Thy way, i. e. thy mode of dealing with thy people, referring more particularly here to providential favours, the knowledge of which he hopes to see extended to all nations, as a means to the promotion of still higher ends. The pleonastic phrase, saving health, retained in the authorized version from an older one, has nothing corresponding to it in the Hebrew but the single word which always means salvation and is commonly so rendered.

4 (3.) The nations shall acknowledge thee, oh God, the nations shall acknowledge thee—all of them. The common version of the verb here twice used (praise) is too wide. As it is commonly applied to the acknowledgment of benefits, a nearer equivalent is thank. See above, on Ps. lvii. 10 (9.)

5 (4.) Nations shall joy and triumph, because thou shalt judge peoples (in) rectitude, and nations in the earth—thou shalt guide them. The divine guidance implies protection and control. Compare Isai. lviii. 11. The anticipation of universal happiness, as springing from the judicial acts of the Messiah, is not unusual in prophecy. See below, on Ps. lxii. 12—14, and compare Isai. ii. 3. The word translated rectitude occurs above, Ps. xlv. 7 (6.)

6 (5.) The nations shall acknowledge thee, oh God, the nations shall acknowledge thee—all of them. This repetition shows the anticipation here expressed to be the principal though not the primary subject of the psalm. The position of the universal terms, at the close of this verse and v. 4 (3), is highly emphatic, and precludes, in the most explicit manner, all restriction.

7 (6.) The earth (or land) has yielded her produce; God will bless us, (even) our God. The translation of the first verb as a future is entirely gratuitous, and therefore ungrammatical. Correctly rendered, it affords a hint of the immediate occasion of the psalm itself. The mutual relation of the clauses is that of a thankful acknowledgment for gifts received already to a joyful and believing expectation of the same hereafter. God has blessed us, and since he is our own God, he will bless us still.

8 (7.) God will bless us, and all the ends of the earth shall fear him. The God who has bestowed this harvest on us will continue to afford us tokens of his covenant love and faithfulness; and the day is coming when the intimate relation which we now sustain to him will be extended to all nations. Ends of the earth, even the remotest countries, but of course without excluding those at hand. It is really tantamount to saying all lands or the whole earth. See above, on Ps. ii. 8.

P S A L M L X V I I I .

1. To the Chief Musician. By David. A Psalm of Praise.

Generally, a psalm, a song, but see above, on Ps. lxxv. 1. lxxvi. 1. lxxvii. 1. This psalm, like the eighteenth, which it very much resembles, is a triumphal song, occasioned by some signal victory or success in war, perhaps that recorded in 2 Samuel xii. 26—31, which closed the last important war of David's reign. The psalm opens with a general praise of God as the deliverer of the righteous and destroyer of the wicked, vs. 2—7 (1—6.) This is then illustrated and confirmed by a reference to certain periods in the history of Israel, and first to the march through the wilderness, vs. 8—11 (7—10.) Then comes the period of the judges, vs. 12—15 (11—14.) Then the erection of the monarchy on Zion, and its confirmation by the victory just achieved, vs. 16—20 (15—19.) This is then represented as a part of the general plan of Jehovah's dealings with his people, vs. 21—24 (20—23.) The triumphal procession is described, vs. 25—28 (24—27.) All this, however, is but a specimen or foretaste of a universal conquest yet to come, vs. 29—32 (28—31.) In anticipation of this revolution, the nations are summoned to unite in the praises of Jehovah, vs. 33—36 (32—35.) The resemblance of this last part to the corresponding parts of the two preceding psalms may account for the position of the one before us.

2 (1.) God shall arise, his enemies shall scatter; those hating him shall flee before him. This verse propounds, as the theme of the whole psalm, a fact continually verified in history. There is also an obvious allusion to the form of speech uttered by Moses at the removal of the ark, the symbol of God's presence. See Num. x. 35. The wish there expressed is here said to be realized. Hence the change of the imperative (קִרְיָהוּ) into a future (יִקְרֶהוּ), showing that this verse has not an optative meaning (let God arise), but is declaratory of what certainly will be hereafter, as it has been already, in the case which gave occasion to the psalm. The present time is not excluded, but involved in the general proposition, that it must and will be so. Shall scatter is a more exact translation of the Hebrew verb than be scattered, although the idea is undoubtedly that of involuntary violent dispersion. Before him, from his face, or from his presence. See above, on Ps. ix. 4 (3.) lxi. 4 (3.)

3 (2.) As smoke is driven, thou wilt drive (them) ; as wax is melted before fire, the wicked shall perish before God. The form of expression is the same as in the preceding verse, from the face of fire, from the face (or presence) of God. The verb in the first clause is the same with that in Ps. i. 4, where the wind, implied here, is expressly mentioned, as the driving or propelling agent. The comparison with wax is a common one in Scripture, and occurs above, in Ps. xxii. 15 (14.) With the last clause compare the conclusion of the Song of Deborah (Judg v. 31), of which there are various imitations, or at least reminiscences, in this psalm.

4 (3.) And the righteous shall be glad ; they shall triumph before God, and shall joy with gladness. This is true not only of righteous individuals but of righteous nations, and especially of Israel, as such considered, although many of its members were unrighteous. But these are not considered as really belonging to the church or chosen people, but are classed among the wicked enemies of God. Before God shall the righteous rejoice, as the wicked flee before him.

5 (4.) Sing unto God, celebrate his name, cast up (a highway) for the (one) riding through the deserts, by his name Jah, and exult before him. The second clause alludes to the opening of roads for kings and armies. See above, on Ps. l. 23, and compare Isai. xl. 3. Mal. iii. 1. The common version of the verb (extol) conveys an idea wholly foreign from the usage of the Hebrew word. Riding, i. e. journeying, or giving it a military application, marching. The common version of the next noun (heavens) is entirely unauthorized by usage. The Hebrew word is one still applied by the Arabs to the region over which the Israelites wandered forty years. The idea here suggested is more fully carried out in vs. 8—10 (7—9.) By his name Jah, i. e. in the character denoted by this name, which is an abbreviation of Jehovah, peculiar to the song of Moses (Ex. xv. 2) and the later imitations of it. See my notes on Isai. xii. 2. xxxviii. 11. The people are summoned to prepare for the reception of this glorious visitor.

6 (5.) Father of orphans and judge of widows (is) God in his abode of holiness. One of the most glorious divine characters is that of a protector of the innocent and helpless. Judge, vindicator, patron, one who does them justice. His abode of holiness cannot in this connection denote heaven, but must be referred to his peculiar residence among his chosen people. It was there that, both by the provisions of this law and the dispensations of his providence, he asserted his right to the exalted character here claimed for him.

7 (6.) God makes the lonely dwell in houses, makes the captives come forth into enjoyments; only rebels (still) inhabit a dry-land (or desert). This, though a general proposition, seems to have a special reference to the change in the condition of the Israelites, when brought out of the wilderness into possession of the promised land. The participles in the original (settling, bringing out) express habitual or customary acts. In houses, literally, in a house, or still more closely, to a house, the idea of removal being really implied. The word might also be translated homewards or at home. The last word in this clause occurs nowhere else, and has been variously explained to mean in chains, by force, and into pleasures or enjoyments, which last is now preferred by most interpreters.

8 (7.) Oh God, in thy going out before thy people, in thy marching through the wilderness, Selah. The sentence is completed in the next verse, being here divided by a pause of solemn and admiring recollection. The general description of the foregoing verses is now confirmed and illustrated by a reference to the exodus from Egypt and the journey through the wilderness. Before thy people, in the pillar of cloud, as their guide and their commander. Thy marching, literally, thy stepping, treading, or more exactly still, thy step or tread. To make the allusion still more pointed, the word for wilderness is not the one commonly so rendered, but one borrowed from Deut. xxxii. 10.

9 (8.) The earth shook, nay, the heavens dropped, this Sinai, at the presence of God, the God of Israel. Dropped, discharged drops, rained. This is mentioned as a natural and usual accompaniment of a thunder-storm. This Sinai probably means, this (was at) Sinai, and should be read as a parenthesis. The usual construction not only requires a verb to be repeated or supplied, but yields an obscure and doubtful sense, as no reason can be given why Sinai should be called this Sinai, and the version Sinai itself is unauthorized by usage. The first clause is descriptive of the grand and terrible phenomena attending the theophany at Sinai. See Ex. xix. 16—18.

10. (9.) A rain of free gifts thou pourest down, oh God ; thine inheritance, and (that) exhausted, thou dost confirm (or strengthen) it. The first clause probably refers to the abundant and refreshing gifts (of which rain is a natural and common emblem) bestowed upon the people in the wilderness, including manna, quails, and water. The future tense is like those in Ps. xviii. 7 (6.) Pour down, literally, shake or shake out. Thine inheritance, thy people. The construction is that of an absolute nominative, (as to) thine inheritance. The next clause heightens the description by suggesting that the gift came precisely when it was most needed.

11 (10.) Thy flock hath dwelt therein ; thou wilt provide, in thy goodness, for the wretched. The first noun strictly means an animal, and more especially a beast, but was probably employed as a collective to denote a herd or flock, in which sense it was figuratively applied in David's time to a company or troop of men, (2 Sam. xxiii. 11, 13.) Therein, i. e. in the land of promise, which was present to the writer's mind, though not expressly mentioned in the context. See below, vs. 15 (14) and compare Isai. viii. 21. Thou wilt provide, indefinitely, whatsoever may be needed ; or more specifically, wilt prepare, i. e. prepare a home, a resting place. The future tense describes it as a customary method of proceeding upon God's part, but specially exemplified in the case of Israel, who, until his settlement in Canaan, might well be called a sufferer, a wretched or afflicted one.

12 (11.) The Lord will give the word ; the (women) publishing (it) are a great host. As to the future, see above, on vs. 10, 11. (9, 10.) Word here means tidings, news, and, as the whole connection shows, good news, which is also suggested by the word translated publishing, but in usage constantly applied to joyful tidings. See above, on Ps. xl. 10 (9.) There is obvious allusion to the ancient oriental custom of women celebrating victories with song and dance. See Ex. xv. 20. 1 Sam. xviii. 6, 7. The reference is not to any one occasion, but to an ideal choir chanting all the victories of some great period, perhaps that of the Judges.

13 (12.) Kings of armies shall flee, shall flee, and she that tarrieth at home shall divide the spoil. The flight described is not that of kings alone, but of kings at the head of armies. The repetition of the verb denotes the certainty and completeness of the rout. The dweller in the house is by some literally understood to mean the woman who takes no part in the battle. But others regard it as a figure for the chosen people, dwelling quietly at home, after the disappearance of their enemies, when "the land had rest," Judg. v. 31. viii. 28.

14 (13.) When ye lie down between the borders, (ye shall be like) the wings of a dove covered with silver and her pinions with yellow gold. The general idea seems to be that when "the land had rest," her condition was one of peaceful prosperity. The common version of the first clause (though ye have lien among the pots) is justified neither by rabbinical tradition nor the ancient versions. The Hebrew noun occurs only here and in Ezek. xl. 43, where it is equally obscure, and the cognate forms in Gen. xlix. 14. Judg. v. 16 are scarcely less so. The only meaning, besides those already mentioned, which has any probability, is that of folds or sheep-cotes, lying among which might be viewed as a poetical figure for rural or pastoral repose, thus amounting to the same thing with the first translation, which describes the people as residing quietly between the borders, i. e. within the boundaries or frontiers of their territory, now once more forsaken by the enemy. The beautiful allusion in the last clause to the changeable colours of a dove's plumage, seems intended to suggest the idea of a peaceful but splendid prosperity.

15 (14.) When the Almighty scatters kings therein, it snows in Zalmon. The change from war to peace is likened to the dazzling whiteness of snow in the midst of blackness or darkness. This last idea is conveyed by Zalmon, an unimportant eminence near Shechem, partly perhaps in reference to the dark forests which covered it (Judg. ix. 48), but chiefly to the meaning of the name itself, to wit, shade or shadow. The parallel term, snow, suggests the idea of the brightest light. See Ps. li. 9 (7.) Isai. i. 18. Mark ix. 3. Matth. xxviii. 3. Rev. i. 14, and compare Matth. xvii. 2. Some, with far less probability, explain the verse as meaning that the land was whitened with the slain, as Zalmon was with snow; but this ascribes too great an altitude to Zalmon. The Hebrew construction in the first clause is, in the Almighty's scattering kings, i. e. at the time of his so doing. The divine name here used is not the one so frequently translated Mighty in the Psalms, but the patriarchal title mentioned in Ex. vi. 3. Compare Gen. xvii. 1. xxviii. 3. It is here introduced because the events in question were remarkable exertions and displays of God's omnipotence. Scattered here means routed, put to flight. See above, vs. 13 (12), and compare the use of the same Hebrew verb in Zech. ii. 10 (6.)

16 (15.) A mount of God (is) Mount Bashan, a mount of peaks (or ridges) is Mount Bashan. The first phrase means a mountain showing forth the creative power of God by its vastness. See above, on Ps. xxxvi. 7 (6.) Mount Bashan, not a single eminence, but the lofty range of Antilibanus, also called Hermon, and by other races, Sion and Sirion. See Deut. iii. 9. iv. 48. Ps. xlii. 7 (6.) Ps. lxxxix. 13 (12.) The last two names would be apt to suggest, by a fortuitous resemblance that of the holy hill of Zion. A mount of peaks or ridges, i. e. not a detached mountain, but a chain with many lofty summits, forming the northern boundary of Bashan. At the same time, the expressions of this verse would necessarily suggest the idea of great states or kingdoms, of which mountains are the standing symbols. See above, on Ps. xlvi. 3 (2.) lxxv. 7 (6.)

17 (16.) Why will ye watch, (ye) hills, (ye) ridges, the hill God hath desired for his dwelling? Yea, Jehovah will inhabit it) forever. The interrogative form implies disapprobation and contempt. See above, on Ps. ii. 1. The verb occurs nowhere else in the Old Testament, but its meaning has been preserved in Arabic, namely, to watch as an enemy, to lie in wait, or, as some allege, to view with envy. Common to both is the idea of hostility or ill-will. The translation of this verb in the English Bible (leap) and in the Prayer Book Version (hop) seems to rest on mere conjecture. The two nouns, hills and ridges, are by some supposed to form a sort of compound, ridge-hills, i. e. high or rugged hills. Compare the phrase wine-reeling, Ps. lx. 5 (3.) The plural form may denote the several peaks, or the whole class which this range of mountains merely represented. Zion is here described as an object of hostility or envy to the mountains of the heathen world, on account of the honour put upon it by its being chosen as the earthly residence of God. Having first poetically said that he desired it, i. e. preferred and chose it, to preclude all doubt as to the event, the psalmist adds, not only so, but he does and will dwell there for ever. The verbs of the second and third clause, although synonymous, are not identical in Hebrew. There is evident significance in the choice of the divine names here employed. Not only did he choose it, as Elohim, for his dwelling, but he actually dwells there as Jehovah, as the God of revelation and the covenanted God of Israel.

18 (17.) The chariots of God (are) two myriads, multiplied thousands; the Lord is among them, Sinai in the sanctuary. As David's most formidable foes were particularly strong in chariots of war (2 Sam. viii. 4. x. 18), so here God's power of protection is expressed by an innumerable multitude of chariots. The same mode of representation occurs in the history of Elisha, 2 Kings vi. 17. Two myriads is a closer version than twenty thousand, because the Hebrew word is the dual of one used both in the vague sense of a multitude, and in the precise sense of a myriad. See above, on Ps. iii. 7 (6), where the plural of the same word occurs. The next phrase strictly means thousands of repetition or reduplication, i. e. thousands upon thousands. Compare Dan. vii. 10. There is no mention of angels in the text, although interpreters in every age have supposed their presence to be necessarily implied, as the conductors of God's chariots, if not as the chariots themselves, which is the sense put upon the Hebrew phrase by both the English versions (even thousands of angels.) There is also an obvious allusion to the giving of the law at Sinai, as described in Deut. xxxiii. 2, 3, the presence of angels at which appears to be assumed in the New Testament, Gal. iii. 19. Heb. ii. 2. It is not however the mere number, even of these heavenly hosts, that constitutes the safety of the holy place, but the personal presence of the Lord (Adhonai) among them, which is therefore asserted in the next clause. The last words of the verse are obscure, but seem most probably to mean, that the same glorious theophany which once took place on Sinai is now renewed on Zion, with particular reference as some imagine, to the presence of the ark and the tables of stone in the one case, as a perpetual memorial, and even a perpetual renewal, of the legislation in the other. This fine poetical identification of the two mountains hallowed by God's presence may have been in the mind of the apostle when he drew that sublime contrast or parallel between them, Heb. xii. 18—24. Under the law, Sinai was renewed in Zion. Under the gospel, Zion superseded Sinai

19 (18.) Thou hast gone up to the high-place; thou hast captured a captivity; thou hast taken gifts among mankind, and (even among) rebels, (so as) to dwell (here), Lord, God! In order to carry out his choice and resolution, as recorded in v. 17 (16) above, i. e. in order to establish Zion as his earthly dwelling place, God has encountered all opposing powers, vanquished them, and forced them to pay tribute, even the stoutest and most stubborn. The sign of the conquest being finished is the conqueror's return to his throne, whether upon earth or in heaven. See above, on Ps. vii. 8 (7), and compare Ps. xviii. 17 (16), xciii. 4. cii. 20 (19.) Captured a captivity, i. e. taken captive a multitude of enemies. The gifts meant are the forced gifts of the conquered. Among men, i. e. while present among them as their conqueror, and by implication from them. Even rebels, even the most rebellious, are compelled to submit. In other words, the conquest is complete. According to the military figures here used, it would seem to be implied that the gifts thus extorted by the conqueror are distributed among his followers. To receive gifts on the one hand and bestow gifts on the other are correlative ideas and expressions, so that Paul, in applying this description of a theocratic triumph to the conquests of our Saviour, substitutes one of these expressions for the other (Eph. iv. 9.) He also, in his comment on the passage, justly represents the ascension there described as necessarily implying a previous descent. In other words, victory presupposes conflict. The last clause obviously refers back to the corresponding clause of v. 17 (16.) Lord God, literally Jah, God! See above, on v. 5 (4.)

20 (19.) Blessed be the Lord, day (by) day; (whoever) lays a load upon us, the Mighty (God is) our salvation. Selah. The second clause, which is obscure from brevity, also admits of this translation: (man) may lay a load upon us, (but) God is our salvation. Lay a load upon us, literally, load to us, or as to us. According to both these constructions, loading means oppression. It is possible, however, to attach to it the sense of benefits or favours, put upon it in the English versions, but with a very different construction of the whole clause. The Mighty (God) will heap upon us our salvation, or, will load us with salvation. The depth of feeling and the strength of faith, on which this anticipation rests, are indicated or betrayed by the meditative pause which follows.

21 (20.) God is for us a God of salvation, and to Jehovah the Lord (belong) issues from death. A more exact translation of the verse, retaining the peculiar idioms, would be this: the Almighty (is) for us an Almighty for salvation, and to Jehovah the Lord (belong), as to death, outgoings or escapes. This is only an amplification of the last clause of the verse preceding, God is our salvation, or according to the other construction, God loads us with salvation.

22 (21.) Surely God will crush the head of his enemies, the hairy scalp going on in his trespasses. The first word properly means only and is here used to denote that this and not the contrary is true, a purpose which in our idiom may be answered by a particle of strong asseveration, such as certainly or surely. See above, v. 7 (6), and compare Ps. xxxix. 12 (11). lviii. 12 (11.) Crush the head, a strong figure for violent and complete destruction. See below, on v. 24 (23), and compare Gen. iii. 15. Ps. cx. 6. Num. xxiv. 8, 17. The hairy scalp, or crown of hair, is merely a poetical equivalent or parallel to head. The words that follow seem to be applied to it by a kind of personification. Compare Prov. xvi. 31. But this figure, if too bold, may be avoided by supplying of one or of the man before going. This last word does not necessarily mean going on, but according to its usage elsewhere may be rendered going about, i. e. habitually acting, in a sinful manner. See above, on Ps. xii 9 (8.) xx. 7 (6.) xxvi. 3. xxxv. 14. xxxix. 7 (6.) xliii. 2 (1.)

23 (22.) The Lord hath said, From Bashan I will bring (them)

back, I will bring (them) back from the depths of the sea. Some suppose the object of the verbs in this verse to be Israel or my people, as in Isai. xlix. 12 (compare Gen. xiv. 14.) But as the enemy is still the subject of the following verses, it is better to understand the one before us as threatening to bring them back for punishment and destruction, even when they seemed to have withdrawn in triumph. Here, as in verse 15 (14), Bashan is mentioned as a frontier province of the Holy Land. In the last clause there is an obvious climax. I will bring them back, not from Bashan merely, but, if need be, from the bottom of the ocean. Compare Ps. cxxxix. 9, and especially Am. ix. 2, 3.

24 (23.) In order that thou mayest crush (them)—thy foot in blood—(and) the tongue of thy dogs (in blood) from the enemies, (even) from him. The general import of this verse is clear, but its construction doubtful and obscure. The first verb cannot mean to dip or wash without an arbitrary change of text by reading הרדוק as in Ps. lviii. 11 (10.) The original verb (המחוק) must have the same sense as in v. 22 (21), and may have the same object, namely, the enemies of God and of his people. The next words may then be taken as a parenthetical and qualifying clause, like sword in hand and other such forms in English. Thy foot in blood, i. e. with thy foot in their blood, or so that thy foot shall tread in their blood. The last word in Hebrew (מִיָּהוּדָה) is by some understood as a noun with a suffix meaning its portion i. e. the share of the tongue; but for this there is no authority in usage. Others translate the phrase, of it, i. e. of the blood, and the whole clause, the tongue of thy dogs (shall receive) of it from the enemies. According to the first version given above, the last phrase is a mere specification of the one before it; from the enemies, (even) from him, referring to some real or ideal representative of the entire class.

25 (24.) They saw thy goings, oh God, the goings of my God, my king, in the holy place. The subject of the first verb may be either men in general, or the spectators, those who took no part in the triumphal pageant here described. The holy place, not in the restricted sense, but in that of the Greek ιερόν, meaning the whole of the sacred enclosure, as distinguished from ναός, the sacred edifice. Into this enclosure the procession seems to be described as entering, for the purpose of bringing back the ark.

26 (25.) Before went singers, behind players, in the midst of damsels drumming, playing upon timbrels, which is still an oriental custom. Some suppose the order mentioned in the first clause to denote the precedence or priority of vocal above instrumental music, as a rational or reasonable service. The English version of the last clause, among (them were) the damsels, inverts the true sense by needlessly supplying two words, a construction forbidden by the masoretic pointing. The true sense is, that the singers and performers were themselves surrounded by these players upon timbrels.

27 (26.) In assemblies bless ye God, the Lord, from the fountain of Israel. Not only individually, or in triumphal marches, but in the stated convocations of the people at the sanctuary. See above, on Ps. xxvi. 12, the only other place where the Hebrew word occurs, except as a proper name (Num. xxxiii. 25), and where it evidently has the same sense. The only satisfactory explanation of the last words, from the fountain of Israel, is that afforded by supplying ye who are before it, and applying the whole clause as a description of the chosen people, under the figure of a stream derived or flowing from its fountain. Compare the similar ideas and expressions in Isai. xlvi. 1. li. 1.

28 (27.) There is little Benjamin, subduing them; the chiefs of Judah, stoning them; the chiefs of Zebulon; the chiefs of Naphtali. These are named as representatives of all the tribes supposed to be there, i. e. in the triumphal march. They seem to be selected, partly with reference to their local habitation, as the northern and southern extremities of Israel; partly because the most remarkable exploits, from the time of Moses to the time of David, were performed by these tribes. See Judg. v. 18. 1 Sam. xviii. 7. Little Benjamin, so called in allusion to Jacob's partial fondness for his youngest son. See Gen. xliii. 33, and compare 1 Sam. ix. 21. Their conqueror, or subduing them, as Saul did the surrounding nations. See 1 Sam. xiv. 47, 48. Stoning them, literally, their stoning, from a verb which invariably means to stone. The allusion may be to their skill as slingers, or more specifically to the means by which David killed Goliath (1 Sam. xvii. 49, 50.) The suffix refers to the enemy, as in the clause preceding. Some interpreters have noted, as an observable coincidence, that our Lord and several of his apostles were of Judah, Paul was of Benjamin (Phil. iii. 5), and the remaining apostles of Galilee, in which lay the domain of Zebulon and Naphtali (Matt. iv. 13.)

29 (28.) Thy God (oh Israel) hath ordained thy strength; be thou strong, oh God, who hast wrought (it) for us. Ordained, provided and secured by his omnipotence. Be strong, i. e. show thy strength by exerting it in our behalf, hereafter as thou hast done heretofore. Wrought for us, indefinitely and in general, or wrought (it) for us, i. e. this deliverance which we have been celebrating. See above, on Ps. xxii. 32 (31), and compare Isai. xxvi. 12

30 (29.) Because of thy temple above Jerusalem, to thee shall kings bring tribute. The first word properly means from; but as the local sense would here be inadmissible, from may be understood as in the phrase arising from, proceeding from, in which the idea is that of an effect or consequence. As the word translated temple originally means a palace, it is applicable both to the Mosaic sanctuary and to Solomon's temple which succeeded it. See above, on Ps. v. 8 (7.) xlviii. 10 (9.) lxxv 5 (4.) Above Jerusalem, both in a physical and moral sense, as Zion and Moriah overhung the city, and as the presence of the sanctuary was at once its protection and its crowning glory. The last word in Hebrew occurs only here and in passages founded upon this. See below, Ps. lxxvi. 12 (11), and compare Isai. xviii. 7.

31 (30.) Rebuke thou the beasts of the reeds, the crowd of strong (bulls) with the calves of the nations, crouching with pieces of silver; he has scattered nations (that) in wars delight. What he confidently anticipates is prayed for in the first clause, and in the last described as already realized, both common modes of indirect prediction. The word for beasts is that translated flock in vs. 11 (10) above; but here both senses seem to be suggested, as they may be by the use of the plural in English. The beast of the reeds has been variously explained to be the lion (Jer. xlix. 19. l. 44. Zech. xi. 3), the crocodile (Ez. xxix. 3. xxxii. 2), and the hippopotamus, the Hebrew name of which is plural in its form (Behemoth) and therefore analogous to the collective term here used. This animal is also represented elsewhere as lying in the covert of the reed (Job xl. 21.) Either the crocodile or hippopotamus would necessarily suggest the idea of Egypt, here referred to as the most powerful of heathen states, and therefore a fit emblem of the heathen world. The adjective strong is a poetical description of wild bulls, as in Ps. xxii. 13 (12.) These may represent the leaders of the nations, and the calves their subjects. The participle crouching is a singular in Hebrew, prostrating himself, the many being suddenly transformed into an ideal individual. See above, on Ps. x. 10. With pieces of silver, silver coins, offered as tribute to their conquerors. See above, on v. 19 (18), and compare Isai. lx. 9. In the close of the verse he sees the warlike enemies of Israel already scattered by the hand of God.

31 (30.) Princes shall come out of Egypt; Ethiopia shall soon stretch out her hands unto God. Egypt is again named as the representative of the Gentile world, but in conjunction with the neighboring state of Cush or Ethiopia, often referred to by the prophets as a powerful and splendid empire. See Isai. xviii. 7. xlv. 14. Zeph. iii. 10. The word translated princes means originally fat ones, elsewhere put for prosperous and potent men. See above, on Ps. xxii. 30 (29.) From this word is supposed to be derived the name Hasmonean which was, given to the Maccabees or Jewish princes in the interval between the Old and New Testaments. Soon stretch out is not a version but a paraphrase of the original expression, which means strictly, make its hands to run, and may perhaps denote the eagerness with which the action is performed.

33 (32.) Kingdoms of the earth, sing unto God; praise (or celebrate) the Lord! Selah. In view of the conquests here foreseen, the whole world is summoned to acknowledge the God of Israel as the universal sovereign. Compare Rev. xi. 15.

34 (33.) (Sing) to the (one) riding in the heavens of heavens of old; lo, he utters his voice, a voice of strength. This verse is designed to magnify the object of the praise enjoined. Riding, as a conqueror in triumph. See above, on v. 5 (4.) The heavens of heavens are the highest heavens, the heaven of that which is heaven to us. See 1 Kings viii. 27, and compare Deut. x. 14. xxxiii. 26. Of old does not qualify riding, as it may seem to do in English, but the nouns immediately preceding, the heavens of antiquity or ancient heavens. See above on Ps. lv. 20 (19.) In the last clause, he seems to hear an audible response from heaven itself. The lo, as usual, implies that something suddenly assails the senses. Utters his voice, literally, gives (forth a sound) with his voice, as in Ps. lxxvi. 7 (6)

35 (34.) Give strength to God! Over Israel (is) his majesty, and his strength in the clouds. To give, in such connections, is of course to ascribe. See above, on Ps. xxix. 1, 2. The remainder of the verse contains the ground of this injunction—God is entitled to the praise of power, because his greatness is displayed in the protection which he extends over Israel. As the sanctuary was above Jerusalem, so God was above the chosen people, their chief and their protector. See above, on v. 30 (29.) At the same time his power is displayed throughout the universe, especially those extraordinary dispensations, in which he appears to speak from heaven or the clouds. See above, on Ps. xxvi. 6 (5.)

36 (35.) Terrible (art thou), oh God, out of thy holy-places; the Mighty (God) of Israel—he is (a God) giving strength and forces to the people. Blessed (be) God! The winding up is like that of the twenty-ninth psalm. Out of thy sanctuaries, as displayed thence, in blessings bestowed upon thy people. He is not only mighty in himself but the giver of might to others. Compare Isai. xl. 29, 31.

PSALM LXIX.

A SUFFERER describes his own condition, vs. 2—5 (1—4.) He represents himself as suffering for God's sake, vs. 6—13 (5—12.) He therefore prays to be delivered, vs. 14—19 (13—18.) He again describes his suffering, but with more explicit reference to its cause, the malice of his enemies, vs. 20—22 (19—21.) He therefore prays that they may be destroyed, vs. 23—29 (22—28.) He anticipates a favourable answer to his prayers and the happiest effect upon his brethren, vs. 30—34 (29—33.) Nay, he expects to see the same mercy exercised towards the church or chosen people, vs. 35—37 (34—36.)

1. To the Chief Musician. Upon lilies. By David. The lilies probably refers to the delightful consolations and deliverances experienced or hoped for. See above, on Ps. xlv. 1. lx. 1. The subject of the psalm is an ideal person, representing the whole class of righteous sufferers. The only individual in whom the various traits meet is Christ. That he is not however the exclusive or even the immediate subject, is clear from the confession in v. 6 (5.) There is no psalm, except the twenty-second, more distinctly applied to him in the New Testament.

2 (1.) Save me, oh God, for the waters are come in, even to my soul, i. e. so as to endanger my life. See Jer. iv. 10. Jon. ii. 6. The figure for extreme distress is the same as in Ps. xl. 3 (2.)

3 (2.) I have sunk in the mire of the depth (or deep place) (where) there is no standing; I have come into depths of water, and the flood has overwhelmed me. The image is that of one sunk in the bottom of a sea or river. Mire of depth is not merely deep mire, but the mire found in a deep place.

4 (3.) I am weary of my crying; parched is my throat; my eyes fail, waiting for my God. The literal meaning of the first clause is, I am weary in my crying, i. e. have grown weary in the act of calling upon God for help. See above, on Ps. vi. 7 (6.) Parched, dried, by excessive exertion of the voice, or giving the Hebrew verb the stronger sense which properly belongs to it, inflamed. His eyes are represented as exhausted, worn out, by continued looking for God. See below, Ps. cxix. 82, and compare Lam. iv. 17. The participle waiting does not agree with eyes, as it might seem to do in English, but with the person to whom they belong, and may be construed absolutely, I waiting (me expectante), i. e. while I wait.

5 (4.) More than the hairs of my head (are) those having me without cause; strong are my destroyers, my false enemies; what I did not rob, then must I restore. With the first clause compare Ps. xl. 13 (12); with the second, Ps. xxxv. 9. xxxviii. 20 (19); with the third, Ps. xxxv. 11. 2 Sam. xvi. 8. False enemies, literally, enemies of falsehood, which may either mean in general perfidious, treacherous, or more specifically, using calumny and falsehood as a means for the attainment of their wicked ends. Then or afterwards, in reference to the previous innocence which he asserts. Though he took nothing at first, yet afterwards he must restore.

6 (5.) Oh God, thou knowest of (or as to) my foolishness, and my trespasses from thee have not been hid. He does not deny his own demerit in the sight of God, but nevertheless prays to be delivered from destruction. See above, on Ps. vi. 2 (1.) xxxviii. 4—6 (3—5.) xl. 13 (12.) xli. 15 (14.) As if he had said, 'true, I am a sinner; it is vain to deny it; thou God, knowest it; but nevertheless' &c.

7 (6.) Let not them be ashamed in me that wait for thee, Lord, Jehovah, of Hosts; let not them be disgraced in me that seek thee, God of Israel! He prays that the principle laid down in Ps. xxv. 3 may not be falsified. In me, not merely by me or because of me, but in me, as the representative of the whole class. Ashamed, disappointed and defeated in their hopes. Wait for thee, for thine appearance and the fulfilment of thy promises. Seek thee, i. e. seek to know thee and enjoy thy favour.

8 (7.) Because for thee (or thy sake) I have borne reproach, disgrace hath covered my face. In his disgrace all God's servants must participate, because he is one of them and as such suffers. With the first clause compare Ps. xlv. 23 (22.) Jer. xv. 15, with the last, Ps. xlv. 16 (15)

9 (8.) I am become a stranger unto my brethren and an alien unto the sons of my mother. The literal meaning of the first clause is, I have been estranged to (or as to) my brothers. There may be an allusion to the envious treatment of David by the other sons of Jesse. See 1 Sam. xvii. 28. The loss or alienation of the nearest friends is spoken of as one of the severest trials in Ps. xxvii. 10.

10 (9.) For the zeal of thine house, jealous regard for the honour of the sanctuary, as the visible centre of the true religion, has consumed me, implying an extreme intensity of feeling; and in consequence of this zeal, the revilings of thy revilers have fallen upon me. That such revilers did exist in David's time, we learn from 2 Sam. xii. 14. The first clause of the verse before us is applied to Christ in John ii. 17, and the second in Rom. xv. 3.

11 (10.) And I wept (away) my soul or wept myself away, in fasting, and (even that) was for revilings to me, even that became a subject of malignant mockery against me. That weeping and fasting, as natural concomitants, were not unknown to David's experience in real life, appears from 2 Sam. xii. 16, 21, 22. The first clause likewise admits of this construction: and I wept, my soul (was) in fasting, i. e. fasted. But this though it agrees well with the Hebrew usage which represents fasting as a mortification of the soul (see above, on Ps. xxxv. 13), is neither so natural nor so striking as the first construction above given, which is found in an anonymous translation of the Psalms, published by Bagster, London, 1830.

12 (11.) And I gave, put on (as) my clothing, sackcloth, ana was to them, in consequence, for a comparison, a proverb, by-word, or became a by-word to them. See above, on Ps. xxxv. 13 and xlv. 15 (14.) The context makes it probable that the mourning described in this and the preceding verse was not in reference to his own sufferings merely, but to the sins of the whole people

13 (12.) They think of me, imagine things against me, they who sit in the gate; (they imagine) songs, lampoons or satires, they who drink strong drink. The gate meant is that of the city, where the oriental courts and markets were held. Hence some suppose the sense to be, that even in the place of serious business, they indulge their spiteful mirth at my expense. But it seems more natural to make the sitters in the gate mean simply those frequenting public places. See above on Ps. lv. 12 (11) and compare Josh. xx. 4. Ruth iv. 1, 2. Lam. v. 14.

14 (13.) And I, but as for me, in contradistinction from these mockers, my prayer (is) to thee, I pray to thee in spite of their derision, oh Jehovah; (let there come or let there be) a time of acceptance, in the abundance of thy mercy; answer me, grant my petition, in the truth of thy salvation, or thy truth of salvation, in the exercise of that fidelity which secures the salvation of all who trust it. Compare Isai. xlix. 8. lxi. 2.

15 (14.) Deliver me from the mire and let me not sink; let me be delivered from my haters, from the depths of water. He here returns to the figures in v. 2 (1), where profound suffering is described as submersion under water and in mire. The meaning of the figure is explained in the last clause of the verse before us by the addition of a literal expression.

16 (15.) Let not the flood overwhelm me, and let not the deep swallow me, and let not the well (or pit) shut its mouth upon me. In the earnestness of his entreaty, he passes from the figure of a sea or stream to that of a well or cistern, the idea common to both being that of deep water.

17 (16.) Answer me, grant my prayer, Jehovah; for good (or as we should say, great) is thy mercy; according to the multitude of thy compassions, turn to me, or towards me, implying that his looks were before averted. See above, on Ps. iv. 7 (6.) xiii. 2 (1.)

18 (17.) And hide not thy face from thy servant, for (there is) distress to me, I am distressed, make haste, answer me, i. e. grant me what I ask without delay.

19 (18.) Draw nigh unto my soul, to me whose soul or life is threatened, ransom it, rescue it from ruin; because (or for the sake) of my enemies, redeem me, so that they may not triumph in my fall. See above, on Ps. xiii. 5 (4), and with the first clause compare Ps. xxii. 2 (1.)

20 (19) Thou knowest, literally hast known, as a thing of long standing, my reproach, the contempt of which I am the object, and my shame and my disgrace; before thee, in thy sight and known to thee, (are) all my adversaries, persecutors or oppressors, not their persons merely, or their conduct in general, but their treatment of me. The conviction that God knows all involves a persuasion that he will do justice to both parties. See above, on Ps. i. 6.

21 (20.) Reproach, including calumny and insult, hath broken my heart, a common figure for extreme distress, and I am sick, sick at heart or sick in spirit, but without excluding the idea of corporeal suffering, as the effect, or as a part, of his distress; and I have waited for pity, literally mourning, i. e. sympathy.

condolence, on the part of my cruel enemies, and it is not, or there is none, and for comforters, (those) comforting, and have not found (them.) With the phrase, I am sick, compare Ps. vi. 3 (2.)

22 (21.) And, so far from pitying me they have aggravated my distress, for they have given in my food, or as my food, gall, here put for the extreme of bitterness, and for my thirst, i. e. to slake it, or at (the time of) my thirst, in my thirst, when I thirst, they give me vinegar to drink. Gall and vinegar are here put together to denote the most unpalatable forms of food and drink. The passion of our Lord was providentially so ordered as to furnish a remarkable coincidence with this verse. The Romans were accustomed to give sour wine with an infusion of myrrh to convicts on the cross, for the purpose of deadening the pain. This practice was adhered to in our Saviour's case (Mark xv. 23.) Though in itself not cruel but the contrary, it formed part of the great process of murderous persecution. On the part of the Roman soldiery it may have been an act of kindness; but considered as an act of the unbelieving Jews, it was giving gall and vinegar to one already overwhelmed with anguish. And so Matthew, in accordance with his general method, represents it as a verification of this passage (Matth. xxvii. 34.) He does not contradict Mark's account before referred to, but merely intimates, that the wine and myrrh thus offered were to be regarded as identical with the gall and vinegar of this prediction. And in order to prevent the coincidence from being overlooked, our Lord, before he died, complained of thirst and vinegar was administered. (Matth. xxvii. 48. John xix. 28.) The word translated food in the first clause occurs only here, and its verbal root only in the history of David (2 Sam. xii. 17. xiii. 6, 10)

23 (22.) Let their table before them, at which they eat and where they are accustomed to enjoy themselves, be for (or become) a snare, an occasion of unexpected danger, and to those secure, thinking themselves safe, (let it be for or become) a trap. The first word in the last clause is the plural of one meaning peace, but seems to be here used, as in Ps. lv. 21 (20), for those who are at peace, at ease, tranquil and secure. Compare 1 Thess. v. 3. The ancient versions give it the equally appropriate sense of for requitals, i. e. in recompense of their transgressions. But although this sense may be deduced from the verbal root (שָׁׁׁ) and belongs to several collateral derivatives (שָׁׁׁ, שָׁׁׁ, שָׁׁׁ), it has no existence in the usage of the one before us (שָׁׁׁׁׁׁ). The circuitous construction in the English version is not only forced, but wholly unnecessary. The imprecations in this verse and those following it are revolting only when considered as the expression of malignant selfishness. If uttered by God, they shock no reader's sensibilities, nor should they, when considered as the language of an ideal person, representing the whole class of righteous sufferers, and particularly Him, who, though he prayed for his murderers while dying (Luke xxiii. 34), had before applied the words of this very passage to the unbelieving Jews (Matt. xxiii. 38), as Paul did afterwards (Rom. xi. 9, 10.) The general doctrine of providential retribution, far from being confined to the Old Testament, is distinctly taught in many of our Saviour's parables. See Matth. xxi. 41. xxii. 7. xxiv. 51.

24 (23.) Let their eyes darken, i. e. be or grow dark, from seeing, so as not to see, and their loins do thou cause to bend, give way, or swerve, i. e. paralyse their strength. See above, on Ps. lxxvi. 10 (9.) The first clause probably does not refer to blindness, but either to the dimness of the eyes in death, or to darkness as a figure for calamity in general.

25 (24.) Pour upon them thine anger, and let the heat of thy wrath, thy hot wrath, overtake them, reach them after they have long seemed to escape it and expected to escape it still.

26 (25.) Let their home be desolated; in their tents may there be no one dwelling, or let no one dwell. The word translated home seems properly to mean an enclosure, with special reference perhaps to an encampment or collection of tents (Gen. xxv. 16. Num. xxi. 10.) The translation castle in the English version of the places just referred to, and that of palace in the margin of the one before us, seem entirely conjectural. The Septuagint here has a Greek word (ἐπαυλις) meaning a place to pass the night in, especially for flocks and herds, and thence transferred to farm or country houses. This expression is retained in Acts i. 20, where the verse before us is quoted, in connection with Ps. cix. 8, and applied to Judas Iscariot, not as an individual merely, but as a type and representative of the Jewish people, in their malignant and perfidious enmity to Christ. This does not prove our Lord to be the exclusive subject of the whole psalm, a conclusion forbidden by the confession of sin in v. 6 (5) above; but it does show that He is not only one, but the chief member, nay the great type and representative, of the whole class of innocent sufferers at the hands of wicked enemies. See also Matt. xxiii. 38.

27 (26.) For (those) whom thou hast smitten they persecute, have persecuted heretofore and do so still; and as to the grief of thy wounded they tell or talk. The pronoun in the first clause is emphatic, 'thou and not man, or man only as thy blind unconscious instrument.' Compare 2 Sam. xvi. 11, 12. Job xix. 21, 22. The same persons are described as thy wounded, the original expression having commonly the sense of mortally wounded, and being therefore often rendered slain. See Isai. lxvi. 16. Jer. xxv. 33. The preposition before grief denotes the theme or subject, as it does with the same verb in Ps. ii. 7. To tell about it or talk of it is to make it the subject of unfeeling or derisive comment. See above on Ps. xli. 9 (8.)

28 (27.) Give (or place) iniquity upon iniquity, and let them

not come into thy righteousness. Luther and others understand the first clause as a prayer that sin may be made the punishment of sin (Rom. i. 28). But there seems to be rather an allusion to the double sense of the equivocal term (יִצְרָא) which properly denotes sin as such or in itself considered, but sometimes seems to mean sin considered in its consequences or effects. Thus understood it is a prayer that sin may be followed by the natural effects of sin. The righteousness of God is that which he bestows by the judicial act of justification, including pardon. To come into it is to come into possession or enjoyment of it, to become a sharer in it.

29 (28.) Let them be blotted from the book of life (or of the living), and with the righteous let them not be written, registered, enrolled. The book is not here a figure for the memory, as in Ps. lvi. 9 (8), but for the divine decree. The primary idea is that of a register containing the names of those who are to live or be preserved alive. The figure is Mosaic, being evidently borrowed from Ex xxxii. 32. The translation living, which is given in the ancient versions, is favoured by the parallel expression righteous (men), if not by the analogy of Ps. xxvii. 13. lii. 7 (5.) But the abstract version life is equally appropriate, and is recommended by the use of the phrase book of life in the New Testament with reference to the future state. See Phil. iv. 3. Rev. xx. 15.

30 (29.) And I (am) afflicted and suffering; let thy salvation, oh God, set me on high, beyond the reach of danger, which is tantamount to saying, in a place of safety. See above, on Ps. xx. 2 (1.) lix. 2 (1.) The verb might also be translated as a future proper, expressive of a confident anticipation, thy salvation will secure me. But it seems more natural to understand it as a prayer for himself, subjoined to the foregoing series of prayers for the destruction of his enemies. As if he had said, 'Remember

Lord that I am suffering, and interpose for my deliverance, as well as for their punishment.'

31 (30.) I will praise the name of God with song, or in a song, and will magnify him with thanksgiving. Here, as in many other cases, the certainty of the event is indicated by an expressed determination to thank God for it. See above, on Ps. v. 8 (7.)

32 (31.) And it shall be better to Jehovah, this shall please him more, than ox (or) bullock horned (and) hoofed. The contrast is not between material and spiritual offerings, but between a legitimate offering of both kinds and the mere oblation of a beast, as an opus operatum of intrinsic virtue, or as if God could take delight in hoofs and horns, which are therefore contemptuously specified. See above, on Ps. xl. 7 (6.) l. 8. li. 18 (16.) The last words are highly idiomatic, and scarcely susceptible of close translation, the original forms being those of active participles, horning, hoofing, i. e. having or producing horns and hoofs.

33 (32.) The humble see and rejoice, literally, have seen and will rejoice, in my deliverance, (even ye) that seek God, seekers of God, and may your heart live! May you be revived and cheered by witnessing this exhibition of God's power and goodness! The wish that it may be so includes a promise that it shall be, as in Ps. xxii. 27 (26), where the form of expression is the same.

34 (33.) For hearkening, habitually listening, (is) Jehovah to the poor, i. e. the poor among his people, the righteous, pious, or believing poor; and his prisoners, those imprisoned in affliction by himself, or by human oppressors for his sake, he hath not despised, and therefore never will. The general inference here drawn from the speaker's own experience is the same as in Ps. xxii. 25 (24) above.

35 (34.) Let heaven and earth praise him, seas and every thing creeping in them, i. e. moving with an animal or vital motion. In the particular mercy experienced by himself he sees a pledge of gifts deserving and demanding universal praise.

36 (35.) For God will save Zion, and will build the cities of Judah, and they shall dwell in them and possess them. He who is thus faithful to the individual believer must be faithful to the whole church. It is characteristic of the ancient saints to regard every personal mercy as a pledge of greater favours to the body of God's people. This is peculiarly appropriate in such a case as this, where the words are those of an ideal person representing a whole class, and that a class including, as its most conspicuous member, the Messiah himself. There is no need of supposing an allusion, either prophetic or historical, to the restoration of the Jews from Babylon, the rather as the temple is referred to in v. 10 (9) as still standing. They in the last clause are the poor of v. 34 (33), i. e. the righteous or God's people.

37 (36.) And the seed of his servants shall inherit it, i. e. Judah or the land of promise, and the lovers of his name, of his revealed perfections, shall dwell (quietly and safely) in it. The foregoing promises are not restricted to a single generation, but extend to the remotest posterity. Inherit it, possess it by hereditary right from generation to generation. As temporal and spiritual blessings were inseparably blended in the old dispensation, the promise of perpetual possession and abode in Palestine is merely the costume in which that of everlasting favour to the church is clothed in the Old Testament.

I.

P S A L M L X X.

THE Fortieth Psalm, as we have seen (vol. 1. p. 333), consists of a thanksgiving for deliverances experienced already, vs. 2—14 (1—13), and of a prayer for fresh occasion of thanksgiving, vs. 15—18 (14—17.) The latter portion is here repeated by itself, as a kind of appendix to the Sixty-ninth and preface to the Seventy-first, with both which it has several points of contact and resemblance. The mutual relation of the two editions is the same as that between the Fourteenth and the Fifty-third. The supposition of an erroneous copy or an accidental repetition is forbidden by the fact that both are left on record, and by the appearance of an uniform design in the variations. In this case, as in that of the Fifty-third Psalm, no comments will be made upon those expressions which are common to both forms and have therefore been explained already.

1. To the Chief Musician. By David. To remind, i. e. to remind God of the Psalmist's necessities. The same inscription is prefixed to Ps. xxxviii. The phrase by David represents him as the author, not of the Fortieth Psalm merely, but of this abridgment. See above, on Ps. liii. 1, and compare vol 1. p. 153.

2 (1.) Oh God to deliver me, oh Lord to help me, hasten! The first word of Ps. xl. 14 (13), be pleased, is here omitted, for the purpose, as some suppose, of making the commencement more abrupt, and thereby marking the whole composition as a fragment. Another variation, which interpreters have laboured to account for as significant, is the substitution of Elohim in the first clause for Jehovah, the only Divine name which appears in the fortieth psalm at all. It is quite as probable, to say the least, that the names were interchanged as God and Lord are often by ourselves, without special reason or design.

3 (2.) Ashamed and confounded shall be (those) seeking my soul; turned back and disgraced shall be (those) desiring (or delighting in) my hurt. See above, on Ps. xl. 15 (14.) The only variation consists in the omission of the words together and to destroy it, in accordance with the obvious design of condensation and abridgement.

4 (3.) They shall turn back on account of their shame, i. e. retreat from their assault on me confounded and ashamed—those saying, Aha, aha! See above, on Ps. xl. 16 (15.) For the strong expression, they shall be desolate, we have a milder one borrowed from Ps. vi. 11 (10.) The only other variation consists in the omission of the unimportant phrase to me.

5 (4.) They shall rejoice and be glad in thee—all (those) seeking thee; and they shall say always, great be Jehovah—(those) loving thy salvation. See above, on Ps. xl. 17 (16.) The only variation here is the insertion of the copulative and at the beginning of the second clause.

6 (5.) And I am afflicted and poor—oh God, hasten unto me! My help and my deliverer (art) thou—oh Jehovah, linger not, do not delay! See above, on Ps. xl. 18 (17.) Instead of God, the parallel passage has Jehovah, and instead of Jehovah, in the second clause, my God. Another variation is that the significant expression, he will think of me (or for me), is exchanged for the petition hasten to me, thus bringing back the prayer to the point from which it started

P S A L M L X X I .

A SUFFERER from the spite of wicked enemies prays for deliverance, vs. 1—3. He acknowledges God's goodness to him in early life, vs. 4—8, and prays that it may be continued in old age, vs. 9—13. He confidently anticipates an answer to his prayers, vs. 14—21, and promises a suitable return of praise, vs. 22—24.

The psalm bears a strong resemblance to the others in which the sufferings of the righteous are the great theme, such as the twenty-second, thirty-fifth, thirty-eighth, and fortieth, a portion of which last seems to have been prefixed to it, as a kind of text or theme, or for the purpose of connecting it with the whole class of compositions just referred to. This explains the absence of a title or inscription in the psalm before us, as in the case of the second, tenth, forty-third, and others.

1. In thee, oh Jehovah, have I trusted, taken refuge; let me not be shamed, disappointed and confounded, to eternity, forever. This verse and the next two are borrowed, with slight variations, from the beginning of Ps. xxxi.

2. In thy righteousness thou wilt deliver me and cause me to escape; incline to me thine ear and save me. See above, on Ps xxxi 2, 3 (1, 2), where the imperative form of the preceding clause is still retained, instead of being changed, as here, into the future. The verb deliver me there occurs in what is here the second clause; and the qualifying term, haste or quickly, is omitted in the case before us. The division of the sentences is also different, so that the verses do not exactly correspond.

3. Be thou to me for a rock of habitation, a rock where I may safely dwell and make my home, (whither I may be able) to come always, i. e. whenever it is necessary; thou hast commanded to save me, my deliverance is decreed already; for my rock, my hiding place, and my fortress art thou. The images presented and the terms used are similar to those in Ps. xviii. 3 (2.) Commanded to save me: see above, on Ps. xlv. 5 (4.) lxviii. 29 (28.) The imitation of Ps. xxx. here insensibly merges into a new and independent composition.

4. My God, free me, cause me to escape, from the hand of the wicked, from the palm, a poetical equivalent to hand, of the perverse and corrupt doer. The last word in Hebrew occurs only here, but from its form appears to be the participle of a verb that means to be (or become) sour, to ferment, to putrefy. The infinitive of the same verb is applied to moral evil in Isai. i. 17.

5. For thou (art) my hope, oh Lord, Jehovah, my confidence, the object of my trust, from my youth. Compare the combination Lord Jehovah with those in Ps. lxviii. 21 (20.) lxix. 7 (6), and the phrase my confidence with Ps. xl. 5 (4.)

6. Upon thee I leaned, or by thee was held up, sustained, from the womb; from the bowels of my mother, a synonymous expression, thou (art) my bringing out, the one that brought me out, a different expression of the same idea as in Ps. xxii. 11 (10.) The meaning of the verb here used, both in its transitive and in transitive forms, may be gathered from Ps. xc. 10. Num. xi. 31. In thee is my praise always; it originates, revolves, and ends in thee. Compare the analogous expression in Ps. xxii. 26 (25.)

7. As a prodigy, or wonder, an object of contemptuous astonishment, was I, or have I been to many, on account of my extraordinary sufferings; but thou art my refuge of strength, my strong refuge, at once my protector and my hiding place. With the first clause compare Deut. xxviii. 46. Isai. lii. 14. 1 Cor. iv. 9.

8. Filled shall my mouth be (with) thy praise, and all the day (with) thy beauty, or glory, as the subject of that praise. The sight of thine excellency now excites, and will excite forever, my admiration and my praise.

9. Cast me not off, at the time of old age; as my strength fails, literally, according to the failure of my strength, leave me not, do not thou abandon or forsake me. He here prays that the grace which he experienced in youth, and which he has already acknowledged in the foregoing context, may be continued and extended to his old age. Compare Isai. xlvi. 3, 4.

10. For my enemies have said (so) to me, i. e. have told me that God would forsake or had forsaken me, and as a proof that they believe it, the watchers of my soul, those who watch and lie in wait for its destruction, have consulted together, i. e. against me, which they would not have done if they had really believed me to be under the Divine protection. Instead of to me in the first clause, we may read of (i. e. concerning) me, without any violation of usage or material change of meaning. See above, on Ps. iii. 3 (2.)

11. Saying, God hath forsaken him, pursue and seize him, for there is no deliverer, literally, none delivering. This verse is an amplification of the phrase they say (so) in the verse preceding

It gives the very words in which they say so. With the first clause compare Ps. iii. 3 (2.) xli. 6 (5), and the words of Ahihtophel in 2 Sam. xvii. 1, 2, to which there may be a direct allusion, as an actual instance of the thing ideally described in David's own experience. With the last clause compare Ps. vii. 3 (2.)

12. Oh God, be not far from me; oh my God, to (or for) my help hasten. Compare the similar expressions of Ps. xxii. 20 (19.) xxxv. 22. xxxviii. 22, 23, (21, 22.) xl. 14 (13.) lxx. 2 (1.) The stronger expression my God, in the second clause, urges his covenant relation to God, as a reason for expecting to be heard.

13. They shall be shamed, they shall cease (or be consumed)—the adversaries of my soul; they shall put on (or be clothed with) reproach and disgrace—the seekers of my hurt. The verbs may also be translated as optatives, let them be shamed, etc. But this is really included in the strict sense of the future. Compare the parallel passages, Ps. xxxv. 4, 26. xl. 15 (14.) lxx. 3 (2.)

14. And I will always hope, and add to (literally add upon, accumulate, increase) all thy praise. To all thy praise which I have uttered hitherto, I will continue still to add.

15. My mouth shall recount thy righteousness, all the day (long) thy salvation, for I know not numbers (to express them), I cannot number them, they are innumerable. The righteousness or rectitude of God, including his veracity or faithfulness, is here referred to as the cause of his salvation, the salvation of which he is the source and author.

16. I will come with the mighty deeds of the Lord Jehovah; I will mention (or commemorate) thy righteousness, thine only. The first phrase may also be translated, I will enter into the mighty deeds, etc. as we speak of entering into the particulars of a sub the particulars of a subject. But this is rather an English than a Hebrew idiom. The common version, I will go in the strength of the Lord God, is at variance with the usage both of the verb and noun, as the former does not mean to go absolutely, but either to enter or to come to a particular place, expressed or understood. The ellipsis here may be supplied from Ps. v. 8 (7) and lxvi. 13, in both which places the same verb denotes the act of coming to God's house for the purpose of solemn praise, and in the second passage cited is followed by the same preposition, I will come into thy house with burnt-offerings, i. e. I will bring them thither. This sense agrees well with the vow to praise God in the two preceding verses, and with the promise of commemoration in the other clause of this verse. See above, on Ps. xx. 8 (7.) It also enables us to give the noun (גְּבוּרָה) its usual sense of God's exploits or mighty deeds. See below, Ps. cvi. 2, and compare Deut. iii. 24. Thine only, not my own or that of any creature. See above, on Ps. xliv. 4, 7 (3, 6.)

17. Oh God, thou hast taught me (to praise thee) from my youth, by thy providential dealings with me, i. e. given me occasion to celebrate thy praise, and until now I will declare, i. e. I am still declaring, still have reason to declare, thy wondrous works. See above, on Ps. ix. 2 (1.) xxvi. 7. xl. 6 (5.)

18. And also (or even) unto old-age and hoary-hairs, oh God, forsake me not, till I declare thine arm, i. e. the exertion of thy power, to the (next) generation, (and) to every one that is to come thy power. The last clause determines the sense of the indefinite expression, a generation. See above, on Ps. xxii. 31 (30.) With the phrase thy arm, compare Ps. xliv. 4 (3.)

19. And thy righteousness, oh God, (reaches) even to the height (or high place), i. e. heaven, (thou) who hast done great things, oh God, who is like thee? With the first clause compare Ps.

xxxvi. 6 (5.) lvii. 11 (10) ; with the last, Ex. xv. 11. Deut. iii. 24. 2 Sam. vii. 22.

20. (Thou) who hast showed us, made us see, i. e. caused us to experience, distresses many and severe (or many distresses and evils) wilt return (and) make us live, revive or quicken us, and from the depths of the earth wilt return (and) bring us up, make or cause us to ascend. The sudden change from the singular to the plural form, in reference to the same subject, led the authors of the masoretic punctuation to restore the singular in this verse also ; but the reading in the text is no doubt the original and true one. As the word translated depths is elsewhere invariably applied to water, some suppose an allusion to the deluge, as in Ps. xxix. 10. xxxii. 6. xxxvi. 7 (6.) Compare Isai. viii. 7, 8. The verb return, twice used here, may, agreeably to Hebrew usage, merely qualify the verbs to which it is prefixed, thou wilt quicken us again, thou wilt bring us again. But the similar expression in the next verse makes it probable, that the verb was meant to have an independent meaning, and to point out the dependence of the quickening and the restoration here expected on Jehovah's return to his forsaken people. See above, on Ps. xiv. 7.

21. Thou wilt increase my greatness, and wilt turn (and) comfort me. As the word translated greatness is elsewhere applied to the great things done by God for the protection and deliverance of his people (Ps. cxlv. 3. 2 Sam vii. 23), my greatness may have here the objective sense of great things done to or for me. See above, on v. 19, and compare Ps. xl. 6 (5.)

22. Also I will thank thee with a harp-instrument, i. e. with a harp or lyre as the instrument of praise, (for) thy truth, or as to thy truth, veracity and faithfulness ; I will play to thee, make music to thee, praise or celebrate thee, with a lyre, (thou) Holy (One) of Israel, i. e. his peculiar God, possessed of all divine perfections. See above, on Ps. xxii. 4 (3.) From this place the title has been borrowed by the prophets, and by none so frequently as by Isaiah.

23. My lips shall sing when I play to thee, and my soul which thou hast redeemed. The first clause, as above translated, seems to promise the combination of vocal and instrumental praise. But as the first verb usually means to shout or sing for joy, and sometimes simply to rejoice, and the second commonly conveys the idea not of music merely but of praise, the clause may be explained, my lips shall rejoice, for I will sing to thee (or praise thee), and my soul (shall also rejoice.) With the last clause compare Ps. xxxiv. 23 (22.)

24. Also my tongue all the day shall muse of thy righteousness, because they are ashamed, they blush—the seekers of my hurt. The verb in the first clause means to think aloud, to talk to one's self, and therefore suggests the idea both of thought and sound. It is here applied to the tongue, as the instrument by which one's thoughts are thus expressed, not to others but himself. See above, on Ps. i. 2. ii. 1. xxxv. 28. xxxvii. 30. xxxviii. 13 (12.) lxiii. 7 (6), and below, on Ps. xc. 9. The position of the subject at the end of the last clause is emphatic, as in v. 13 above. The preterite form of the verbs represents the effect as one already past, though really still future.

P S A L M L X X I I .

A GLOWING description of the reign of the Messiah, as righteous, vs. 1—7, universal, vs. 8—11, beneficent, vs. 12—14, perpetual, vs. 15—17, to which are added a doxology, vs. 18, 19, and a postscript, v. 20.

1. By Solomon. Oh God, thy judgments to the king give, and thy righteousness to the king's son. The form of expression in the first clause or title is precisely the same as in the phrase so often rendered, by David. That it designates the author, may be argued, not only from this usage, but from the fact, that the imagery of the psalm is as evidently borrowed from the peaceful and brilliant reign of Solomon, as that of the second from the martial and triumphant reign of David. The prayer in this verse is virtually a prediction, as the psalmist only asks what he knows that God will give. The judicial power, under the theocracy, was exercised in God's name and by his representatives. See Deut. i. 17. Ex. xxi. 6. xxii. 7, 8. Prov. viii. 15. 2 Chr. xix. 6. The Messiah was therefore expected to exhibit this peculiar character in its perfection. See Isai. xi. 2, 3. By the king and the king's son we are not to understand the descendants and successors of David indefinitely, but the last and greatest of them in particular.

2. He shall judge thy people with righteousness, and thy afflicted (ones) with judgment. This is stated as the necessary consequence of the granting of the prayer in the preceding verse 'Give him thy righteousness, and then he shall judge, etc' There is no need therefore of putting an optative sense upon the future, 'let him judge, etc.,' especially as it would then be necessary to extend the same construction to the verses following, and so long a series of optative expressions is without example.

3. (Then) shall the mountains bear peace for the people, and the hills, by righteousness. The effect of the divine gift asked at the beginning of the psalm is still described in this verse, under the figure of a general growth or harvest of peace, to spring up in the whole land. Bear, in the sense of bringing forth, producing. Mountains and hills are mentioned as the salient points or prominent features of the country. This was the more natural as the hills of Palestine were carefully tilled in ancient times, as appears from the terraces still visible. See above, Ps. lxxv. 13 (12), and below, Ps. cxlvii. 8, and compare Deut. xxxiii. 15 Peace, as opposed to war and its accompanying evils. This is often mentioned as a characteristic trait of the Messiah's reign. See Isai. ii. 4. ix. 6, 7 (5, 6.) xi. 9. lxxv. 25. Mic. iv. 3. Zech. ix. 10. It was typified by the peaceful reign of Solomon (1 Kings v. 4), whose very name suggests it. The hills, i. e. the hills shall bear peace or produce it. The words by righteousness belong to both clauses and denote that the peace here promised was to be the fruit of righteous government.

4. He shall judge the afflicted of the people; he shall save (or bring salvation) to the sons of the needy, and shall crush (or break in pieces) the oppressor. To judge them is to do them justice, to redress their wrongs and vindicate their rights. The afflicted of the people, those who suffer among the chosen people. The needy or the poor man is an ideal person, representing the whole class, whose individual members are described as his sons or children

5. They shall fear thee with the sun, and before the moon, generation of generations. The first verb may be construed with the sons of the needy, or taken indefinitely, men shall fear thee, which is nearly equivalent to saying, thou shalt be feared. The verb itself denotes religious reverence or awe, and is here put for worship. The object of address, here and throughout the psalm, is God, whose worship is described as one fruit of the righteous reign predicted. With the sun, as long as they have the sun with them, i. e. possess or enjoy him. Before the moon, in her presence, as long as she continues to be visible, or to afford them light. This is one of the scriptural expressions for perpetual duration, an idea which is also expressed by the idiomatic phrase, generation of generations, i. e. through all generations, or from one generation to another.

6. He shall come down like rain upon mown (grass), like showers, the watering of the earth (or land.) This beautiful comparison suggests the idea of a gentle yet refreshing and fertilizing influence, to be exerted by the king, whose reign is here foretold. The word translated showers, by its etymological affinities, suggests the idea of abundance or copiousness. The noun which follows occurs only here, but may be traced to verbal roots which mean to drop or to flow.

7. In his days shall the righteous sprout, spring up, or shoot forth, and abundance of peace, till the failure (or cessation) of the moon. The idea is the same as in vs. 3, 5, with a slight change in the form of the expression. By a lively figure, the righteous man is substituted for righteousness in the abstract, as the fruit of the earth and the productive cause of peace. The idea of perpetuity is again conveyed by repeating one of the comparisons in v. 5.

8 And he shall rule from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth. There is here an obvious allusion to the limits of the land of promise, as defined in Ex. xxiii. 31 ; but that these are not directly intended in the case before us, is clear from the mention of foreign kings and nations in the following verses. The meaning rather is, that as the realm of the theocratic kings was bounded by the Mediterranean and the Euphrates, that of the Messiah, whom they represented, should extend from sea to sea, i. e. from any sea to any other, even the most distant, or from any sea around to the same point again, and from the river (Euphrates), or from any other river, as a terminus a quo, to the ends of the earth. In other words, it should be universal. The same mode of describing the extent of Christ's dominion is adopted by the prophets. See Zech. ix. 10, and compare Am. viii. 12. Mic. vii. 12.

9. Before him shall crouch wild (men,) and his enemies the dust shall lick. The first noun denotes dwellers in the wilderness, and is applied both to brutes (Isai. xiii. 21. xxxiv. 14. Jer. l. 39) and men (Ps. lxxiv. 14.) The common version of the first verb (bow) is too weak in itself and in comparison with the parallel expression, lick the dust, implying the most unconditional and abject submission.

10. The kings of Tarshish and the Islands an oblation shall send back ; the kings of Sheba and Seba a reward shall bring near. The last noun in the first clause, and the verb in the second, are technical terms of the Mosaic law, the first denoting specially a vegetable offering, and the other the solemn act of presentation in God's presence. The use of these expressions implies that what is here described is not the mere payment of tribute or the presentation of friendly gifts, but a religious offering. It is also worthy of remark, that the verb in the first clause, and the last noun in the second, both suggest the idea, not of a simple gift, but of a recompence or requital, perhaps in allusion to the benefits which Christ was to bestow upon the nations, and of which these gifts would be a thankful acknowledgment. The verb return, however, is used elsewhere to denote the simple act of paying tribute. See 2 Kings iii. 4. xvii. 3. The proper names in this verse are mere specimens or samples of the nations generally. Tarshish is mentioned, both as a well known mart or source of wealth, and as a representative of the extreme west. The Islands, agreeably to Hebrew usage, include all distant sea-coasts, but particularly those of the Mediterranean. The distant south is represented, in like manner, by Sheba, a province of Arabia Felix, and Seba, now commonly supposed to be Meroe, a part of ancient Ethiopia, both famous for their wealth and commerce. The obvious allusion to the Queen of Sheba's visit to Jerusalem (1 Kings x. 1—10) is another stroke in this prophetic picture evidently borrowed from the times of Solomon.

11. And to him shall all kings bow (or prostrate themselves), all nations shall serve him. That the preceding verse contains only a sample of the nations over whom the Messiah was to reign, is distinctly intimated by the universal and unqualified expressions of the verse before us. The act described in the first clause is one expressive both of civil homage and religious worship. The same thing is true of the verb in the last clause, which may be applied either to the civil service of a sovereign by his subjects, or to the religious service of a deity by his worshippers. In this case, as in v. 10, both were meant to be included.

12. For he will deliver the needy crying (to him for help), and the sufferer, and him that hath no helper. The literal translation of the last clause is, and there is no one helping him, or, and there is no helper to him. By referring the pronoun to the sufferer mentioned just before, we may take this, not as the description of a third class, but as a further description of the second, the sufferer to whom there is no helper. The whole verse represents the king in question as the protector, not the oppressor, of his subjects, and assigns a reason for their tribute being represented as a requital of benefits received. See above, on v. 10.

13. He will have pity on (or spare) the poor and needy, and the souls (or lives) of the needy he will save. In the first clause the adjectives are of the singular number and properly denote the poor (man) and the needy (man). The change to the plural in the second clause, needy (ones) or needy (people), shows that the singular was not meant to denote a real individual, but rather an ideal person, representing a whole class, which is then directly designated by the plural.

14. From oppression and from violence he will redeem their soul, and precious shall their blood be in his eyes (or sight). This last is an idiomatic expression of the idea, that a person sets such a value on the life of another, that he will not suffer it to be destroyed. See below, on Ps. cxvi. 15, and compare 1 Sam. xxvi. 21. 2 Kings i. 14.

15. And he, the poor man thus delivered, shall live, shall be preserved alive, and, in token of his gratitude and willing subjection to such a sovereign, he shall give to him, as tribute, of the gold of Sheba, one of the regions mentioned in v. 10 and famous for its gold; and he, meaning still the grateful tributary, shall pray for him continually, i. e. for the progress and extension of Messiah's kingdom; all the day (long) shall he bless him, i. e. praise him, as well for what he is in himself, as for the gifts which he bestows. By some interpreters the meaning is reversed and the sentence made to signify, that the Messiah shall live again, or live forever, and give precious gifts to the believer, and by his constant intercession secure to him the blessing of Jehovah. This is a good sense in itself and appropriate to the context ; but the dubious question of construction seems to be determined by the mention of the gold of Sheba, which, in this connection, far more probably denotes the tribute of the subject than the favour of the sovereign. See above, on v. 10.

16. Let there be (but) a handful of corn in the land, in the top of the mountains ; its fruit shall wave (or shake) like Lebanon, and they shall flourish from the city like grass of the earth. The first noun in Hebrew occurs only here, and has been taken in senses directly opposite. The rabbinical tradition makes it mean a handful, the modern lexicographers a plenty, each relying on a doubtful etymology. According to the second explanation, the clause is a direct prediction of abundance and should be translated, there shall be plenty of corn in the land. According to the other and more ancient view, the verse contains a beautiful antithesis between the small beginnings and the vast results of the Messiah's kingdom, not unlike that suggested by our Saviour's parable of the grain of mustard seed. This exegetical analogy, together with the striking character imparted to the verse by this interpretation, are sufficient to entitle it to the preference, even without regard to its antiquity and traditional authority. The apocopated future (רָחַץ) may then be taken in its proper sense, as a concession or a wish, equivalent to saying, though there be but a handful of corn in the land, and that in the least favourable situation, on the top of a mountain, which though cultivated (see above, on v. 3,) must of course be colder and less fertile than the plains below. Neither wave nor shake conveys the full force of the Hebrew verb, which suggests the additional idea of a rushing noise, like that of the wind among the cedars of Lebanon. This comparison is certainly more natural and obvious than that which some interpreters assume with the grain-crops or harvest-fields of Lebanon itself. This would be merely likening one harvest to another, nor is any such allusion ever made elsewhere to the mountain, though its circumjacent plains and valleys were productive. See Hos. xiv. 5—7. The word translated flourish means originally to shine or glitter (Ps. cxxxii. 18), but is specially applied to the brilliancy of vegetation, and might therefore be translated bloom or blossom. See Num. xvii. 23 (8), and compare Ps. xc. 6, xcii. 8 (7.) ciii. 15. From the city seems to mean from Jerusalem or Zion, as the centre of Messiah's kingdom and his royal residence, out of which this productive influence was to go forth. Compare the form of expression in this clause with Num. xxiv. 19. Job v. 25.

17. His name shall be forever ; in the presence of the sun, i. e. as long as the sun shines, his name shall propagate (itself) ; and by him shall they (i. e. men in general) bless themselves ; all nations shall felicitate him (or pronounce him happy.) The form of expression in the second clause is borrowed from the patriarchal promises (Gen. xii. 3. xviii. 18. xxviii. 14), and is intended to suggest the idea there expressed, that the Messiah should be not only blessed himself, but a source of blessing to all nations. As the happiness of the parent is bound up in that of the children, and the prosperity of the sovereign inseparable from that of the subjects, the one part of this prediction necessarily implies the other. If the head is blessed, so must be the members, the whole body. If all nations are to call Messiah blessed, it must be because he is the author and the giver of their own prosperity, nay more, of their salvation.

18, 19. Blessed (be) Jehovah, God, the God of Israel, doing wonders alone, and blessed (be) his glorious name to eternity, and filled with his glory be the whole earth. Amen and Amen. This is commonly explained as a doxology belonging, not to this psalm, but to the second book, of which it marks the close. See above, on Ps. xli. 14 (13.) But as the psalm would end somewhat abruptly with the foregoing verse, and as this addition carries out the idea there expressed, by giving, as it were, the very words in which the nations shall pronounce him blessed, we have reason to believe that the doxology was added by the author, and that this conclusion of the psalm was not the effect but the occasion of its being placed at the close of one of the traditional divisions of the psalter. The wish in the second clause of v. 19 is borrowed from the promise in Num. xiv. 21, of which this whole psalm is in fact a prolonged echo.

20. Ended are the prayers of David, Son of Jesse. The position of this sentence after the doxology, and its prosaic form, show that it forms no part of the psalm, but relates to the whole series preceding. It does not therefore prove, as some suppose, that Solomon was not the author of the seventy-second psalm, since this exception and a very few others could not prevent the collection being called the prayers of David. A potiori fit denominatio. In like manner, the whole Psalter is still called the Psalm of David by many who believe it to contain some psalms by other writers. That this is the conclusion of an original and separate collection, is by no means probable, as there is no historical proof that such collections ever existed, and it would not be easy to account for the omission of so many psalms undoubtedly composed by David. On the whole, it is most probable, that these words were added to the first great subdivision of the whole collection, as entirely composed of psalms by David and his contemporaries, with a few added to them on account of some marked similarity in form or substance. The only remaining supposition is that these words are part of the original composition, and were added by Solomon to show that what he here predicts would be the fulfilment of his father's wishes and the answer to his prayers. The objection to this, besides the form and position of the verse itself, is, that the verb is never used to denote fulfilment or accomplishment, except in the Hebrew of the later books. See Ezra i. 1 Dan. xii. 7.

PSALM LXXIII.

1 A Psalm. By Asaph. Only good to Israel (is) God, to the pure of heart. This last expression is added to limit or explain the application of the national name Israel, as here denoting not the race or nation, simply as such considered, but the true Israel, the sincere and spiritual members of the ancient church. To these God is good, and only good, i. e. never otherwise, never unmerciful, or even indifferent. This is the theme of the whole psalm, and the peculiar form in which it is propounded has reference to the previous conflicts and misgivings of the Psalmist, through which he had passed in reaching the conviction here expressed. As if he had said, 'I once thought otherwise, but now I know that God is only good, and always good, to the true Israel, his real people.' He then goes on to describe the conflicts thus tacitly referred to, first, by a statement of the facts out of which they sprang, vs. 2—11, then of the effect which these produced upon his mind, vs. 12—16, and then of the means by which he had been disabused, vs. 17—20, and under the influence of which he now condemns his own irrationality vs. 21—22, adores the grace by which he had been rescued from the consequences of his error, vs. 23—24, and concludes with an expression of his hearty reliance upon that grace for his safety and happiness hereafter, vs. 25—28. There is not the slightest ground for doubting the correctness of the title, which ascribes the psalm to Asaph, the contemporary of David and his chief musician, and himself moreover an inspired Psalmist. This last fact, which is matter of recorded history (see above, on Ps. l. 1), together with the fact that where only one name is mentioned in the title of a psalm it is uniformly that of the writer, may suffice to set aside the supposition, that Asaph is only named as the performer.

2. And I (or as for me), my feet were almost gone, my steps had well nigh slipped. The pronoun in the first clause is emphatic. I, who so confidently make this profession of my faith in God's unchanging goodness, am one whose feet were almost gone, literally, inclined or bent, either from the straight course or from an erect position. See above, on Ps. lxii. 3 (2), where the same verb is applied to a wall inclined or bent by violence. The phrases rendered almost and well nigh strictly mean like little and like nothing, and imply that it wanted little or nothing of a fearful fall on his part, in other words, that he had narrowly escaped it. Slipped, literally, poured out, which seems to be a figure both for weakness and divergence. Instead of pursuing a direct course, or remaining in a firm position, his steps were scattered and without effect, like water poured upon the ground. See above, on Ps. xxii. 15 (14.)

3. For I was envious at the proud ; the peace of wicked (men) I see (and must see.) He now proceeds to state more distinctly the nature of the fall from which he had so narrowly escaped. It was the sin and folly of denying the justice and fidelity of God because of providential inequalities and mysteries. The proud or insolent, a general description of the wicked, as in Ps. v. 5 (4.) The common version in both places (foolish) is less probable, but does not materially change the sense. In the last clause, he reverts to his experience at an earlier date, and expresses himself as he might have done at that time. This relation of the clauses may be rendered clearer by supplying a word or phrase between them 'I was envious at the proud (and said), the peace,' etc

Peace, as the negation and the opposite of all disturbing causes, really suggests the idea of prosperity in general. The future form of the verb has respect, not to the date of composition, but to that of the events recorded, when the Psalmist not only saw, but expected long to see, the undisturbed prosperity of sinners.

4. For there are no bands at their death; and fat, i. e. healthy or robust, (is) their strength. Some understand the first clause to mean that they are not bound or forced to die like other men. The more obvious sense is, that when they do die, they are not in bonds or chains like other men, but free, common figures for distress or suffering and its opposite.

5. In the labour of man they are not, they are not partakers in the common troubles of humanity, and with mankind they are not smitten (or afflicted.) The use of the future is precisely the same as in v. 3. They are not, and to all appearance never will be, sharers in the common calamities of life.

* 6. Therefore pride has enchained them, the garb of violence (injustice or cruelty) covers them. The first verb strictly means to encircle or adorn the neck, perhaps with allusion to the carriage of that member as indicative of pride. See Isai. iii. 16. Job xv. 26.

7. Their eyes stand out with fatness; the imaginations of the heart pass (out, come forth, or are disclosed.) The common version of the last clause, they have more than heart could wish, assumes as the literal meaning of the words, they surpass the desires of their heart. According to the other construction above given, the meaning is that as their eyes stand out with fatness, so their hearts overflow with evil thoughts. Compare Matt. xii. 35 xv. 19. Mark vii. 21. Luke ii. 35. vi. 45.

8. They mock and speak in wickedness (or malice) ; oppression from on high they speak. To speak oppression is to speak words tending to the injury of others. From on high, proudly, with arrogant contempt of others. They speak as if from a superior position.

9. They set their mouth in heaven, and their tongue goes on earth. The idea in the first clause is the same as in the last clause of the foregoing verse. They speak as if they thought themselves superior beings, their mouth in heaven and their tongue on earth. Goes, runs, is actively employed.

10. Therefore he brings back his people hither, and waters of fulness are wrung out to them (or drained by them.) This obscure verse admits of several interpretations, the most natural of which understands the sense to be, that God still suffers or requires his people to survey the painful spectacle and drain the bitter draught presented by the undisturbed prosperity of wicked men. According to the masoretic reading in the margin of the Hebrew Bible, the first verb is intransitive, his people shall (or must) return hither. See above, on Ps. xiv. 7. liii. 7 (6.)

11. And they say, how should God know, and (how) can there be knowledge in the Highest? Some interpreters regard these as the words of the prosperous sinners whom he has been describing. But according to the sense just put upon the tenth verse, the eleventh must express the misgivings of God's people, with respect to the providential inequalities in question. When still brought back to the sight of these, they are constrained to ask how they can possibly be reconciled with the hypothesis of God's omniscience. This is much more natural than to suppose that the sinners themselves admit the being of a God, and yet gratuitously question his omniscience. In the latter case the how would be unmeaning ; in the former, it is the most natural expression of the doubt supposed. An atheist, whether theoretical or practical, would hardly ask, how can God know? Even a wicked theist would be rather apt to say, he does not know. But nothing can be more appropriate in the mouth of a perplexed and tempted believer than the question, how can God know this and yet suffer it?

12. Lo, these are wicked (men), and (yet they are) secure forever, they increase strength (or substance.) These are still the words of the perplexed believer, expressing his surprise at the prosperity of sinners. See, these are wicked men, and yet instead of being wretched, or prospering only for a little while, they are prosperers of eternity, perpetually prospered and at ease, secure from change. See above, on Ps. xxx. 7. Instead of losing what they have, they still gain more, and go on adding to their wealth and to the power which it gives them. See above, on Ps. lx. 14 (12.)

13. Only (in) vain have I cleansed my heart, and in innocence have washed my hands. These may be taken either indefinitely as the words of any person in the painful situation just described, or more specifically as the words of the psalmist, by whom the whole class was in fact represented. They contain the inference which would be naturally drawn in such a situation, even by a true believer, but one tempted to repine and doubt by the sight of providential enigmas. 'Since then it is the wicked who enjoy God's favour, all my efforts to avoid sin and to do his will have been gratuitous and fruitless.' With the first words of the verse compare Ps. xxxix. 6, 12 (5, 11.)

14. And I have been smitten all the day, and my chastisement (has been inflicted) every morning, literally, at (or in) the mornings. A similar form of expression occurs twice in Job vii. 18. Smitten, literally touched, i. e. by the hand of God, a common expression for affliction, and especially for bodily disease considered as a divine judgment. The same idea was meant to be conveyed by the common version (plagued.) The psalmist here contrasts his own afflictions with the undisturbed enjoyments of his wicked neighbours. 'While they, though wicked, still increase in wealth and seem secure for ever, I, who have faithfully endeavoured to avoid sin and to do the will of God, am subjected every day and all day, to privation and distress.'

15. If I have said, I will declare thus, behold, the generation of thy sons I have perfidiously treated. This is equivalent to saying, if I did say so, I should be acting falsely towards thy children. It is indeed the only Hebrew form in which such a hypothetical proposition could well be clothed. Said, i. e. to myself, proposed it, formed the purpose. Thus declare, i. e. publicly express my doubts and skeptical misgivings. This, as it has been well observed, the true believer never does, until he is able to announce his conflict and his victory together. Behold or lo is here equivalent to our idiomatic why then, meaning in that case or on that supposition, and expressing at the same time some surprise at his own suggestion as a strange one. The generation of thy sons, the contemporary race of true believers, called the sons of God, not only as the objects of his love, but as partakers of his nature (2 Pet. i. 4.) Treated perfidiously, proved false to them, by weakening the foundation of their hope, instead of strengthening their faith and allaying their misgivings. See above, on Ps. xxv. 3.

16. And I meditated to know this ; a trouble (was) it in my eyes. Although he abstained from openly expressing what he thought, he still did think, he pondered the whole matter, with a view to understand it, to discover some solution of the mystery, which not only puzzled but distressed him. The apparent inequality of God's providential dealings was a toil, a trouble, an unhappiness, in his esteem.

17. Until I come to the sanctuaries of God, I will consider (or observe) their end. The futures have reference, as in vs. 3, 5, to the date of the anterior experience here recorded. 'But I said to myself, I will wait till I come into God's presence and inquire of him, and then, or in the mean time, I will look at or attend to the end as well as the beginning and the progress of their lives.' The plural form holy places, is the same as in Ps. lxxviii. 36 (35.) It denotes the sanctuary in its whole extent, as the earthly residence of God, and the place where he communed with his people. See above, on Ps. xxviii. 2.

18. Only in slippery places thou wilt set them, or art setting them, (and now) thou hast let (or made) them fall into destruction. However honourable and happy their position may appear to themselves, the psalmist can see nothing but its danger, as implied in his use of the word only. Smoothnesses, smooth or slippery places, where their foot-hold is precarious and their fall inevitable. He sees God, by his providential favours, placing them in this desired but fearful situation, and then allowing them to drop into destruction. The last word in Hebrew occurs only here and in the next psalm, where it means ruins. If this sense be adopted here, we must suppose a change of figure and an allusion to the fall, not of a man from a slippery precipice, but of a building crumbled by decay or violence.

19. How are they (brought) to desolation as (in) a moment! They have ceased, they are consumed with terrors! He here expresses his surprise at the abruptness and completeness of their ruin. The meaning of the last clause seems to be, that their very apprehensions were sufficient to destroy them, much more the actual experience of what they apprehended.

20. As a dream on waking, Lord, in waking, their image thou wilt scorn. The word translated image means an appearance, as opposed to the substance or reality. See above, on Ps. xxxix 7 (6.) The present prosperity of wicked men will seem hereafter, and to God's eye now seems, like an empty dream, worthy only of contemptuous oblivion. The only dubious expression in the verse is that translated waking in the second clause, which is entirely different from the one so rendered in the first clause. The Hebrew phrase (רָעַרָה) is used in more than fifty other places, and in all of them means in the city. See, for example, Ps. lv. 10 (9.) This meaning is retained by some interpreters in the case before us. The reference will then be either to the holy city, as in Ps. lxxii. 16, or to the city where the previous scene is supposed to have been laid, as in Ps. xxxi. 22 (21.) The old interpretation takes the word as an infinitive, from a verb which, however, is always transitive and means to awaken, except perhaps in Job viii. 6 and in Ps. xxxv. 23 above. To this interpretation it is furthermore objected, that it supposes an unusual contraction (רָעַרָה for רָעַרָה), and that the sense which it conveys is an incongruous one. But that God should despise them in the act of waking is, to say the least, as intelligible as that he should despise them in the city. In either case, the general meaning of the sentence is too clear to be mistaken.

21. For my heart is soured, and (in or as to) my reins I am pierced. The Hebrew verbs are of the future form, although really relating to past time, which the psalmist's memory recalls as a state of things then likely to continue. See above on vs. 3, 5. The verbs are also properly reflexives, my heart exacerbates itself, I pierce myself, and are perhaps intended to describe his sufferings as the fruit of his own sin and folly.

22. And I (am) brutish and know not (the true state of the case); a beast have I been with thee. The last noun is in the plural number (beasts), as if to signify a beast by way of eminence, in which sense it is literally applied to one of the wonders of the animal kingdom (Job xl. 15.) With the first clause compare Prov. xxx. 2, and see above, on Ps. xlix. 11 (10.) These strong expressions contain an acknowledgment of his own irrationality in questioning God's faithfulness and kindness. In this verse there is an insensible transition from the present to the past, from the ideal to the real time of the events in question. With thee suggests an aggravating circumstance, to wit, that this folly was committed in the presence of God, and as it were in his society. See above, on Ps. xviii. 26, 27 (25, 26.)

23. And (yet) I (am) still with thee; thou hast held (me) by my right hand. Notwithstanding his ungrateful and irrational conduct in God's presence, he had not been driven from it, as he justly might have been. The word translated still properly means always, and denotes that there had been no change or interruption in the previous relation of the parties. There is a perfectly analogous usage of the French toujours. In the last clause he seems to return to the metaphor with which he set out. As the fatal error which he had escaped is in v. 2 represented as a fall, so here his preservation from it is ascribed to God's having held him up by his right hand. See above, on Ps. xvii. 5. xli. 13 (12.) lxiii. 9 (8.)

24. In (or by) thy counsel thou wilt guide me, and after glory thou wilt take me. The form of the original is such that it may either express consent or confident expectation; but the latter in this case really includes the former. By thy counsel, thy instruction and advice, considered as a means of safety; or in thy counsel, i. e. in the execution of thy plan or purpose, as the end to be accomplished. The last clause is obscure. To the common version (and afterward receive me to glory) it has been objected, that it takes the preposition after as an adverb, and assumes an unusual sense and construction of the verb, and also that it makes the guidance and the glory too distinct and successive. The construction which it is proposed to substitute is, thou wilt take me after glory, i. e. make me overtake it, cause me to attain it, bring me to it. The same construction may be made to yield another sense, to wit, after honouring me here thou wilt receive me to thyself, after honour thou wilt take me. This, it is true, is liable to some of the objections brought against the usual construction. But the choice at best is one of difficulties, and some of the objections spring entirely from the wish to exclude a reference to a future state, which, however, is as evident in this verse as it is in vs. 16, 19, if interpreted in any natural and reasonable manner.

25. Whom have I in heaven? And with thee I have not desired (any) upon earth. The literal translation of the first clause is, who (is) to me in heaven, i. e. what protector or provider? The idea of another besides God may be supplied in this clause from the next, where with thee can denote either combination or comparison. I have desired none in addition or in preference to thee; thou art alone and all-sufficient.

26. Spent is my flesh and my heart; the rock of my heart and my portion (is) God to eternity. The first clause is by some understood as meaning even if or even when my flesh, etc. But the Psalmist rather assumes the actual occurrence of the extreme case here described, or places himself in it as an ideal situation. Flesh and heart, body and soul, the whole man, or the whole life, outward and inward, bodily and mental. The rock of my heart, the support of my life, that on which it rests as on a solid basis. The idea is not simply that of strength but of a strong foundation. See above, on Ps. xviii. 3 (2.) My portion, the source of my subsistence and my happiness. See above, on Ps. xvi. 5, and with the whole verse compare Job xix. 25—27.

27. For lo, those far from thee shall perish; thou hast destroyed

all (or every one) whoring from thee. This verse assigns his reason for relying upon God and making him his portion. Those far from thee, literally, thy far (ones). They certainly will perish, for all such have perished heretofore. The union between God and his people being often represented by the figure of a conjugal relation, their violation of the covenant is spoken of as spiritual whoredom or adultery. See above on Ps. xlv. 1, and compare Lev. xx. 6. Num. xiv. 33. In the same sense our Saviour calls the unfaithful Israel of his day a wicked and adulterous generation. See Matt. xii. 39. xvi. 4. Mark viii. 38. The persons threatened with destruction here are not merely sinners in general, but the wicked members of the ancient church or chosen people in particular.

28. And I, or as for me—the approach of God to me (is) good; I have placed in the Lord Jehovah my trust, to declare all thy doings. The absolute nominative at the beginning puts himself in strong contrast with the apostates of the foregoing verse. Compare the beginning of vs. 2, 23, above. The nearness or approach of God is an ambiguous expression, as in Isai. lviii. 2, where it may either mean God's drawing near to the people or their drawing near to him. In the case before us both may be implied, as in James iv. 8 both are expressed, Draw nigh to God and he will draw nigh to you. To me may be connected either with approach, as in Ps. xxvii. 2, or with good, as in v. 1 above. Good is here to be taken in the absolute sense of the summum bonum or chief good. The meaning is not merely that nearness to God is a good thing in itself, or a useful thing to man, but that it comprehends whatever he can wish or hope for. 'Let apostates wander far from God and perish; I am resolved to seek my highest happiness in being near him.' The Lord Jehovah is a combination expressive of God's sovereignty, self-existence, and covenant relation to his people. My trust, my hiding-place or refuge. See above, on Ps. xi. 1. The last clause shows that he wishes to be something more than a mere passive beneficiary. He desires not only to enjoy but to celebrate God's goodness. The word translated doings is applied both to acts and to affairs or business.

PSALM LXXIV.

THE church prays for deliverance from extreme distress, enforcing the petition, first by a description of the actual state of things, vs. 1—12, and then by an appeal to former mercies, vs. 13—23. The historical occasion is not given, but the terms of the description seem peculiarly appropriate to the state of Judah after the destruction of the temple and the holy city by the Babylonians, as described in Jer. lii. 12—34.

1. Maschil. By Asaph. Why, oh God, hast thou cast off forever, smokes thy wrath at the flock of thy pasture? The description of the psalm as a didactic one shows that it was not meant to be used in reference to its original occasion merely, but in every emergency resembling it. For this reason the question, what that occasion was, is of little exegetical importance, although not without interest in connection with the critical inquiry as to the date of composition. The state of things assumed, and indeed described, is so unlike that which existed in the time of David, that we must either make the psalm prophetic, which is arbitrary and without analogy, or no less arbitrarily reject the title as a spurious addition to the text, or understand by Asaph the descendants of David's Chief Musician, among whom the gift and office of their ancestor were hereditary. See above, on Ps

l. 1, and compare 2 Chron. xxxv. 15. Ezr. ii. 41. iii. 10. Neh. vii. 44. xi. 22. That this title indicates the author, and not merely the performer, can only be inferred from the general fact, that where a single name is given it is usually that of the writer. See above on Ps. xlii. 1. lxxii. 1. The interrogation in this verse does not involve a disavowal of guilt or ill-desert, but is rather a passionate expostulation and indirect petition for deliverance. Cast off, a verb implying abhorrence and disgust. See above, on Ps. xliii. 2. xlv. 10, 24 (9, 23.) lx. 3, 12 (1, 10.) As the object is easily supplied, namely, us or thy people, its omission adds to the strength of the expression. Cast off forever, as it seems to us and others. Why hast thou cast us off with what appears to be a final and perpetual rejection? See above, on Ps. xiii. 2 (1.) The interrogation is continued throughout the sentence. (Why) smokes or will smoke? The future form suggests the same idea as the forever in the other clause. ‘Why is thy wrath to continue smoking?’ The presence of smoke presupposes that of fire; but the former is particularly mentioned, perhaps for the purpose of adding to the primary idea of distress or destruction the secondary one of gloom and terror. At or against thy people, literally, in, among them. See below on Ps. lxxx. 5 (4), and compare Deut. xxix. 19 (20.) The sheep (or flock) of thy pasture, those who feed upon thy pasture, or are fed by thee, a favourite designation of the chosen people, as the occupants of the Land of Promise. The figurative form of the description was originally furnished by the pastoral experience of David, but from him was borrowed by other sacred writers. See below, Ps. lxxix. 13. c. 3.

2. Remember thy congregation thou hast purchased of old (and) redeemed the rod of thine inheritance, this Mount Zion thou hast dwelt in. The ellipsis of the relative in both the clauses of this verse is common to the Hebrew and the English idiom. The word translated congregation is one of those applied in the Old Testament to Israel as an organized body and the people of Jehovah. See above, on Ps. i. 5. Purchased, acquired, made thine own. The word translated of old is a noun meaning antiquity, but here used as an adverb of time. The full phrase occurs below in v. 12. The next verb contains a specification of the first, to wit, that he purchased by redeeming them from bondage, with particular reference to the exodus from Egypt. The rod of thine inheritance is a phrase which, to any Hebrew reader, would suggest the twofold idea of a chieftain's staff, the badge of authority in the several tribes, and that of a measuring rod, here put for the portion of land measured. The whole sense conveyed by these associations is that of a definite province, with its population, of which God is the possessor and the sovereign. The last clause applies what had been said of the people and the land still more specifically to the central point of the theocracy. Mount Zion may be understood as a description of the whole of Jerusalem, including the temple upon Mount Moriah. This Mount Zion, with which the speakers were familiar, and at or near which they are supposed to be speaking. The explanation of this as a relative is gratuitous, nor could the idea (this Mount Zion) have been well expressed in any other form of Hebrew words. The grand distinction of Mount Zion, in the wide sense just explained, was the inhabitation of Jehovah, which is therefore here expressly mentioned in the closing words.

3. Lift thy steps to the perpetual ruins, all the enemy has ill done in the holy place. The first phrase is a poetical expression meaning simply advance, draw near, for the purpose of inspection. The word translated ruins occurs only here and in Ps. lxxiii. 18. The whole phrase strictly means ruins of perpetuity, i. e. such as appear likely to continue forever, and will certainly do so, unless God comply with this request to draw near. The construction of the second clause adopted by some writers, the enemy has destroyed all (or every thing) in the holy place, is scarcely grammatical

To express that idea, the word all would have the article, as in Ps. xiv. 3, or a suffix, as in Ps. xxix. 9, whereas its intimate connection here with the following verb in Hebrew is equivalent to a relative construction. All done, injured or destroyed, done mischief.

4. Thine adversaries have roared in the midst of thine assembly; they have set their signs (as) signs. The tumultuous violence of the destroyers is described in the first clause by a figure borrowed from the habits of wild beasts, and elsewhere used as an expression of extreme distress. See above, on Ps. xxii. 2 (1.) xxxii. 3. xxxviii. 9 (8.) The word translated assembly is not the same that is rendered congregation in v. 2, but one that strictly means a meeting by mutual agreement or appointment, and is specially applied to the meeting between God and his people at the sanctuary, which was therefore designated in the law as the tent of meeting (אֶהָל מוֹעֵד), not merely the tent where the people assembled, but the place where they met with God by previous appointment. See Ex. xxv. 8. xxix. 42, 43, 45, 46. Num. xvii. 19 (4.) The ideas suggested by the etymology and usage of the Hebrew noun are those of previous appointment, the act of meeting consequent upon it, the persons met, and the place where they assemble. The full sense therefore of the phrase here used is, 'in the midst of thy people assembled at the appointed time and place to meet thee' The exclusive local meaning put by some upon the words is quite gratuitous. The plural form which some assume (thine assemblies) varies the meaning only by suggesting the idea of repeated convocations, 'in the midst of thy people, whenever (or as often as) they meet thee thus,' but without at all conveying the idea of numerous or even different places. Set, fixed, established; or set up, exhibited, exposed to view. See above, on Ps. xviii. 44 (43.) xxxix. 9 (8.) xliv. 14, 15 (13, 14.) The common version of the last words, ensigns for signs, conveys a false impression of the form of the original, in which the two nouns are identical. The word signs does not necessarily denote either military or religious ensigns, but rather signifies in general the insignia of sovereignty. For all that once marked the presence and authority of God the impious enemy had substituted the signs or tokens of their own ascendancy. In other words, they had usurped God's place in his very sanctuary, the spot which he had chosen for his earthly residence.

5. He is known (or shall be known) as (one) raising on high, in the thicket of the wood, axes. The most probable sense of this obscure verse is as follows: the ruthless enemy is known or recognised as dealing with the sanctuary no more tenderly than a woodman with the forest which he fells. On high seems to be added to suggest the force of the blow and the sweep of the arm which deals it. The thicket may be mentioned for the purpose of contrasting the delicate and complicated wood-work of the temple with the worthless undergrowth which the woodman cuts away without scruple or discrimination. The word translated wood is often used as a collective meaning trees.

6. And now the carvings thereof together (or at once) with sledge and hammers they beat (down). This completes the comparison begun in the preceding verse, with which the one before us is connected by the phrase and now, i. e. in this case. As in the case supposed the woodman deals with trees and thickets, so in the real case the spoiler deals with the costly fruits of art and skill. The word translated carvings is expressly used in the description of the temple. See 1 Kings vi. 29, and compare Ex xxviii. 11. xxxix. 6. The suffix (thereof) has no grammatical antecedent in the sentence; the form was probably determined by a word not expressed though present to the writer's mind. At once does not mean quickly, suddenly, without delay, but all together, indiscriminately, in confusion.

7. They have set on fire thy holy place ; to the earth they have profaned the dwelling of thy name. The literal translation of the first clause is, they have sent (or cast) into the fire thy holy place. The construction in the last clause is a pregnant one, profaned to the earth, i. e. profaned by casting to the ground a sacred edifice. This form of expression would be inappropriate to mere profanation by defilement, without actual prostration of the edifice itself.

8. They have said in their heart, let us destroy them together (or at once) ; they have burned all the assemblies of God in the land, by burning the only place where such assemblies could be held (Deut. xii. 5, 11.) Others, with less probability, suppose that the Hebrew word itself denotes the place of assembly, and that all such places means the only such place. The translation synagogues has no authority from Hebrew usage, or the ancient versions (LXX. ἐορτάς Vulg. dies festos. Jer. solemnitates), and has been abused to prove that the psalm was written after the Babylonish exile, before which synagogues are commonly supposed to have had no existence.

9. Our signs we see not ; there is no more (any) prophet, and (there is) not with us (any one) knowing until what time, or how long, these things are to last. By signs we are here to understand the tokens of God's presence and of Israel's peculiar relation to him. One of these is then specified, to wit, the gift of prophecy, which seemed to cease at the time of the Babylonian conquest, although afterwards renewed. Even Jeremiah's ministry may be considered as then closing. The complaint of this, as of a recent loss, shows that the period meant is not that of the persecutions under Antiochus Epiphanes, when the gift of prophecy had been withdrawn for many generations.

10. Till when, oh God, shall the foe revile, the enemy contemn thy name forever ? By making the last clause a distinct interrogation (shall the enemy despise thy name forever?) we avoid the solecism of combining how long and forever; but this can occasion no more difficulty here than in v. 1 and in Ps. xiii. 2 (1.) The verb in the last clause means to treat contemptuously, to show contempt by word or deed. Blaspheme expresses only one mode of doing this, and that too strongly.

11. Why wilt thou withdraw thy hand and thy right hand? From the midst of thy bosom (draw it and) consume (them.) The future here includes the present (why dost thou withdraw thy hand?) with the additional idea of continuance or perseverance in so doing. The hand, and especially the right hand, is the seat and symbol of strength. The and between them is equivalent to the English even. To make the hand return, or draw it back, is to cease from action, the continuance of which cessation is described as hiding it in the bosom.

12. And God (is) my king of old, working salvations in the midst of the land. Having pleaded the greatness of the danger and distress, as a reason for imploring the divine interposition, the church now pleads her covenant relation to him as her Sovereign and her Saviour in former emergencies, with particular reference to the plagues of Egypt, which makes it probable that land and not earth is the true translation of the last word. The very form of expression is borrowed from the narrative of Moses. See Ex. viii. 18 (22.) Doing, working, as opposed to a mere promise or prediction. The participle signifies continued action, and extends the description beyond the particular occasion specially referred to. God is described as He who, then and ever, works salvations or deliverances, the plural form implying fulness and variety. See above, on Ps xviii. 51 (50.) xxviii. 8. xlii. 6, 12 (5, 11.) xliii. 5. liii. 7.

13. Thou hast burst, with thy strength, the sea; thou hast bro- ken the heads of dragons on the water. The word translated dragons is applied to the largest class of aquatic animals. Some suppose these to be here emblematic of Egypt and other hostile powers, as in Ez. xxix. 3, 4. Isai. li. 9, 10. Others, with more probability, explain the verse as a description of God's power over nature, and particularly over the sea, as specially manifested in the passage of the Red Sea. The dragons or sea-monsters are then added merely to complete the picture. As if he had said, 'thou hast subdued and crushed the sea and its most terrible inhabitants.' This is described as taking place, not in or under the waters, the abode of the sea-monsters, but on the surface, where the contest becomes visible. The pronoun at the beginning is emphatic: 'it is thou that hast done all this, and not another.'

14. (It is) thou (that) hast crushed the heads of Leviathan, (that) wilt give him (as) food to the people, to the wild men, or the dwellers in the desert. See above, on Ps. lxxii. 9. Leviathan, according to its etymology, denotes a coiled or crooked serpent, but like dragon in v. 13, is used as a generic term for huge aquatic animals. Having no plural form, it is here used in a collective sense, as appears from the expression heads, unless we understand this as denoting a many-headed monster, to which, however, there is no analogy in Scripture. In the last clause, people seems to mean men in general, and is then rendered definite by the use of the specific term which follows. By the people of the desert some understand the savage beasts, by whom the Egyptians were devoured after the overthrow of Pharaoh; others, with more probability, the wild men living on the shores of the Red Sea, and subsisting on its fish, and hence called by the Greeks the Ichthyophagi. The transition from the past tense to the future seems to represent the scene as actually passing, or the act as one that may be frequently repeated. 'It is thou that hast done all this and wilt do it again.'

15. (It is) thou (that) didst cleave fount and flood, (that) didst dry up rivers ever-flowing. Fountain and flood is a kind of proverbial expression for smaller and greater bodies of water. The primary historical allusion here is to the passage of the Jordan. The original construction of the last phrase is streams of perpetuity, perennial or unfailing streams, as distinguished from the winter torrents of the Holy Land, which disappear in summer. The common version, rivers of strength or mighty rivers, is not sustained by etymology or usage.

16. To thee (belongs) day, yea, to thee night; THOU hast prepared light and sun. From the mention of God's actual control over the elements, as exercised in certain memorable cases, the Psalmist here proceeds to assert his sovereignty by right of creation. Not only day but night, which seems to sense beyond the reach of government or regulation, is subject to God's power Thou, and no other, as in the three preceding verses. Prepared for the place which they now fill and the work which they perform. Light and sun are related as the genus and the species, like hand and right hand in v. 11, signs and prophet in v. 9. Light, in the local sense of luminary, which the same Hebrew word has in Gen. i. 14—16.

17. THOU hast set (or established) all the bounds of earth; summer and winter—thou hast formed them. This is the seventh emphatic repetition of the pronoun thou. The bounds of earth are supposed by some to be the limits of the land, by which it is separated from the sea. See above, on Ps. xxiv. 2. The description of God's power over nature is completed by referring to it the revolution of the seasons as not only appointed but created by him. He is not only the ordainer of the change itself, but the author of the causes which produce it.

18. Remember this; an enemy has reviled Jehovah, and a fool.

ish people have contemned thy name. For the meaning of the verbs see above, on v. 10, where the same facts are alleged, but are here recalled to God's remembrance as a reason for his interposition. Jehovah may also be construed as a vocative, which makes the parallelism more exact. Foolish, in the strong sense of that word, as used in Scripture, to denote the irrationality of sin. See above, on Ps. xiv. 1, and compare Deut. xxxii. 6, from which place the whole phrase is borrowed.

19. Give not to the greedy herd thy turtle-dove : the herd of thy afflicted (ones) forget not forever ! The general import of this prayer is obvious, and the only doubtful point is the precise sense of the word (תַּרְיִוָּה) twice translated herd above. It usually means an animal or living thing, and more especially a wild beast, as distinguished from domesticated cattle. This would yield a good sense in the first clause (greedy beast), but is inadmissible in the other. The same objection lies against the explanation of the first as meaning life and the last as meaning flock. The only meaning equally admissible in both parts of the sentence is the one just mentioned, that of animal collectively, and then a flock or herd of animals, from which it is sometimes transferred to human subjects. See above, on Ps. lxxviii. 11 (10.) Greedy herd, literally, herd of appetite. See above, on Ps. xxvii. 12. xli. 3 (2.) The turtle-dove is here used as an emblem of innocence and helplessness, as well as an expression of affectionate endearment.

20. Look to the covenant ; for filled are the darknesses of earth with homes of violence (or cruelty.) The prayer in the first clause is equivalent to saying, Remember thy promise, fulfill thy covenant engagements. The reason assigned is, that the existing state of things is such as to require this fulfilment. The word translated darknesses has the form of a local noun, and may therefore mean dark places, not in the sense of hiding places, but in that of gloomy dismal places. The same idea, of distress and gloom, which is always included in the sense of the word elsewhere, may be obtained by making it an abstract, darkness, or supposing the plural form to be emphatic, profound darkness not as an attribute of certain places, but of the whole earth. As if he had said, the darkness of the earth, or this dark world, is filled with homes of cruelty. This word (עֲזָרָה), here as elsewhere, comprehends the two ideas of injustice and violence. See above, on Ps. vii. 17 (16.) xviii. 49 (48.) The use of the word homes (or habitations) indicates that violence or cruelty is there domesticated, permanently resident. See above, on Ps. xxv. 13. The meaning of the whole verse, thus explained, is, that the permanent establishment and prevalence of "wrong and outrage" in the darkness of the world may be urged as a reason for the fulfilment of God's promise, nay, his solemn oath, that the whole earth shall be filled with his glory (Num. xiv. 21.)

21. Let not the oppressed turn back confounded; let the sufferer and the poor (man) praise thy name. The word translated oppressed means strictly broken, bruised, or crushed. See above, on Ps. ix. 10 (9.) x. 18. Turn back, abandon his pursuit, retire in despair. Confounded, disappointed, put to shame, by the frustration of his hopes and wishes. See above, on Ps. xxxv. 4. xl. 15 (14.) lxix. 7 (6.) lxx. 3 (2.)

22. Arise, oh God! Plead thine own cause! Remember thy reviling by the fool all day! The first prayer is the common one, that God would put an end to his apparent inaction and indifference to the sufferings of his servants. See above, on Ps. iii. 3 (7.) vii. 7 (6.) ix. 20 (19.) x. 12. xvii. 13. xxxv. 2. xlv. 27 (26.) Plead thine own cause, literally, strive thy strife. See above, on Ps. xliii. 1. 'Remember how thou art reviled by the irrational transgressor, and arouse thyself to silence his reproaches'

23. Forget not the voice of thy foes, the noise of thy assailants, ascending always. The voice and noise here meant are the clamorous revilings and blasphemies of wicked men, continually going up into the ears of God, and calling down his wrath upon them. This striking figure, representing gross sin as a vocal and audible witness against him who commits it, is a common one in Scripture from the earliest books downwards. See Gen. iv. 10. xviii. 21. xix. 13, and compare Jon. i. 2. Thy assailants, or more literally, thy insurgents, those who rise up against thee, in the way not only of attack but of rebellion. See above, on Ps. iii. 2 (1.) xviii. 40, 49 (39, 48.) xlv. 6 (5), and compare Ex. xv. 7. Deut. xxxiii. 11. 2 Sam. xxii. 49. All this the Psalmist, or rather the Church, in whose behalf he speaks, recalls to the divine remembrance, as a ground or reason for immediate interference.

PSALM LXXV.

.. To the Chief Musician. Al-tashheth. A Psalm by Asaph
A song (of praise.) See above, on Ps. lxviii. 1. In this psalm the ancient church expresses a confident anticipation of divine assistance and deliverance from the domination of some great hostile power, the catastrophe of which is here foretold. The immediate historical occasion we have no direct means of determining; but the one to which the psalm itself seems most appropriate is the destruction of the Assyrian host in the reign of Hezekiah. See above, on Ps. xlv. 1, and below, on Ps. lxxvi. 1, and compare Isai. xxxvi and xxxvii. That the psalm has reference to a period of imminent and extraordinary danger, is moreover indicated by the phrase al-tashheth, or destroy not. See above, on Ps. lvii. 1.

2 (1.) We give thanks to thee, oh God, we give thanks; and near (is) thy name; they recount thy wonders. The thanksgiving is in anticipation of some great event, and implies a strong faith in the certainty of its occurrence. Thy name is near, a signal manifestation of thine attributes is just at hand, so that men begin already to recount thy wondrous works, as if actually past. Or this may mean that they recount God's former dealings with them, as a reason for expecting like or greater things to come. Another construction of the last clause, perhaps still more natural, is that adopted in the English Bible: thy name is near, thy wondrous works declare. For the sense and usage of the last word in Hebrew, see above, on Ps. ix. 2 (1.) xxvi. 7. xl. 6 (5.) lxxi. 17.

3 (2.) For I will take a set time; I will equitably judge. The best interpreters are now in favour of explaining these as the words of God himself, containing the promise upon which was built the hope expressed in the preceding verse. Take then includes the two ideas of choosing and using for the end proposed. The word translated set time is the same that means assembly in Ps. lxxiv. 4, 8. The idea of constituted time, which is included even there, is here predominant. The same use of the word occurs in Ps. cii. 14 (13.) Hab. ii. 3. Dan. viii. 19. xi. 27, 35. There is here an obvious allusion to the stated times at which justice is publicly administered. Compare Acts xix. 38. As if he had said, I will appoint a time, and when it comes, I will ascend the judgment-seat. The parties to be tried are the foes and oppressors of God's people. The pronoun is emphatic; I, and no other, will be judge. See above, on Ps. l. 6. Equitably, literally, equities or rectitudes. See above on Ps. xvii. 2. lviii. 2 (1.) The use of the plural, as an abstract, and that of the noun in an adverbial sense, are both familiar Hebrew idioms. The judging of the wicked at God's bar implies their condemnation, and, as a necessary consequence, the deliverance of those whom they oppress or injure.

4 (3.) Melted (are) the earth and all dwelling on it; I have weighed the pillars of it. Selah. Dissolved with fear, enfeebled, or reduced to nothing. See above, on Ps. xlvi. 7 (6.) The figure in the last clause is obscure. The act of weighing may be intended to suggest that of raising, bearing up. Compare Isai xl. 12, 13, 15. Some suppose, however, that it means to measure, estimate, or value, and implies not only perfect knowledge but creative power. As a part of the promise or encouraging assurance begun in the preceding verse, the one before us must mean that God himself will prevent or rectify the evils caused or threatened by his enemies.

5 (4.) I said to the boasters, Boast not, and to the wicked, Lift not up the horn! Some regard these as the words of the psalmist, speaking again in the person of the church. The sense will then be that, encouraged by God's promise of protection and deliverance, his people warn their adversaries not to triumph. It seems more natural, however, to explain them as a continuation of the words of God himself, whose very assurance of protection to his people was in fact a warning of destruction to his enemies. The objection, that what follows must then be referred to the same speaker, is of little weight, as the transition from one person to another, in the psalms of a dramatic structure, is not commonly a marked one, and is often quite insensible. The concluding metaphor is borrowed from the habits of horned animals, and nearly equivalent to the act of holding the head high, as a sign of human pride. For a different application of the figure, see above, on Ps. xviii. 3 (2.)

6 (5.) Do not raise on high your horn (and) speak with a proud neck, or speak with (outstretched) neck proudly. The last word is an adjective meaning insolent or arrogant. See above, on Ps. xxxi. 19 (18.) It may either agree with neck, and signify a position and carriage of the neck indicative of pride (Ps. lxxiii. 6) or constitute the object of the verb, in which case with the neck may mean with outstretched or prolonged neck, not projecting forwards but inclining backwards. See Isai. iii. 16, and compare Job xv. 26 in Hebrew. For a similar ellipsis, see below, Ps lxxvii. 16 (15.)

7 (6.) For not from east, and (not) from west, and not from the wilderness of mountains, is the judgment on these sinners to proceed, but from a very different quarter. The word translated east means properly the sunrise, or rather the place of his coming forth; the parallel term the sunset, or the place of evening. A third point of the compass is denoted by the wilderness, the great Arabian desert lying to the south of Palestine. The last word in Hebrew (הַרְרִים) admits of two entirely different explanations. One of these, given in the English Bible, makes it the infinitive of the verb translated raise in vs. 5, 6 (4, 5), and supposes it to mean the act of raising, or a state of exaltation. The sense will then be that promotion cometh not from any quarter upon earth, but from God and God alone. Others object that the question here is not one of promotion but of judgment, as appears from the foregoing and the following context. They accordingly adhere to the ancient versions in making (הַרְרִים) the plural of the common Hebrew word for hill or mountain, and explain the whole phrase to mean a hilly desert or a wilderness of mountains, a description eminently applicable to Idumæa and Arabia Petræa. The essential idea is still that of the south, here added to the east and west, as a general description of the countries contiguous to Palestine. The south is mentioned last, perhaps for the sake of an emphatic reference to Egypt, as the foreign power, on which the Jews were supposed by the Assyrians to rely with special confidence. Compare Isai. xxxvi. 4—6. The omission of the north may either be fortuitous or (as some suppose) intended to suggest that this was the quarter from which the hostile incursion had proceeded, as it was in fact, invaders even from the furthest east commonly entering the country from that side. The meaning of the whole verse then is that the danger which impended from one quarter could not be averted by mere human aid from any other, but only by the means referred to in the next verse.

8 (7.) For God (is) judge (or actually judging;) this (one) he will humble, and this (one) will exalt. The for at the beginning introduces the reason of the negative statement in the verse preceding. It is not man, for it is God, who can perform this. The same relation of the sentences is commonly expressed in our idiom by but. The act of judging, or the office of a judge, here implies absolute sovereignty. This and this is the idiomatic Hebrew phrase answering to one and another in English. See above, on Ps. xx. 8 (7.)

9 (8.) For a cup (is) in the hand of Jehovah, and the wine ferments, and it is full of mixture, and he pours out from this (cup); only its dregs shall they wring (or suck) out, shall they drink—all the wicked of the earth (or land.) This is a common figure in the Scriptures for the wrath of God. See above, on Ps. xi. 6. The cup contains the prescribed or allotted portion of the sinner to whom it is administered. Ferments or has fermented, implying that it is real wine and strong wine. The translation it is red is now supposed to rest upon a doubtful etymology. Some interpreters explain the phrase, it foams with wine; but this construction is not only in itself less simple, but puts a sense upon the verb not entirely authorized by usage, and requires the noun (כּוּס) cup, which is elsewhere feminine, to be construed as a masculine. It (the wine) is full of mixture, i. e. mixed with spices to increase its strength and stimulating power. Only its dregs is an idiomatic Hebrew phrase, which does not mean, as it may seem to do in English, that they shall drink nothing but the dregs. The meaning rather is, that they shall have nothing left for it, no resource, or no alternative, except to drain the cup to the very dregs, i. e. to suffer God's wrath to the uttermost (1 Thess. ii. 16.) The position given to the subject of the sentence at its close makes it more emphatic. See above on Ps. xl. 15 (14.)

10 (9.) And I will declare forever, I will sing praise to the God of Jacob. The emphatic pronoun puts him in opposition to the wicked of the earth or land. 'While they are thus destroyed, I will declare' etc. The object of the verb in the first clause is determined by the second. Sing praise, make music, as a means of celebrating the divine praise. See above, on Ps. ix. 12 (11.) xxx. 5 (4.) xlvii. 7 (6.) lxvi. 4. To the God of Jacob, to him who has proved himself to be such, by fulfilling the promise made of old to Israel. The personal name of the patriarch is poetically substituted for the one which properly belonged to him as founder of the nation. See above, on Ps. xxiv. 6.

11 (10.) And all horns of wicked ones will I cut off; lifted up shall be the horns of the righteous. The same noun and verb, that were used in vs. 5, 6 (4, 5), to denote the self-exaltation of the wicked, are here used in a good sense to denote God's gracious exaltation of the righteous. Compare Matth. xxiii. 12. Luke xiv. 11. xviii. 14. In the first clause, to the simple correlative idea of humiliation is superadded that of violent destruction. While the horns of the righteous are to be exalted, those of the wicked are not only to be lowered but cut off. The change from the plural (wicked men) to the singular (a righteous man), if meant to be significant at all, may have reference to the speaker as an ideal individual. The construction of these words as those of God himself is a gratuitous and harsh one. They are rather uttered by the Church, as representing him, or acting in his strength and under his authority.

P S A L M L X X V I

1. To the Chief Musician. With (or on) stringed instruments. A Psalm by Asaph. A song (of praise.) The resemblance of this title to that of the preceding psalm, their juxtaposition in the Psalter, and their internal similarity, all favour the opinion that they had respect originally to the same historical occasion, with this difference, that the first is rather an anticipation of the great deliverance as certain but still future, and the other a commemoration of the same as actually past or really experienced. In this, as in the other case, the event is ascribed to a wonderful divine interposition, and described as one affecting the whole world or the nations generally, which was emphatically true of the great stroke, by which the power of Assyria was broken.

2. (1.) Known in Judah (is) God; in Israel great (is) his name. Known as God, and as the God of Israel, his chosen people, which, after the great schism in the time of Rehoboam, continued to exist in the kingdom of Judah. It was only in the ancient church that his name was fully known, his perfections clearly manifested.

3 (2.) And in Salem was his tabernacle, and his home in Zion This is explanatory of the first verse. He was best known there because it was his chosen earthly residence. Salem is evidently used poetically for Jerusalem. The former name means peaceful and secure, and some suppose it to be one of the elements of which the other name is composed, so as to signify a peaceful or secure possession. The same interpreters identify the Salem of Gen. xiv. 18 with Jerusalem. The word translated tabernacle properly means a booth or shed composed of leaves and branches, in allusion to the moveable and temporary form of the first sanctuary.

4 (3.) Thither he shattered the bolts of the bow—buckler and sword and battle. Selah. Some translate the first word there, but there is no clear instance of the Hebrew adverb being so used, and the best interpreters suppose the sense to be, that he destroyed them on their way there, while in motion towards the Holy City. The word (רָצַץ) translated shattered is an intensive species of the common verb (רָצַץ) to break. Both forms occur together in Ps. xxix. 5. See also Ps. iii. 8 (7.) The ambiguous word bolts is used to represent a Hebrew one, which properly means thunderbolts or flashes of lightning, but is here applied to the flight of arrows, with or without allusion to the practice of igniting them (Eph. vi. 16.) To the shield and sword, as the most important pieces of defensive and offensive armour, he adds, by a bold and striking figure, war itself, perhaps as a residuary aggregate of all other arms and weapons.

5 (4.) Bright (art) thou, glorious, more than the mountains of prey. The object of address is God, who had been previously spoken of, in the third person. The first word in Hebrew is a participle, meaning illuminated, made to shine, and therefore bearing some affinity to our word illustrious. The other epithet means grand, glorious, sublime. See above, on Ps. viii. 1. The common version (excellent) seems to restrict the praise to moral qualities. As mountains are standing symbols of states and kingdoms, mountains of prey, i. e. mountains occupied by robbers, may denote oppressive powers, such as that of Assyria, to which the Prophets apply similar descriptions. See Nah. ii. 11, 12. iii. 1. To all such hostile powers God is here represented as superior.

6 (5.) Spoiled are the stout of heart; they have slept their sleep; and all the men of might have not found their hands. The meaning of the first clause seems to be, that the spoilers are themselves spoiled, by a signal providential retribution. Some, however, explain the first word to mean snatched away, caused to disappear or vanish. They have slept their own sleep, i. e. they, like others, in their turn, sleep the sleep of death. See above, on Ps. xiii. 4 (3), and compare Nah. iii. 18. 2 Kings xix. 35 Stout of heart suggests the two distinct ideas, courageous and hard-hearted. The same expression is used, in an unfavourable sense, by Isaiah (xlvi. 12.) All have not found does not imply that some have found, but on the contrary, that none have found, or in other words that the negative proposition is true of all without exception. Found their hands is understood by some to mean regained their strength. But the direct sense of the words is, that they have not found the use of their hands, or been able to employ them with advantage.

7 (6.) At thy rebuke, oh God of Jacob, put to sleep (is) both chariot and horse. The particle at the beginning is both temporal and causal, post hoc et propter hoc. After and because of thy rebuke. This noun denotes not merely a verbal but a real or practical expression of the divine displeasure. See above, on Ps. ix. 6 (5.) lxxviii. 31 (30.) God of Jacob, see above, on v. 10 (9.) Put to sleep is here used to translate a passive participle, denoting not a mere state or condition, but the violence by which it is produced. The sleep meant is of course the sleep of death. The application of this figure to the chariot as well as to the horse, is less paradoxical in Hebrew, where the noun used is sometimes a collective meaning cavalry. See my note on Isaiah xxi. 7.

At the same time, there is beauty in the figure, as suggesting that the noisy rattle of the wheels is hushed in death-like silence.

8 (7.) Thou (art) to be feared, (even) thou, and who shall stand before thee, when once thou art angry? The Hebrew passive participle often has the force of the future passive or gerundive in Latin. See above, on Ps. xviii. 4 (3.) The repetition of the pronoun makes it highly emphatic and even exclusive, thou and no other, thou and only thou. Who shall stand? includes the kindred question, who may or can stand? To stand before God means, in this connection, to stand one's ground in opposition to him, or in independence of him. See above, on Ps. i. 5. The common version of the last words, which is retained above, conveys correctly the idea, but without the peculiar form of the original, which is highly idiomatic, and not susceptible of literal translation. The last word strictly means thy anger and the one before it from then or from that time. The nearest approach to it in English would be since thy anger, a construction which is actually given in the latest German versions.

9 (8.) From heaven thou hast caused judgment to be heard; the earth feared and rested, or, the earth was afraid and was still. From his throne in heaven God had pronounced judgment on his wicked enemies, the sound of which had struck the dwellers upon earth with awe and calmed their tumult. The last Hebrew verb is especially applied to repose after the noise and agitation of war. See Josh. xiv. 15. Judg. v. 31. Isai. xiv 7.

10 (9.) In God's arising for the judgment, to save all the humble of the earth. This completes the sentence begun in the preceding verse, by assigning the date, and at the same time the cause, of the effect there recorded. The earth was awe-struck and reduced to silence when God arose to judgment, i. e. to act as judge or sovereign arbiter. In the last clause, as in many other places, the judgments of God upon his enemies are represented as occasions of deliverance to his people, here described by one of their characteristic qualities, not merely as the meek in temper, but as the lowly in spirit, the humble in the strong religious sense. See above, on Ps. ix. 13 (12.) x. 12, 17. xxii. 27 (26.) xxv. 9. xxxiv. 3 (2.) xxxvii. 11. lxix. 33 (32.) The last word in the verse has here a kind of double sense, since the promise made directly to the humble of the land, i. e. the spiritual Israel, was really intended to include all the humble of the earth, i. e. all the truly pious, whether Jews or Gentiles.

11 (10.) For the wrath of man shall praise mee (or acknowledge thee); the remainder of wraths thou shalt gird (about thee.) The very passions which excite men to rebel against God shall be used as instruments and means of coercion. See above, on Ps. xxxii. 9. And so complete shall be this process, that even the remnant of such passionate excitement, which might be expected to escape attention, will be nevertheless an instrument or weapon in the hands of God. This last idea is expressed by the figure of a girdle, here considered as a sword-belt. So too in other cases the verb to gird is absolutely used in the sense of girding on a sword, or the still more general one of arming one's self. See above, on Ps. xlv. 4 (3), and compare Judg. xviii. 11. 1 Kings xx. 11. 2 Kings iii. 21. Others, with less probability, suppose the figure to denote the act of attaching to one's self, as in Ps. cix. 19. Isai. xi. 5. Jer. xiii. 11, and apply it to the future conversion of all remaining enemies. The plural in the last clause (wraths or angers) seems to be an emphatic designation of abundance or excess. See above, on. Ps. xviii. 51 (50.)

12 (11.) Vow and pay unto Jehovah your God, all (ye that are) round about him; let them bring tribute to the Dread (One.) The first clause may be understood to mean, pay now what you have vowed before, i. e. before the great deliverance and during the impending danger. The addition of your God shows that the object of address is Israel. Compare Deut. xxiii. 22 (21.) According to the masoretic interpunction, all that are round about him belongs to the first clause, and denotes the host of Israel, in the midst of whom Jehovah's tent was pitched (Num. ii. 2.) The English Bible, following the ancient versions, throws these words into the last clause, as the subject of the verb that follows, let all that are round about him bring presents, or they shall bring presents. This last word in Hebrew denotes tribute from the conquered or dependent to the conqueror or sovereign. See above, on Ps. lxxviii. 30 (29), and compare Isai. xviii. 7. This was literally verified in the case of Hezekiah's rescue from the power of Sennacherib. See 2 Chron. xxxii. 23. God is here called Fear or Terror, as an object to be revered or dreaded. Compare the similar expressions in Isaiah viii. 12, 13.

13 (12.) He cuts off the spirit of princes, he is feared (or to be feared) by the kings of earth. The first verb is specially applied to the pruning or cutting of vines. See Jer. vi. 9. xxv. 30. xlix. 9, and compare Rev. xiv. 18, 19. Its future form includes a potential sense. He can do it when he will, and he will do it when he sees occasion. Spirit or breath is here put for the life or vital principle, to cut which is to kill. He who possesses this alarming power is or ought to be an object of religious fear, not only to ordinary men or to certain great men in particular, but to all the kings of the earth. Compare Matt. x. 28. Luke xii. 5. These expressions show that the historical occasion of the psalm was not an event of merely local interest, but a great historical and national catastrophe, such as the blow inflicted on the power of Assyria by the sudden destruction of Sennacherib's host

PSALM LXXVII.

1. To the Chief Musician over (the choir or family of) Jeduthun. By Asaph. A Psalm. For the meaning of this title, see above, on Ps. lxii. 1. The psalm before us contains a complaint and prayer of the ancient church in times of deep distress. It consists of two parts. In the first, the church describes her sad condition and complains of God's desertion, vs. 2—10 (1—9.) In the second, she encourages herself by the remembrance of former deliverances, and especially of that from Egypt, vs. 11—21 (10—20.) The particular historical occasion is not specified; but if, as some suppose, it be the crisis of affairs in the reign of Josiah, the name Asaph must be understood as a description of the family, and not of its progenitor. See above on Ps. l. 1. There are several obvious imitations of this psalm in the third chapter of Habakkuk.

2 (1) My voice unto God (I will raise) and will cry; my voice unto God (I will raise) and he will give ear to me. Some make the last verb an imperative, and (when I raise my voice) do thou give ear. But besides the sudden change of person, which, though common, is not to be assumed without necessity, the form of the Hebrew verb is that of an infinitive, to be determined by assimilation to the one before it. The last clause then really assigns a reason for the purpose expressed in the first. He would not pray if he despaired of being heard.

3 (2.) In the day of my distress the Lord I sought ; my hand by night was spread and grew not numb ; my soul refused to be comforted. Day is here put for time, but not without allusion to the mention of the night in the clause following, so as to express the idea that he prayed day and night. The verb translated spread means strictly spilt, poured out, scattered, but seems to be here poetically applied to the spreading of the hands as a customary gesture of entreaty. See above, on Ps. xlv. 21 (20.) The common version, my sore ran, has no foundation in etymology or usage. For the meaning of the next verb, see above, on Ps. xxxviii. 9 (8.) Its form is future, but the copulative particle, though separated from it by the negative, may be considered as exerting a conversive force.

4 (3.) I remember God and murmur ; I muse, and overwhelmed is my spirit. Selah. The recollection of God's former kindness, as contrasted with what seems to be his present desertion, extorts from the sufferer an expression of disquietude. The second verb in Hebrew is the same with that in Ps. xxxix. 7 (6.) xlii. 6, 12 (5, 11.) lv. 18 (17.) My spirit is not simply equivalent to myself, but suggests the additional idea of profound internal agitation.

5 (4.) Thou hast held fast my eyes ; I am smitten and cannot speak. The word here rendered fast is properly a passive participle meaning watched, kept, and here, from the connection, kept awake or open. This circumstance is added to enhance the description of his miserable state.

6 (5.) I thought on days of old, years of antiquities (or perpetuities.) The contrast of the present with the past is again urged as an aggravating circumstance in his condition.

7 (6.) I will remember my song in the night, with my heart will I muse, and my spirit inquires. The futures of the first clause have reference to the time of actual suffering. The word translated song means strictly a stringed instrument, or that kind of music, but is here used more generally to denote the musical expression of thanksgiving. In the night qualifies the words immediately preceding (my song), not the remoter antecedent (I remember.) With my heart, i. e. in communion with it, with myself. My spirit inquires, i. e. I, from the bottom of my heart, ask the questions recorded in the following verses.

8 (7.) For ever will the Lord reject, and will he no more favour? It was thus that the spirit of the sufferer made inquiry. For ever, literally, to eternities or ages. Reject, with abhorrence and contempt. See above, on Ps. xliii. 2. xliv. 10, 24 (9, 23.) lx. 3, 12 (2, 11.) lxxiv. 1. The idiomatic form of the last clause is, will he not add to favour again (or any longer?)

9 (8.) Ceased forever has his mercy, failed (his) word to generation and generation? The general term word here denotes specifically a word of promise. See above, on Ps. xviii. 31 (30.) Generation and generation, i. e. all generations in succession, are not mentioned as the objects of the promise, to whom God's word was pledged, but as the period of its failure.

10 (9.) Has the Mighty (One) forgotten to be gracious, or closed in wrath his mercies? Selah. The use of the divine name El is here significant, as if it had been asked, does the goodness of God no longer bear proportion to his greatness? The verb translated closed is one found only in poetical style. The original expression for his mercies suggests the idea of his bowels, according to the idiom which represents the viscera as the seat of the tenderest affections.

11 (10.) And I said, this is my affliction, the years of the right hand of the Highest. This may be regarded as the turning point of the entire composition. After all the repinings and misgivings just described, I said, at length, what I might and should have said before. My affliction, literally, my sickness, that specific form of suffering being put for suffering in general, as inflicted by the hand of God. The use of the word years seems to imply that the trial was one of long continuance. The divine name or description (Most High) suggests the duty and necessity of yielding to his sovereign pleasure.

12 (11.) I will commemorate the deeds of Jah; for I will remember thy wonders of old. The forms of the verb in the two clauses are different though needlessly assimilated by the masoretic critics and the versions. The second is the primitive verb remember; the first its derivative, cause to be remembered, commemorate, celebrate. The literal meaning of the last words is from antiquity thy wonder, a collective and abstract expression for thy wondrous works. For the origin and use of the divine name JAH, see above, on Ps. lxxviii. 5 (4.)

13 (12.) And I will meditate of all thy work, and of thy doings will I muse. The original expression is not of but in them, as if implying a complete absorption of the thoughts and feelings in the object.

14 (13.) Oh God, in holiness is thy way. What Mighty (One) is great like God? The common version, in the sanctuary, yields a good sense; but the other is entitled to the preference on account of Ex. xv. 11, to which place there is evident allusion. Holiness here means the divine perfection, all that distinguishes the Maker from his creatures. See above, on Ps. xxii. 4 (3.) Thy way, i. e. thy mode of dealing with thy creatures, and particularly with thy people. The use of the name El is again significant. Who is there like God, even among the mightiest and most exalted beings?

15 (14.) Thou (art) the Almighty doing wonders ; thou hast made known in the nations thy strength. Thou art the true Almighty as distinguished from all counterfeits. Doing, i. e. habitually, characteristically, doing wonders. The next word has the singular form but a collective meaning, as in v. 12 (11) above. In the nations, not only to them, but among them, in the midst of them, and in their own experience. The display of God's omnipotence had not been confined to his own people, but extended to surrounding nations. This is particularly mentioned in the history of the exodus from Egypt. See Ex. ix. 16. xv. 14.

16 (15.) Thou hast redeemed with the arm thy people, the sons of Jacob and Joseph. Selah. The particular display of the divine strength just referred to is now specified. Redeemed, recovered from captivity or bondage. With the arm, i. e. by the exercise of power. See above, on Ps. xlv. 4 (3.) Joseph is named as well as Jacob, in order to include the ten tribes in the statement, which might otherwise have been applied to Judah only, as the legitimate successor of the ancient Israel. In this clause some interpreters see a distinct allusion to the downfall of the kingdom of the ten tribes, as an event which had already taken place when the psalm was written.

17 (16.) The waters saw thee, God, the waters saw thee ; they shake, yea, the depths quake. The historical reference is of course to the passage of the Red Sea, but at the same time with allusion to the symbolical use of seas in Scripture. See above, on Ps. xlvi. 3 (2.) The transition from the past tense to the future or present shows that the writer suddenly transports himself into the midst of the events which he commemorates. The yea or nay (אם) in the last clause is emphatic. Not merely the surface of the water moves ; its very depths are agitated and convulsed.

18 (17.) The clouds poured water ; the skies gave a sound ; yea, thine arrows fly. These are natural phenomena of storms, here noted as betokening God's presence. See above, on Ps. xviii. 12—15 (11—14.) The skies, the vapours constituting the visible heavens. See above, on Ps. lxxviii. 35 (34.) Gave a sound, uttered their voice, a beautiful description of the thunder. The yea indicates a climax. There was not only rain and thunder but lightning, the flashes of which are poetically spoken of as arrows. See above, on Ps. xviii. 15 (14.) The word translated fly is an intensive form of the verb to go, implying swiftness and perhaps diversity of direction, hither and thither, to and fro. See above, on Ps. xxvi. 3. xxxv. 14. With this verse compare Hab. iii. 11.

19 (18.) The voice of thy thunder (was) in the whirlwind; lightnings made the world shine; (then) shook and quaked the earth. The word translated whirlwind usually means a wheel, but is sometimes applied to any thing whirled or driven round before the wind. See below, on Ps. lxxxiii. 14 (13), and compare Isai. xvii. 13. Hence it may naturally be employed to designate the whirlwind itself as the cause of this rotary motion. This is surely more agreeable to usage than to make it descriptive of mere swiftness or velocity. The common version, in the heaven, if not entirely arbitrary, must rest upon a supposed allusion to the convex appearance of the heavens. Made to shine, illuminated, lighted up. There is however no affinity between the Hebrew word and that for lightnings. The whole description is remarkably like that of the theophany in Ps. xviii. See also Hab. iii. 14.

20 (19.) In the sea (was) thy way and thy paths in great (or many) waters, and thy footsteps were not known. This may be understood as a general description of the divine operations as inscrutable, in which case the verbs supplied should have the present form, is thy way, are not known. It is more agreeable, however, to the context, and in far better keeping with the vivi graphic character of this part of the psalm, to understand the verse, at least in the first instance, as referring to the exodus from Egypt, when it might indeed be said that the way of Jehovah, as the deliverer and conductor of his people, was in the sea, and that his footsteps and theirs could not be traced, because the waters instantly rolled over them. With this verse compare Hab. iii. 15.

21 (20.) Thou didst guide like a flock thy people, by the hand of Moses and Aaron. Like a flock, in perfect safety and with perfect ease. The comparison of Moses, at this juncture, to a shepherd, reappears in Isai. lxiii. 11—14. The conclusion of the psalm appears abrupt, but any devout Israelite could draw the inference for himself, that he who had so gloriously saved his people could deliver them again.

PSALM LXXVIII.

THIS psalm appears to have been written after David's elevation to the throne, and perhaps before he was acknowledged by the whole race of Israel (2 Sam. v. 5.) Its design is to impress upon the public mind the true grounds of the transfer which had taken place, of the pre-eminence in Israel, from the tribe of Ephraim to that of Judah, as the execution of a divine purpose long before disclosed, and at the same time a just judgment on the sins committed by the people under the predominant influence of Ephraim, from the time of Joshua to that of Eli. The internal character of the psalm determines its external form, which is simple, and admits of no minute division, beyond that afforded by the historical succession of events and the logical design of the composition, to prove that the Israelites under the ascendancy of Ephraim were similar in character to the elder generation which came out of Egypt.

1. Maschil. By Asaph Listen, my people, to my law; incline your ear to the sayings of my mouth. This is eminently a didactic psalm, because it teaches the true meaning of events in the history of Israel which might otherwise seem to be mere matters of curiosity. For the same reason it was necessary that it should be so designated in the title or inscription. See above, on Ps. xxxii. 1. xlii. 1. lii. 1. etc. The Asaph meant, as we have seen, is probably the contemporary and chief musician of David, but also an inspired psalmist. See above, on Ps. l. 1. In this verse, he invites attention, as if to something strange and unexpected. My people, fellow-members of the ancient church, not as individuals, however, but as an organized body. My law, my inspired instructions which, as such, have a binding authority and force.

2. I will open, in a parable, my mouth; I will utter riddles from antiquity. By a parable we are here to understand an analogical illustration of divine truth. An exposition of the true design and meaning of the history of Israel was in this sense a maschal or parable. Riddles, enigmas, not the events themselves, but their latent import, which escaped a merely superficial observation. See above, on Ps. xlix. 5 (4.) Of old, or from antiquity, i. e. belonging to the early period of our national existence. Utter, literally, pour forth, cause to flow or gush. See above, on Ps. xix. 3 (2.)

3. Which we have heard, and have known them, and our fathers recounted to us. Here, as often elsewhere, the knowledge of God's ancient dealings with his people is ascribed to that national tradition, which they were not only suffered but required to cherish and perpetuate (Ex. xii. 14. Deut. vi. 20), but which was not at all exclusive of a written and authoritative record.

4. We will not hide (them) from their sons, to an after generation recounting the praises of Jehovah, and his strength, and his wonders which he did. The psalmist here recognises the obligation resting on the individual parent, but above all on the church as such, to continue the transmission of this knowledge to the latest generations.

5. And set up a testimony in Jacob, and a law established in Israel, which he commanded our fathers, to make them known unto their sons. The essential idea here conveyed still is, that the traditional transmission of God's mighty deeds entered into the very end or purpose for which Israel existed as a nation.

6. In order that the after generation might know, sons be born, arise, and tell (it) to their own sons. This prolonged reiteration of the same thing seems intended to preclude the thought or feeling, that the things about to be recounted were mere relics of antiquity, without interest or use to the contemporary race.

7. And might place in God their hope, and not forget the deeds of the Almighty, and his commandments might observe (or keep.) The construction is continued from the verse preceding. The recollection thus enjoined was not a mere historical or speculative exercise, but designed to have a practical effect, to wit, that of securing obedience.

8. And might not be as their fathers, a generation stubborn and rebellious, a generation that did not prepare its heart, and whose spirit was not true to God. A still more specific purpose is here mentioned, to wit, that of warning by means of bad examples. The fathers here meant are the elder race that came out of Egypt The description stubborn and rebellious is borrowed from Deut. xxi. 18. To prepare the heart is to dispose or devote it to God's service. Compare 1 Sam. vii. 3. 2 Chron. xx. 33.

9. The sons of Ephraim, armed bowmen, turned (back) in the day of battle. The people, during the ascendancy of Ephraim, proved false to their great mission of subduing Canaan and destroying its inhabitants. This neglect is represented, in the history itself, as the source of all the national calamities that followed. As the bow among the ancients was one of the chief weapons of war, the description armed bowmen is equivalent to well armed soldiers, and is added to enhance the guilt and shame of those who thus betrayed their trust, in spite of every external advantage.

10. They kept not the covenant of God, and in his law refused to walk. They violated the condition of their national vocation, and refused to do the very thing for which they were brought out of Egypt.

11. And forgot his deeds and his wonders which he showed them. The second generation forgot the proofs of God's presence and power, which, in the person of their fathers, they had seen when they came out of Egypt.

12. Before their fathers he did a wonder, in the land of Egypt, in the field of Zoan. Wonder has here the same collective sense as in Ps. lxxvii. 12, 15 (11, 14,) Zoan called by the Greeks Tanis, was the ancient capital of Lower Egypt. See Num. xiii. 22. The field of Zoan was the country immediately adjacent to it.

13. He clave the sea, and let them pass, and made the waters stand as a heap. This last expression is derived from Ex. xv. 8. See above, on Ps. xxxiii. 7.

14. And led them by the cloud by day, and all the night by light of fire. See Ex. xiii. 21, 22. The original expression, in the cloud, may denote something more than instrumental agency, to wit, the personal presence of the Divine Angel in the cloud itself.

15. He cleaves rocks in the wilderness, and gives them drink as a great deep. This last is a hyperbolical description of an abundant flow of water in the desert. Some account for it by supposing an allusion to the flood, from the account of which (Gen. vii. 11) some of the expressions are borrowed. The verse has reference to both miraculous supplies of this kind, one in the first, and one in the last year of the error in the wilderness. See Ex. xvii. 6 Num. xx. 8.

16. And brings out torrents from a rock, and brings down waters like the rivers. This verse relates to the later miracle, recorded in the twentieth of Numbers.

17. And they continued still to sin against him, to rebel against the Highest in the desert. What ought to have been the effect of these divine interpositions, is clearly implied in this description of the actual effect. The very means which should have made them more obedient made them more rebellious. The last word in Hebrew means a desert, properly so called, a dry land, and may here be used to suggest the idea, that they foolishly and wickedly provoked God in the very situation where they were most dependent on him for protection and supplies. The extent of this dependence is implied in the use of a divine name signifying sovereignty, supremacy.

18. And tempted God in their heart, to ask food for their soul. To tempt God is to require unnecessary proof of what should be believed without it. Instead of trusting in his bounty to supply them, they anxiously demanded what they looked upon as necessary for their sustenance. In their heart describes the first conception of the sin, as distinguished from its outward commission in the next verse. To ask, by asking, or rather, so as to ask. Such was their impious distrust of God, that they actually asked, etc. For their soul, for themselves; or, for their appetite, to gratify their inordinate desire of bodily indulgence; or, for their life, as absolutely necessary to preserve it.

19. And spake of God (and) said, Will the Almighty be able to set a table in the wilderness? This they not only said, but said it speaking of or against God. The unreasonableness of the doubt is aggravated by the use of a divine name which implies omnipotence. As if they had said, Can he do this who can do everything?

20. Lo, he smote the rock, and waters flow, and streams gush out; (but) can he also give bread or provide flesh for his people? The same thing is now proved by an appeal to what he had done. The question is reduced to an absurdity by introducing as a kind of preamble, what ought to have prevented its being asked at all. The doubters are described in these two verses as virtually reasoning thus: God is almighty; but is he able to supply our wants? He has given us water; but can he give us bread or meat?

21. Therefore Jehovah heard and was wroth, and fire was kindled in Jacob, and also anger came up in (or against) Israel. The first clause exemplifies a common Hebrew idiom, equivalent to saying, therefore when he heard he was angry. Heard, not the rumour or report of their offence, but the offence itself, which consisted externally in speaking against God. The second verb is a reflexive form of one that means to pass out or over, and properly denotes the act of letting one's self out or giving vent to the emotions. Fire seems to be a figure for this same wrath, with or without allusion to material fire as a destroying agent. Compare Num. xi. 1. Came up, in the mind. See 2 Sam. xi. 20. Or there may be an allusion to the visible ascent of smoke and flame, as in Ps. xviii. 9 (8.)

22. Because they believed not in God, and trusted not in his salvation. Compare the terms of the history in Ex. xiv. 13. Num. xiv. 11.

23. And he commanded the cloud above, and the doors of heaven he opened. The connection of the sentences is correctly although freely given in the common version, though he had commanded, etc. Above, literally, from above, but see on Ps. l. 4. The whole verse expresses the idea of a copious supply from heaven. In the last clause there seems to be a reference to the opening of the windows of heaven at the deluge. Compare Gen. vii. 11, and see above on v. 15.

24. And rained upon them manna to eat, and corn of heaven gave to them. The expression rained is borrowed from the history, Ex. xvi. 4. The addition of the words to eat may have reference to the primary import of the word (מַן) manna as an interrogative or indefinite pronoun, meaning what or somewhat, so that the words here might also bear the sense of something to eat. See Ex. xvi. 15, 31. It is called corn of heaven as a miraculous substitute for bread, and also in allusion to its granular form and appearance, Ex. xvi. 31.

25. Bread of the mighty (ones) did (each) man eat; victual he sent them to the full. The first Hebrew word, as appears from the preceding verse, is used in its specific sense of bread, and not in the generic one of food, which is otherwise expressed in v. 20. Some explain bread of the mighty to mean delicate or costly bread, like that used by the rich and noble. But to these the epithet is nowhere else applied, as a similar one is to the angels in Ps. ciii. 20, a circumstance which favours the old explanation given in the Targum and the Septuagint, according to which manna is called angels' bread, not as being their food, but as coming from the place where they reside. Man is not used generically in antithesis to angels, which would have required another Hebrew word (מַנְיָן), but distributively in the sense of every one, as it is in the history of this very miracle, Ex. xvi. 16. The idea then is that enough was sent for all without exception. The word translated victual denotes specially provision for a march or journey. See Ex. xii. 39. To the full, or to satiety, enough and more than enough to satisfy the appetite of every individual; another expression borrowed from the history. See Ex. xvi. 3.

26. He rouses an east-wind in the heavens, and guides by his power a south-wind. The first verb is a causative of that used in Num. xi. 31, which strictly means to strike a tent or break up an encampment, and then to set out upon a march or journey, but is there applied to the sudden rise of a particular wind. The east and south are here named as the points from which the strongest winds were known to blow in that part of the world. The history itself contains no such specification. Guides, directs it in the course required for his purpose.

27. And he rained upon them, like dust, flesh, and like the sand of seas, winged fowl (or birds of wing.) Here, as in the miracle of water, two miraculous supplies of flesh are brought together. See Ex. xvi. 13. Num. xi. 31, 32. To these too is transferred the figure of rain, which in the history is applied only to the manna.

28. And let it fall in the midst of his camp, round about his dwellings. The pronoun his refers to Israel as a body, and may be rendered clearer by the use of the plural their. Several of the terms here used are borrowed from the Mosaic narrative. See Ex. xvi. 13 Num. xi. 31.

29. And they ate and were sated exceedingly, and (thus) their desire he brings to them. The first clause is an amplification of the phrase to the full in v. 25 above. Compare the history in Num. xi. 18—20. Their desire, i. e. the object of it, that which they had longed for.

30. They were not (yet) estranged from their desire; still (was) their food in their mouth. This is merely the protasis or conditional clause of the sentence completed in the next verse. The first clause does not mean that the food had not begun to pall upon their appetite, but, as the other clause explains it, that it was still in their possession, in their very mouths, when God smote them. Compare Num. xi. 33.

31. And the wrath of God came up among them (or against them), and slew among their fat ones, and the chosen (youths) of Israel brought low. The form of expression in the first clause is the same as in v. 21 above. Among their fat ones, i. e. killed some or many of them. The parallel term, according to its etymology, means picked or chosen men, but in usage is applied to young men in their full strength and the flower of their age, and therefore fit for military service. Thus the youngest and strongest are described as unable to resist the exhibition of God's wrath against his people.

32. For all this they sinned still, and believed not for his wonders. Notwithstanding all these favours and extraordinary interpositions, the generation that came out of Egypt still persisted in their evil courses. The last clause does not charge them with denying the reality of the wonders which they witnessed, but with refusing to trust God on the strength of them. This appears from the history itself, Num. xiv. 11, to which there is obvious allusion.

33. And (therefore) he wasted in vanity their days and their years in terror. As the preceding verse relates to the refusal of the people to go up against the Canaanites in the first year of the exodus, so this relates to the forty years of error in the wilderness, by which that refusal was at once indulged and punished. The fruitless monotony of their existence during this long period, and their constant apprehension of some outbreak of divine wrath, are expressed here by the words translated vanity and terror. The meaning of the verb is that he suffered or caused their years to be thus unprofitably and miserably spent. Compare Ps. lxxiii. 19.

34. If he slew them, then they sought him, and returned and inquired early after God. Whenever, during this long interval, he punished them with more than usual severity, a temporary and apparent reformation was the immediate consequence. The verb in the last clause denotes eager and importunate solicitation. See above, on Ps. xliii. 2 (1.)

35. And remembered that God (was) their Rock, and the Mighty, the Most High, their Redeemer. It was only at these times of peculiar suffering that the people, as a body, called to mind their national relation to Jehovah, as their founder, their protector, and their refuge. See above, on Ps. xviii. 3 (2), and compare Deut. xxxii. 4, 15, 18, 31.

36. And (yet) they deceived him with their mouth, and with their tongue they lie to him. Even these apparent reformations only led to hypocritical professions. The verb in the first clause does not describe the effect but the intention. It may therefore be translated flattered, although this is not the strict sense of the Hebrew word.

37. And their heart was not fixed (or constant) with him, and they were not true to (or faithful in) his covenant. Their obedience was capricious and imperfect, and proceeded from no settled principle or genuine devotion to his service. They were false to the very end for which they existed as a nation. For the meaning of a fixed or settled heart, see above, on Ps. li. 12 (10), and compare Ps. lvii. 8 (7.)

38. And he, the Merciful, forgives iniquity, and does not (utterly) destroy; and he often withdrew his anger, and would not arouse all his wrath. The first clause relates rather to God's attributes, or to his method of proceeding in the general, than to his proceeding in this particular case, which is not brought forward till the last clause. There is obvious allusion to the description of God's mercy in Ex. xxxiv. 6, 7. Forgives is a very inadequate translation of the Hebrew word, which necessarily suggests the idea of expiation as the ground of pardon. Often withdrew, literally, multiplied to withdraw his wrath, or cause it to return without accomplishing its object.

39. And he remembered that they (were but) flesh, a breath departing and returning not. Here as elsewhere the frailty and infirmity of man is assigned as a ground of the divine forbearance. Compare Ps. ciii. 14—16. Flesh, a common scriptural expression for humanity or human nature, as distinguished from superior beings, and especially from God. See above, on Ps. lvi. 5 (4), and compare Gen. vi. 3. Isai. xxxi. 3. The idea of fragility and brief duration is expressed still more strongly by the exquisite figure in the last clause. The melancholy thought with which it closes is rendered still more emphatic in Hebrew by the position of the verb and the irregular construction of the sentence, a breath going and it shall not return.

40. How oft do they resist him in the wilderness (and) grieve him in the desert! Many particular occurrences are summed up in this pregnant exclamation. The future form of the verbs seems to have reference to the ideal situation of the writer, looking forward in imagination to the error as still future, and saying as Moses might have said, if gifted with prophetic foresight of the sins of Israel, Notwithstanding all these favours and these high professions, how oft will they resist his authority and rouse his wrath!

41. And they turned and tempted God, and (on) the Holy One of Israel set a mark. Having described the conduct of the first generation in the wilderness, the Psalmist now proceeds to show that the younger generation, after the death of Joshua (Josh. xxiv. 31), were like their fathers (v. 57 below.) The first verb may either have the independent meaning turned away or turned back from his service, or qualify the next verb by denoting repetition of the action; and they tempted again, or still tempted. They tempted God by doubting his supremacy, and practically challenging him to the proof of it. See above, on v. 19. The last word in Hebrew is of doubtful meaning. Some explain it, by a Syriac analogy, and on the authority of the ancient versions, to mean provoked or grieved. In the only other place where the Hebrew word occurs (Ez. ix. 4) it means to set a mark upon a person, which some apply here, in the figurative sense of stigmatizing or insulting. A cognate verb is used by Moses (Num. xxxiv. 7, 8) to denote the act of laying off or marking out a boundary, which is probably the origin of the common version, limited, i. e. prescribed bounds to the power of Jehovah in their unbelief Holy One of Israel, see above, or Ps. lxxi. 22.

42. They remembered not his hand, the day that he redeemed them from distress (or from the enemy.) The Psalmist still confounds or identifies the several generations as one aggregate or national person. The younger race remembered not the miraculous favours experienced by their predecessors. His hand, the exertion of his power, a favourite Mosaic figure. See particularly Ex. vii. 5. xiii. 9. Deut. vii. 8. The last clause admits of two constructions. The day may be in apposition with his hand, and a collateral object to the verb, as in the common version; or it may be an adverbial expression qualifying what precedes. 'They remembered not how his power was exerted in the day that he redeemed them from the enemy.' The essential meaning is the same in either case.

43. (He) who set in Egypt his signs and his wonders in the field of Zoan. The miraculous interpositions at the exodus were signs of God's presence and immediate agency. To set these was to hold them up to view. See above, on Ps. lxxiv. 4. The description of Egypt in the last clause is repeated from v. 12 above.

44. And turned to blood their rivers, and their streams they can not drink. The general statement of the preceding verse is rendered more specific by the mention of several of the plagues in detail, beginning with the first. See Ex. vii. 18—20. The word translated rivers is the plural of one commonly applied to the Nile, and supposed to be of Egyptian origin. It may here be understood as denoting either the natural branches of the Nile or the artificial channels by which its waters are employed in the irrigation of the country. In the last clause, by a very common trope, the writer speaks as he might have spoken at the time of the event.

45. He sends among them (or against them) flies and they de- vour them, and frogs and they destroy them. Two of the other plagues are here added, from the narrative in Exodus ch. viii. The first noun in Hebrew was explained by the ancient writers as denoting a mixture of noxious animals; but the best interpreters are now agreed that it means the Egyptian dog-fly, which Philo represents as feeding upon flesh and blood.

46. And he gave (up) to the caterpillar their produce, and their labour to the locust. Both the animal names in this verse are really designations of the locust, one meaning the devourer, and the other denoting the vast numbers of that insect. Their labour, i. e. its effect or fruit. Compare the narrative in Ex. x. 12—19.

47. He kills with hail their vine and their sycamores with frost. The destruction of the vines is not mentioned in the history (Ex. ix. 23—32), though it is in Ps. cv. 33. It has even been denied that the culture of the vine was known in ancient Egypt; but the fact has been fully established by modern investigation and discovery. The last word of the sentence occurs nowhere else. Some of the moderns explain it, from an Arabic analogy, to mean an ant; but the parallelism favours the usual interpretation which is derived from the ancient versions.

48. And delivered their cattle to the hail and their herds to the flames. The Hebrew verb strictly means shut up, and occurs elsewhere in the combination to shut up in the hand, i. e. abandon to the power, of another. See above, on Ps. xxxi. 9 (8), and compare 1 Sam. xxiii. 11. Here, as in Deut. xxxii. 30, the verb is used absolutely in the sense of the whole phrase. The word translated flames occurs above in Ps. lxxvi. 4 (3), and is here a poetical description of the lightning. The common version (hot thunderbolts) is striking and poetical, but perhaps too strong. This verse does not relate to a distinct plague, but to the effects of the hail-storm upon animals, as its effect upon plants was described in the preceding verse.

49. He sends upon them the heat of his anger, wrath and indignation and anguish, a mission of angels of evil. Before mentioning the last and greatest plague of all, he accumulates expressions to describe it as the effect of the divine displeasure. The slaughter of the first-born is ascribed in the history itself to a destroyer or destroying angel (Ex. xii. 23. Heb. xi. 28), which may be a collective as it seems to be in 1 Sam. xiii. 17, or denote the commander of a destroying host (Josh. v. 15,) here called a mission or commission of angels. The destroying angel reappears in the history of David (2 Sam. xxiv. 16) and of Hezekiah (2 Kings xix. 35.) The original construction in the case before us is peculiar, angels of evil (ones.) This cannot mean evil angels, in the sense of fallen spirits, who are not described in the Old Testament as the executioners of God's decrees. The best explanation is perhaps to take the plural evils in an abstract sense, angels of evil, not moral but physical, i. e. authors of suffering or destruction.

50. He levels a path for his anger; and he did not withhold from death their soul, and their life to the plague gave up. For the meaning of the first verb, see above, on Ps. lviii. 3 (2.) The meaning of the figure seems to be, that he removes all hinderance to his anger and allows it free scope. Not content with having smitten their possessions and their persons, he now extends his stroke to their lives. The word translated life more usually means an animal or animals collectively. See above, on Ps. lxviii. 11, 31 (10, 30.) lxxiv. 19. If we retain this meaning here, the verse may be referred to the death of the Egyptian cattle by the murrain (Ex. ix. 1—7.) But the parallelism and the context rather favour the translation life, and the reference of the passage to the death of the first-born, which was probably oc-occasioned by a pestilence (Ex. ix. 15) and is expressly mentioned in the next verse.

51. And smote all the first-born in Egypt, the first-fruits of strength in the tents of Ham. Compare the narrative in Ex. xii. 29, 30. The poetical description of the first-born in the last clause is derived from Gen. xlix. 3 (compare Deut. xxi. 17), and that of Egypt from Gen. x. 6.

52. And brought out, like sheep, his people, and led them, like a flock, in the wilderness. For the precise meaning of the first verb, see above, on v. 26, and compare Ex. xii. 37. xv. 22. The guidance in the wilderness includes that on both sides of the Red Sea, as appears from Ex. xii. 37.

53. And guided them in safety, and they did not fear, and their enemies the sea covered. They did not fear, because he removed all ground of apprehension. This was especially the case at the passage of the Red Sea, Ex. xv. 19, to which there is clearly a particular allusion.

54. And brought them to his holy border, this mountain (which) his right hand won. The bound or border of his holiness, the frontier of the land which he had set apart as holy. This mountain may, agreeably to Hebrew usage, mean this hilly country, as it does in Deut. iii. 25. But there is no doubt a particular reference to Mount Zion, in the wide sense, as the central point of the theocracy, designated as such long before the conquest of Canaan. See Gen. xxii. 14, and compare Ex. xv. 13, 17. His right hand, the exertion of his strength. Won, purchased, not in the restricted modern sense of buying, but in the old and wide sense of acquiring.

55. And drove out before them nations, and assigned them by measure (as) a heritage, and caused to dwell in their tents in tribes of Israel. Before them, literally, from their face or presence. Nations, whole nations, not mere armies, much less individuals. Assigned them, literally, made them fall, by lot or otherwise, a common expression for the distribution and allotment of the land. See Num. xxxiv. 2. The pronoun (them) refers to the nations, put for their possessions, and especially their territory. The word translated measure means primarily a measuring line, but then the portion of land measured. Hence we may also read, assigned them as (or for) a hereditary portion. In the last clause, their tents means of course those of the Canaanites, not of the Israelites themselves, which would make the clause unmeaning.

56. And they tempted and resisted God, Most High, and his testimonies did not keep. Having brought down the narrative of God's dealings with the older race to the conquest of Canaan, the Psalmist now resumes his charge (against the following generations) of being no better than their fathers. To tempt God and resist him, or rebel against him, has the same sense as in vs. 18, 40. The divine title (יהוה) suggests that their rebellion was against the highest and the most legitimate of all authority. His testimonies against sin, contained in his commandments; hence the use of the verb keep. The form of expression, in both clauses of this verse, is borrowed from Deut. vi. 16, 17.

57. And revolted and dealt falsely like their fathers; they were turned like a deceitful bow. He here resumes the thread dropped at v. 8, for the purpose of relating what their fathers did and were, i. e. the older generation who came out of Egypt. Having shown this at great length, he now reiterates the charge that their descendants, after the days of Joshua, were no better, and proceeds to prove it. The first clause describes them both as rebels and traitors. They were turned, i. e., as some suppose, turned aside, swerved or twisted in the archer's hand, so as to give a wrong direction to the arrow. Others understand it to mean, they were converted (or became) like a deceitful bow, i. e. one which deceives the expectation, and fails to accomplish the design for which it is employed. By a similar trope, falsehood or lying is ascribed to waters which are not perennial, but fail precisely when most needed. See Isai. lviii. 11. Job vi. 15. The figure of a deceitful bow is borrowed from this passage by Hosea (vii. 16.)

58. And made him angry with their heights, and with their idols made him jealous. Here, for the first time, idolatry is mentioned as the great national sin of Israel after the death of Joshua and the contemporary elders. This sin is intimately connected with the one described in v. 9, since the failure to exterminate the Canaanites and gain complete possession of the country, with its necessary consequence, the continued residence of gross idolaters in the midst of Israel, could not fail to expose the chosen people to perpetual temptation, and afford occasion to their worst defections. In the last clause, graven images are put for the whole class of idols or created gods, of whom the true God must be jealous as his rivals, as well as indignant at the heights or high-places, the hill-tops where these false gods were most usually worshipped. The whole form of expression is Mosaic. See Deut. xxxii. 16, 21, and compare Ex. xx. 5.

59. God heard and was indignant, and rejected Israel exceedingly. The same sin is followed by the same retribution as in v. 21. Abhorred is an inadequate translation of the last verb, which denotes not merely an internal feeling, but the outward exhibition of it. It means not merely to abhor, but to reject with abhorrence. See above, on Ps. xv. 4. The addition of the intensive adverb, very or exceedingly, serves at the same time to enhance and to restrict the meaning of the verb which it qualifies. He abhorred them, not a little but exceedingly, and as a token of his doing so, rejected them, exceedingly, yet not utterly or altogether

As there is nothing to restrict the application of this statement, we must understand it in its widest sense, as meaning that the whole people was regarded with displeasure, and punished on account of its transgressions during the ascendancy of Ephraim.

60. And forsook the dwelling-place of Shilo, the tent (which) he caused to dwell among men. The punishment of Ephraim, not as the sole offender, but as the unfaithful leader of the chosen people, consisted in the transfer of the sanctuary, and the manifested presence of God in it, to the tribe which was intended from the first to have that honour (Gen. xlix. 10), but whose rights had been held in abeyance during the experimental chieftainship of Ephraim. The ark, after it was taken by the Philistines (1 Sam. iv. 17), never returned to Shiloh, but was deposited successively at Nob (1 Sam. xxi. 2) and at Gibeon (1 Kings iii. 4), until David pitched a tabernacle for it on Mount Zion (2 Chron. xv. 1.) See above, on Ps. xxiv. 1. Caused to dwell is an expression used in the very same connection in the history. See Josh., xviii. 1, and compare Deut. xii. 11, where the sanctuary is described as the place in which God caused his name to dwell. Among men implies that this was his only earthly residence, and hints at the true meaning of the sanctuary, as propounded in the Law (Ex. xxv. 8.)

61. And gave up to captivity his strength, and his beauty into the foeman's hand. This is a still more distinct allusion to the capture of the ark by the Philistines (1 Sam. iv. 17.) The pronouns admit of two constructions, as they may be referred either to God or Israel. In the former case, the ark is called his strength, because it was the symbol of his saving presence and a pledge for the exertion of his power to protect and save his people. It is called his beauty or honour, as it marked the place where God was pleased to manifest his glory. At the same time it was Israel's strength, because it was considered as ensuring the divine protection (1 Sam. iv. 3), and his glory, because the possession of this symbol was his highest honour (1 Sam. iv. 21) Both these senses are so perfectly appropriate, that it is not easy to choose either, to the entire exclusion of the other.

62. And abandoned to the sword his people, and at his heritage was wrath. For the meaning of the first verb, see above on v. 48, and for that of the second, on v. 21. To the sword, to defeat and destruction in war, with particular reference to 1 Sam. iv. 10. The severity of these judgments is enhanced by their having been inflicted on his people and his heritage.

63. His youths (or chosen ones) the fire devoured, and his maidens were not praised. This may either mean that they attracted no attention on account of public troubles, or that they were not praised in nuptial songs, implying what is expressed in the text of the English Bible. to wit, that they were not given to marriage. The fire may be a figure for destructive war, as in Num. xxi. 28. The pronoun (his) refers to Israel as a whole or an ideal person.

64. His priests by the sword fell, and his widows weep not. The priests are particularly mentioned because, at the time specially referred to, the chief magistracy was vested in a sacerdotal family, and because Hophni and Phinehas, the sons of Eli, were among the first victims of the great calamity in question. See 1 Sam. iv. 11, 17. In the last clause there seems to be allusion to the death of Phinehas' wife, whose sorrow for her husband and herself was lost in sorrow for the departing glory of Israel (1 Sam. iv. 21.) In a wider sense, the words may represent the whole class of Israelitish widows as not weeping for their husbands, either because they were engrossed by their own perils and personal sufferings, or, as some interpreters suppose, because the bodies of the slain were absent, and there could not therefore be a formal mourning accordance with the oriental usage. The last words of this verse are copied in Job xxvii. 15.

65. Then awoke, as a sleeper, the Lord, as a hero rejoicing from wine. His apparent connivance or indifference to what was passing was abruptly exchanged for new and terrible activity. The Lord, the sole and rightful sovereign, both of men in general and of Israel in particular. A hero, mighty man, or warrior. See above, on Ps. xiv. 8. From wine is not to be construed with awoke or awakes understood, but with rejoicing, exhilarated, cheered by wine.

66. And he struck his foes back (and) disgrace of eternity gave them. The idea of driving his assailants back, repelling or repulsing them, is worthier in itself and better suited to the context than the one expressed in the English Bible. Perpetual dishonour was in fact the doom of the Philistines from the time of the events in question. The successes particularly meant are those of Saul and David. Gave them, or to them, as their portion

67. And rejected the tent of Joseph, and the tribe of Ephraim did not choose. This is the completion and specification of the statement in v. 60. Even after the punishment of Israel, as a whole, had ceased, Ephraim, though still a member of the chosen people, was deprived of the ascendancy, of which he had proved himself unworthy, and by means of which he had betrayed the whole race into grievous sin. The tent or house of Joseph (the progenitor of Ephraim) is particularly mentioned, because the honour taken from that family was the honour of God's dwelling in the midst of them. The last clause might be rendered, and the tribe of Ephraim no (longer) chose. But the original contains a simple negative without qualification; and according to the scriptural account, Ephraim never was the chosen tribe, but only allowed to act as such, for a particular purpose, just as the experimental reign of Saul afterwards preceded the commencement of the true theocratical monarchy in David.

68. And chose the tribe of Judah, the Mount Zion which he loved. He now assigned the visible pre-eminence to Judah, who had long enjoyed it in the divine purpose (Gen. xlix. 10.) Zion is mentioned as the capital of Judah, the place of the sanctuary, and the seat of the theocratic monarchy. The name, as usual in this book, does not signify the single eminence so called, but the entire height on which Jerusalem was built.

69. And built like high (places) his sanctuary, like the earth (which) he founded forever. Some give the adjective in the first clause the abstract sense of heights, which it never has in usage. Others supply heavens, but the construction most agreeable to usage is that which supplies hills or mountains. The sanctuary is then described as being, not externally but spiritually, lofty as mountains and enduring as the earth.

70. And chose David (as) his servant, and took him from the sheep-folds. Having spoken of the tribe and the particular locality preferred to Ephraim and Shiloh, he now brings into view the personal instrument or agent, by whom it pleased God that the theocratic kingdom should be founded. He did not choose David because he was his servant, i. e. a good man, but to be his servant, in the same pregnant and emphatic sense in which the title is applied to him in Ps. xviii. 1. The sovereignty of the choice is indicated by the humble occupation and condition from which he was promoted.

71. From behind the suckling (ewes) he brought him, to feed Jacob his people and Israel his heritage. From behind them, i. e. from following and watching them with tender care, one of the chief duties of a shepherd. The next word in Hebrew is a participle, and means, nursing, giving suck. The sense is incorrectly given in the common version of this place, and ambiguously in that of Isai xl. 11. To feed expresses only one part of the meaning of the Hebrew verb, which signifies to do the work or exercise the office of a shepherd. See above, on Ps. xlix. 14 (13.) The contrast presented is, that he who had spent his youth in tending sheep was now to be the shepherd of a nation, nay of the choser people, of the church, the heritage of God himself. To this passage, and those portions of the history on which it is founded (2 Sam. vii. 8. 1 Chron. xi. 2), may be traced the constant use of pastoral images, in the later Scriptures, to express the relation which subsists between the Church and Christ, as its Chief Shepherd, and his faithful ministers as his representatives and deputies.

72. And he has fed them after his integrity of heart, and in the skill (or prudence) of his hands will lead them (still.) This is no sudden interruption of the psalm, but the conclusion to which all was tending from the first. At the same time it implies that when the psalm was written David was still reigning and expected to reign longer. Besides the divine attestation here afforded to his theocratical fidelity, the verse may be regarded as a beautiful tribute to the good and great King from his chief musician and fellow seer. To lead, in the last clause, is to lead or tend a flock, and, with the parallel term feed, makes up the full description of a shepherd.

P S A L M L X X I X .

THIS psalm belongs to the same period with Ps. lxxiv, perhaps that of the Babylonish conquest, and contains a description of the sufferings of the chosen people, vs. 1—4, a prayer for deliverance, vs. 5—12, and a promise of thanksgiving, v. 13.

1. A Psalm. By Asaph. Oh God, gentiles have come into thy heritage; they have defiled thy holy temple; they have turned Jerusalem to heaps. The intrusion of heathen into the sanctuary was its worst dishonour. They have placed Jerusalem for heaps, or as a heap of ruins. This includes the destruction of the temple. Compare Ps. lxxiv. 4.

2. They have given the corpse of thy servants (as) food to the bird of the heavens, the flesh of thy saints to the (wild) beast of the earth. A common description of extensive and promiscuous carnage. The words translated corpse, bird, beast, are all collectives. The last has here its most specific and distinctive sense as denoting beasts of prey. See above, on Ps. lxxviii. 11 (10.) lxxiv. 19.

3. They have shed their blood like water round about Jerusalem and there is none burying, or none to bury them. There is no period in the history of ancient Israel, to which these terms can be applied without extravagance, except that of the Babylonian conquest.

4. We have been (or become) a contempt to our neighbours, a scorn and derision to those round about us. See above, on Ps. xlv. 14 (13), where the very same expressions are employed.

5. Unto what (point), until when, how long, Jehovah, wilt thou be angry forever, will burn like fire thy zeal (or jealousy?) With the first clause compare Ps. xiii. 2 (1.) lxxiv. 1, 10; with the second, Ex. xx. 5. Deut. xxix. 19 (20.) Ps. lxxviii. 58.

6. Pour out thy wrath against the nations which have not known thee, and upon kingdoms which thy name have not invoked. This is commonly explained as a prayer for divine judgments on the nations which combined for the destruction of Judah (2 Kings xxiv. 2). But it seems to be rather an expostulation and complaint that God had made no difference between his own people and the heathen. As if he had said, If thou must pour out thy wrath, let it rather be on those who neither know nor worship thee than on thine own peculiar people.

7. For he hath devoured Jacob, and his dwelling (or his pasture-ground) they have laid waste. The singular verb in the first clause relates to the chief enemy, the plural in the last to his confederates. The wide sense of dwelling and the narrower one of pasture are both authorized by usage. See above, on Ps. xxiii. 2. lxxv. 13 (12.) lxxiv. 20.

8. Remember not against us the iniquities of former (generations); make haste, let thy compassions meet us, for we are reduced exceedingly. Against us, literally, as to us, respecting us, which, in this connection, must mean to our disadvantage or our condemnation. Former iniquities is scarcely a grammatical construction of the Hebrew words usually so translated. The adjective, when absolutely used, always refers to persons and means ancestors or ancients. Personal and hereditary guilt are not exclusive but augmentative of one another. The sons merely fill up the iniquities of their fathers. The verb hasten (מָהֵר) may be either imperative or infinitive. If the latter, it qualifies the following verb, as in the English version, let thy tender mercies speedily prevent us. For the meaning of this last verb, see above, on Ps. xxi. 4 (3.) Reduced, weakened, brought low, both in strength and condition. See above, on Ps. xl. 2 (1), where the cognate adjective is used. It was probably the verse before us that determined the position of this psalm, in close connection with Ps. lxxviii, the great theme of which is the iniquity of former generations.

9. Help us, oh God of our salvation, on account of the glory of thy name; and set us free and pardon our sins for the sake of thy (own) name. The title, God of our salvation, is expressive of a covenant obligation to protect his people, as well as of protection and deliverance experienced already. On account, literally, for the word, or as we say in English for the sake, which is used above, however, to translate a different Hebrew word. The glory of thy name, to maintain and vindicate the honour of thy attributes as heretofore revealed in act. See above, on Ps. v. 12 (11.) xxiii. 3. Set us free, deliver us, from our present sufferings and the power of our enemies. Pardon our sins, literally, make atonement for them, i. e. forgive them for the sake of the expiation which thou hast thyself provided. See above, on Ps. lxxviii. 38. It is characteristic of the ancient saints to ask God's favour, not for their own sake merely, but for the promotion of his glory.

10. Wherefore should the nations say, Where (is) their God? Known among the nations, in our sight, be the avenging of the blood of thy servants, the (blood) poured out (or shed), as was described above, in v. 3. This argument in favour of God's interposition, founded on the false conclusions which his enemies would draw from his refusal, is of frequent occurrence in the Pentateuch. See Ex. xxxii. 12. Num. xiv. 13—16. Deut. ix. 28, and compare Joel ii. 17, from which the words before us are directly borrowed. Where is their God, the invisible, spiritual being whom they worship, but who cannot save them from external dangers? Or the meaning may be, where is the proof of that almighty power, and that love for his own people, of which they have so often and so loudly boasted? The English Bible makes the verb in the second clause agree with God (let him be known), and supplies a preposition before vengeance (by the revenging.) But the ancient versions, followed by the Prayer Book and the best modern interpreters, construe the verb and noun together (known be the avenging.) The diversity of gender may be easily reduced to the general law of Hebrew syntax, that when the verb precedes its subject, and especially when separated from it, the former may assume the masculine form, not as such, but as the primitive and simplest form. In our sight, literally, to our eyes, just as we say in English to our faces. This aggravating circumstance is borrowed from Deut. vi. 22, and the idea of avenging blood from Deut. xxxii. 43.

11. Let the sighing of the prisoner come before thee, according to the greatness of thine arm, suffer to survive the sons of death (or of mortality.) The nation is here viewed as an individual captive, not without reference to the literal captivity and exile occasioned by the Babylonian conquest, and with evident historical allusion to the bondage of Israel in Egypt, from the account of which (Ex. ii. 23—25) some of the expressions here are borrowed. Come before thee, reach thee, and attract thy notice. Compare the opposite expression in Isai. i. 23. The arm, as usual, is the symbol of exerted strength. See above, on Ps. x. 15. xxxvii. 17. xlv

4 (3.) The whole phrase is a Mosaic one. See Ex. xv. 16. and compare Num. xiv. 19. Deut. iii. 24. The last verb in the sentence means to leave behind or over, to cause or suffer to remain. See Ex. x. 15. xii. 10. Isai. i. 9. The last noun in Hebrew occurs only here, but is an obvious derivative from (מֵת) death, bearing perhaps the same relation to it that mortalitas sustains to mors. According to a well known oriental idiom, the whole phrase denotes dying men, or those about to die, or more specifically, those condemned or doomed to death.

12. And render to our neighbours sevenfold into their bosom their contempt (with) which they have contemned thee, Lord! The first verb is a causative and means to bring back or cause to return. See above, on Ps. lxxii. 10. The neighbours are those mentioned in v. 4, and the allusion here at least includes the expression of contemptuous incredulity in v. 10. Sevenfold, a common idiomatic term denoting frequent repetition or abundance. See above, on Ps. xii. 7 (6.) Into the bosom, an expression which originally seems to have had reference to the practice of carrying and holding things in the lap or the front fold of the flowing oriental dress, has in usage the accessory sense of retribution or retaliation. See my note on Isai. lxxv. 6, 7, and compare Jer. xxxii. 18. Luke vi. 38. The cognate noun and verb, translated contempt and contemned, denote not the mere internal feeling, but the oral expression of it by revilings, scoffs, and insults. See above, on Ps. xlii. 11 (10.) lxix. 10 (9.) The Lord at the conclusion is by no means a mere expletive, but aggravates the sin of these despisers by describing it as committed against their rightful sovereign.

13. And we, thy people and flock of thy pasture, will give thanks to thee forever, to generation and generation will we recount thy praise. Some interpreters needlessly make two distinct propositions, we (are) thy people (and therefore) will give thanks, etc

The flock of thy pasture, that which thou feedest, that of which thou art the shepherd. See above, on Ps. lxxiv. 1. lxxviii. 70—72. Forever, literally, to eternity. The following words, though thrown into the first clause by the masoretic intèr-punctuation, belong to the second, as appears from the parallel structure of the sentence.

P S A L M L X X X .

THIS psalm was probably occasioned by the overthrow and deportation of the ten tribes, and expresses the feelings of the ancient church in view of that event. Besides a title or inscription, v. 1, it contains a lamentation or complaint, in reference to the strokes which had befallen Israel, vs. 2—8 (1—7); an exquisite picture of the vocation and original condition of the chosen race, under the image of a transplanted vine, vs. 9—14 (8—13); and an earnest prayer that God would again have mercy on his afflicted people, vs. 15—20 (14—19.) The structure of ⁴²3 psalm is very regular, deriving a strophical character from the recurrence of a burden or refrain in vs. 4 (3), 8 (7), 20 (19.) The disputed questions, as to the occasion and design of the composition, will be considered in the exposition of the several verses.

1. To the Chief Musician. As to lilies. A Testimony. By Asaph. A Psalm. The first and last of these inscriptions show that the composition was intended to be used in public worship. The preposition before lilies indicates the theme or subject, as in Ps. v. 1. Lilies, as in Ps. xlv. 1. lx. 1. lxix. 1, probably means loveliness, delightfulness, as an attribute of the divine favour which is here implored. Testimony is a term commonly applied to the divine law, as a testimony against sin, and in such cases as the present indicates the divine authority under which the Psalmist writes. See above, on Ps. lx. 1.

2. Shepherd of Israel, give ear, leading Joseph like a flock, sitting (on) the cherubim, shine forth! The description of Jehovah as the Shepherd of Israel is peculiarly appropriate in this connection because borrowed from Jacob's blessing upon Joseph, Gen. xlviii. 15. xlix. 24. According to some interpreters, Joseph is simply a poetical equivalent to Israel, the son being put upon a level with the father in the usage of the language, on account of his historical pre-eminence and his being the progenitor of עַוְו of the twelve tribes. According to another view, Joseph denotes the ten tribes as distinguished from the kingdom of Judah, which is rendered more probable by the specification of certain tribes in the next verse. On this hypothesis, the verse before us is an invocation of Jehovah, as the patron and protector, not of Judah merely but of all Israel, including the posterity of Joseph and the tribes politically allied to them. Dwelling (between) the Cherubim, or sitting (enthroned upon) the Cherubim, a token of superiority to all his creatures. See above, on Ps. xviii. 11 (10.)

3 (2.) Before Ephraim and Benjamin and Manasseh arouse thy strength and come to save us. The first clause alludes to the encampment and march through the wilderness, in which these three tribes always went together, as the descendants of one mother (Gen. xlv. 20. Num. ii. 18—24. x. 22—24.) It has commonly been inferred from 1 Kings xii. 21, that the tribe of Benjamin adhered to the kingdom of Judah. But Hengstenberg has made it highly probable, at least, that those words relate only to the dwellers in Jerusalem and the immediately circumjacent country; that the tribe, as such, was reckoned one of the ten tribes, among which Simeon was not included, because, in fulfil ment of Jacob's prophecy (Gen. xlix 7), they had no distinct or compact territory of their own, but certain towns within the boundary of Judah (Josh. xix. 1—9.) Hence we are told expressly and repeatedly that in the great schism after the death of Solomon, but one tribe remained faithful to the house of David (1 Kings xi. 13, 32, 36. xii. 20), i. e. one complete tribe, having a definite and independent share in the allotment of the land. That Benjamin should take part with Ephraim and Manasseh rather than with Judah, might have been expected from the near affinity and mutual affection of the sons of Rachel, and from the jealousy which must have been excited by the transfer of the crown from Saul, a Benjamite, to David, a Jew. The same thing incidentally appears from such passages as 2 Sam. xix. 21 (20), where Shimei, a Benjamite, speaks of himself as representing the whole house of Joseph. If this be admitted or assumed, the mention of Benjamin with Ephraim and Manasseh, in the verse before us, far from invalidating, seems to confirm the application of the passage to the kingdom of the Ten Tribes, and that of the whole psalm to their overthrow and deportation by the Assyrians. Thus understood, the verse before us is a prayer, that God would again march at the head of the "camp of Ephraim," as he did of old. Arouse thy strength, awake from thy present state of seeming inaction and indifference. See above, on Ps. xliv. 24 (23.) lxxviii. 65. Come, literally go, which may mean go forth, march; but see above, on Ps. xlvi 9 (8.) To save us, literally, for salvation to us.

4 (3.) Oh God, restore us, and let thy face shine; and let us be saved! The verb in the first clause would suggest two ideas to a Hebrew reader, both of which are here appropriate. The first is that of a literal bringing back from exile or captivity; the other that of restoration to a former state, without regard to change of place or other local circumstances. In the case before us, the general and figurative sense of restoration includes that of literal return. The church prays to be restored to her integrity and normal state, by the redemption of the part which had gone into captivity. This prayer was substantially fulfilled in the return of many members of the ten tribes with Judah from the Babylonish exile, while the tribes themselves, as organized bodies, and the apostate kingdom which they constituted, ceased to exist. The petition, cause thy face to shine, i. e. look upon us with a favourable countenance, is borrowed from the sacerdotal blessing, Num. vi. 25. See above, on Ps. iv. 7 (6.) xxxi. 17 (16.) The last verb in the verse may also be explained as an expression of strong confidence, we shall be saved, which really involves the subjunctive sense preferred by some interpreters, that we may be saved. This sentence, which is solemnly repeated at the close of vs. 4, 20 (3, 19), is thereby marked as the theme or key-note of the whole composition.

5 (4.) Jehovah, God, (God of) Hosts, how long dost thou smoke against the prayer of thy people? The accumulation of divine names involves an appeal to the perfections which they indicate, as so many arguments or reasons why the prayer should be favourably heard and answered. See above, on Ps. l. 1, and for the meaning of the third title, on Ps. xxiv. 10. How long, literally, until when? The verb is preterite in form (hast thou smoked.) implying that the state of things complained of had already long existed. Smoke is here (as in Ps. lxxiv. 1) put for fire, the common emblem of divine wrath, for the sake of an allusion to the smoke from the altar of incense, the appointed symbol of the prayers of God's people. See Lev. xvi. 13, and compare Ps. cxli. 2. Isai. vi. 4. Rev. v. 8. viii. 3, 4. There is then a tacit antithesis between the two significations of the symbol. The smoke of God's wrath, and that of his people's prayers, are presented in a kind of conflict.

6 (5.) Thou hast made them eat tear-bread, and made them drink of tears a tierce (or measure.) The noun tear in Hebrew is commonly collective, but the singular and plural forms are here combined. See above, on Ps. vi. 7 (6.) xxxix. 13 (12.) lvi. 9 (8.) The same strong figure of tears as nourishment occurs above, Ps. xlii. 4 (3.) The last word in Hebrew means a measure which is the third of another measure, thus corresponding to the old and wide sense of the English tierce. See my note on Isai. xl. 12. Measure here denotes abundance.

7 (6.) Thou makest us a strife unto our neighbours, and our enemies amuse themselves (at our expense) The future verbs imply a probable continuance of this humiliating treatment unless God interpose to put an end to it, and thus suggest a reason for his doing so. Makest us, literally, puttest, settest up. See above, on Ps. xlv. 14 (13.) A strife, a subject of contention, perhaps in reference to the emulous desire of their neighbours to insult and aggravate their sufferings. Here, as in Ps. xlv. 14 (13.) lxxix. 4, these neighbours are the circumjacent nations, who always triumphed in the time of Israel's calamities (Am. i. 9, 11 Obad. 12.) The literal translation of the last words is will mock (or scoff) for them, i. e. for themselves, for their own gratification, and at their own discretion, as they will.

8 (7.) Oh God, (God of) Hosts, restore us, and let thy face shine, and let us be saved! See above, on v. 4 (3.) The only variation in the case before us is the addition of a second divine title, implying God's supremacy above the hosts of heaven, both material and spiritual, and thus indirectly urging a new argument for being heard and answered. See above, on v. 5 (4.)

9 (8.) A vine out of Egypt thou transplantest, thou drivest out nations and plantest it. There is a twofold usage of the first verb in Hebrew, which imparts peculiar force and beauty to the sentence. Its primary meaning, to pluck up, is strictly appropriate to the act of transplanting, while its secondary but more usual sense of moving an encampment, marching, is equally appropriate to the removal of the nation which the vine here represents, and is actually so applied in Ps. lxxviii. 52 above, as well as in the history itself, Ex. xii. 37. xv. 22. The next verb is also used in Ps. lxxviii. 55 and Ex. xxiii. 28. xxxiii. 2. xxxiv. 11. The figure of planting occurs above, in Ps. xlv. 3 (2), that of a vine in Isai. v. 1—7. The points of comparison are probably assiduous culture, luxuriant growth, and fruitfulness. The argument involved is that by forsaking Israel God would be undoing his own work. Compare Jer. xlv. 4.

10 (9.) Thou didst clear (the way) before it, and it took root and filled the land. The first word means to clear by the removal of obstructions. See Gen. xxiv. 31. Lev. xiv. 36, and compare my notes on Isai. xl. 3. lvii. 14. lxii. 10. The sense may here be, thou didst clear (the ground), i. e. from weeds and stones (compare Isai. v. 2) before it, i. e. to make room for it or prepare a place for it. Took root, literally, rooted its roots, the cognate verb and noun being combined by a common Hebrew idiom. See my note on Isai. xxvii. 6.

11 (10.) Covered were the mountains (with) its shadow, and with its branches the cedars of God. This is an amplification and poetical exaggeration of the last words of v. 10 (9.) So completely did it fill the land that its shadow was cast upon the highest hill-tops, and its tendrils overran the loftiest trees. Cedars of God, i. e. in their kind the noblest products of his power, the attribute suggested by (עֲצֵי) the divine name here used. See above, on Ps. xxxvi. 7 (6.) Some interpreters suppose the southern range of mountains west of Jordan, sometimes called Mount Judah or the Highlands of Judah, to be here specifically meant and contrasted with the cedars of Lebanon, the northern frontier of the Land of Promise, just as Lebanon and Kadesh are contrasted in Ps. xxix. 5—8. That Lebanon, though not expressly mentioned, is referred to, appears probable from the analogy of Ps. xxix. 5. xcii. 13. civ. 16. The literal fact conveyed by all these figures is the one prophetically stated in Gen xxviii. 14. Deut. xi. 24. Jos. i. 4.

12 (11.) It sends forth its boughs to the sea, and to the river its shoots (or suckers.) Compare the description in Isai. xvi. 8. If the north and south are indicated in the preceding verse, the other cardinal points may here be represented by the Mediterranean and the Euphrates.

13 (12.) Why hast thou broken down its walls (or hedges), and all pluck it that pass by the way? See below, on Ps. lxxxix. 41, 42 (40, 41), and compare Isai. v. 5. The last words are descriptive of the hostile powers of the heathen world, with particular reference to the neighbours of v. 6 (5.)

14 (13.) The boar out of the wood doth waste it, and the beast of the field feeds upon it. For the precise sense of the word translated beast, see above, on Ps. l. 11, the only other place where it occurs in such an application, being thus peculiar to the psalms which bear the name of Asaph. The essential idea conveyed by the figures of this verse is that of fierce and greedy enemies. If any more specific explanation be admissible, the wild boar may denote the Assyrian power, and the parallel term its allies and dependents. Feeds upon it, as a sheep upon its pasture. See above, on Ps. xxxvii. 3.

15 (14.) Oh God, (God of) Hosts, pray return, look from heaven and see, and visit this vine. The expostulation and complaint are followed by an earnest prayer. Pray return is used to represent (אָנִי) the Hebrew particle of entreaty, expressed in the English Bible by a circumlocution (we beseech thee.) The prayer that God will return, implies that the evils just complained of were occasioned by his absence. Visit, manifest thy presence and thy favourable disposition. See above, on Ps. viii. 5 (4.) This vine, Israel, the church or chosen people, which, though robbed of some of its luxuriant branches, still lives and is yet to bear abundant fruit.

16 (15.) And sustain what thy right hand has planted, and over the child thou hast reared for thyself (do thou watch, or extend thy protection.) The common version of the first words (and the vineyard) is countenanced neither by the ancient versions nor by Hebrew etymology and usage. By giving it, as a verbal form, the sense of covering, protecting (which belongs to some kindred roots), the over in the last clause may depend upon it, and no verb need in that case be supplied. Thy right hand implies an exertion of strength, and at the same time involves an allusion to the name of Benjamin (Son of the Right Hand), here perhaps representing the whole race, on account of the connection of that tribe with both the rival kingdoms, its central position, its possession of the sanctuary, and its historical relation to the infant monarchy under Saul the Benjamite. To complete the allusion, the other element in the name (בן a son) is then introduced and metaphorically applied to the vine, which is still the Psalmist's theme, by an assimilation of animal and vegetable life common in all languages. Reared, literally, strengthened, made strong, i. e. raised, brought up. See my note on Isai. xlv. 14. For thyself, not for its own sake, but as a means of promoting the divine praise and glory.

17 (16.) (It is) burnt with fire, cut (down or up); at the rebuke of thy countenance they perish. The prayer is interrupted for a moment by a new description of the evils which occasioned it. The first clause alludes to the destruction of vineyards by fire and steel in ancient warfare, here recognized however as a divine judgment. At the rebuke, i. e. at the time, and also as a conse quence of it. Any expression of disapprobation and displeasure, whether by word or deed, is a rebuke. See above, on Ps. lxxvi. 7 (6.) The rebuke is here supposed to be expressed in the countenance, a much more natural interpretation than that which makes thy face mean thy presence. They perish, those who had before been represented by the vine transplanted out of Egypt. The future form implies that it will always be so, when God utters his rebuke.

18 (17.) Let thy hand be on the man of thy right hand, on the son of man thou hast reared (or made strong) for thyself. Here again the component parts of the name Benjamin are introduced as parallels, precisely as in v. 16 (15.) The man of thy right hand may either be the man whom thy power has raised up, or the man who occupies the post of honour at thy right hand. That the words were intended to suggest both ideas, is a supposition perfectly agreeable to Hebrew usage. A more doubtful question is that in reference to the first words of the sentence, let thy hand be upon him, whether this means in favour or in wrath. The only way in which both senses can be reconciled is by applying the words to the Messiah, as the ground of the faith and hope expressed. Let thy hand fall not on us but on our substitute. Compare the remarkably similar expressions in Acts v. 31.

19 (18.) And (then) we will not backslide from thee; thou wilt quicken us, and on thy name will we call. Forgiveness founded on atonement is the best security against relapses into sin. The first verb is the one used to describe the general apostasy in Ps. liii. 4 (3.) Quicken, restore to life, or save alive, or simply make alive. Compare Ps. lxxi. 20. The meaning of the last clause is, thee (alone) will we invoke, as the object of our trust and worship, a profession involving the repudiation of all other gods.

20 (19.) Jehovah, God, (God of) Hosts, restore us, let thy face shine, and let us be saved! While the prayer in this verse is identical with that in v. 4 (3) and 8 (7), there is a kind of climax in the form of the address. In the first of the three places it is simply God, in the second God of Hosts, in the third and last Jehovah God of Hosts, as if to add to the general ideas of divinity and sovereignty those of self-existence, eternity, and covenant-relation to his chosen people, as additional warrants for the hope and prayer, that he would turn them, smile upon them, save them.

PSALM LXXXI.

1. To the Chief Musician. On (or according to) the Gittith. By Asaph. For the probable meaning of the Gittith, see above on Ps. viii. 1. In the absence of any proof to the contrary, the Asaph of this title must be assumed to be the contemporary of David. See above, on Ps. l. 1. The psalm before us was probably intended to be sung at the Passover, as it consists of an exhortation to praise God for the deliverance of Israel from Egypt, vs. 2—8 (1—7), a complaint of their ingratitude, vs. 9—13 (8—12), and a glowing picture of the happy effects to be expected from obedience and fidelity, vs. 14—18 (13—17.)

2 (1.) Sing aloud unto God our strength, make a joyful noise unto the God of Jacob! The first verb is properly a causative meaning make or let rejoice. See above, on Ps. lxxv. 9 (8), and compare Deut. xxxii. 43, in which place, and in this, it is commonly supposed to be intransitive. The parallel verb is a generic term, applied both to shouting and the sound of a trumpet. See above, on Ps. xli. 12 (11.) xlvii. 2 (1.) God our strength, our strong protector and deliverer, in which character he specially revealed himself in the deliverance of Israel from Egypt, the main theme or subject of this psalm, and thereby proved himself to be indeed the covenant or tutelary God of Jacob.

3 (2.) Raise the song, and beat the drum, the sweet narp with the lute (or lyre.) Beat, literally, give, i. e. give forth its sound, or sound it. See above, on Ps. xlvi. 7 (6.) lxviii. 34 (33.) lxxvii. 18 (17.) This is to be understood as a mutual exhortation of the musicians to each other during the actual performance.

4 (3.) Blow, in the month, the trumpet, at the full moon, on the day of our feast. The month, by way of eminence, was the first month, in which the passover was celebrated (Ex. xii. 1, 2.) Here, as in the Hebrew of Lev. xxiii. 5, the month is first named, then the particular part of it. That this last was no unessential circumstance, appears from the fact, that when an extraordinary passover was kept, it was on the same day of another month (Num. ix. 9—14), and that when Jeroboam changed the feast of tabernacles, he transferred it to the same day of the eighth month (1 Kings xii. 32.) The time thus selected for religious observance seems to have been that of the full moon. Compare the original and marginal translation of Prov. vii. 20. The day of our festival or feast, i. e. the great day of the Passover. Our feast, if emphatic, is intended to describe it as a distinctive national solemnity. The continued use of instrumental music at this festival appears from 2 Chr. xxx 21.

5 (4.) For a law to Israel (is) this, a right (belonging) to the God of Jacob. The observance of this festival was not a mere matter of usage or conventional arrangement, but binding on the people and due to Jehovah as their God. The personal pronoun (it) at the end of the first clause is emphatic, and may be better expressed in English by a demonstrative. A right, jus, that to which he is rightfully entitled.

6 (5.) (As) a testimony in Joseph he set it, in his coming out over the land of Egypt. A speech I knew not I am hearing. Besides the constant use of testimony in the sense of law, Ps. xix. 8 (7.) lx. 1. lxxviii. 5. lxxx. 1, the word is appropriate, in its strict sense, to the Passover, as a perpetual memento or memorial of the exodus from Egypt. Joseph is here put for Israel, on account of his pre-eminence during the residence in Egypt (Gen. xlix. 26. Ex. i. 8.) He set it, i. e. God instituted or ordained the festival. In his coming, at the time, or in the very act, of his departure. Over the land of Egypt includes the usual expression, from or out of it (Ex. xxxiv. 18), but suggests the additional ideas of publicity and triumph. Israel, at the exodus, passed over a considerable tract of the Egyptian territory, and at the same time, as it were, over the heads of the humbled and terrified Egyptians. Compare Ex. xiv. 8. Num. xxxiii. 3. Speech, literally, lip, a common idiomatic expression for dialect or language. According to the version of this last clause above given, it refers to the words of God that follow, and describes the people as having then heard what they never heard before. Some interpreters, however, understand it as describing the condition of the people while in Egypt, by one of its most marked and painful circumstances, namely, that they there resided in the midst of a foreign and by implication heathen race. This agrees better with the figurative usage of lip elsewhere, and is strongly favoured by the analogy of Deut. xxviii. 49. Jer. v. 15. Ps. cxiv. 1. Compare my note on Isai. xxxiii. 19. Thus understood, the clause may be translated, (where) I heard a tongue I did not understand. The future form of the first verb has reference to the actual time of the events, into which the speaker here transports himself.

7 (6.) I removed from the burden his shoulder ; his hands from the basket escape. The first verb strictly means I caused (or suffered) to depart. The idea is borrowed from Ex. vi. 6, 7. The specific reference is no doubt to the carrying of bricks and mortar, and the pot or basket of the next clause is the vessel used for that purpose, the form of which has been found delineated in a burial-vault at Thebes. Escape, literally, pass away.

8 (7.) In distress thou hast called and I have delivered thee; I will (yet) answer thee in the secret place of thunder; I will try thee at the waters of Strife. The secret or hiding place of thunder is the dark cloud charged with tempest which overhung Mount Sinai at the giving of the law (Ex. xx. 18.) This is here anticipated or predicted, as well as the murmuring of the people at Meribah (Ex. xvii. Num. xx.) as a signal instance of their unbelief and disobedience. Thus understood, the verse continues the words of God himself, at the crisis of the Exodus. According to the other exegetical hypothesis already mentioned, there is here a sudden change of speaker, and the future verbs in this verse are to be explained as historical presents.

9 (8.) Hear, my people, and I will testify against thee, Israel, if thou wilt hearken to me. There is a strong resemblance between this verse and Ps. l. 7. The conditional particle (if) in the last clause is by some taken optatively, oh that thou wouldst hearken, or, as we might say in English, if thou wouldst but hearken. As examples of this usage, Ps. xcv. 7. cxxxix. 19. Prov. xxiv. 11, are cited. Other interpreters deny its existence and regard this as an instance of aposiopesis, if thou wilt hearken to me (thou shalt do well,) like those in Ex. xxxii. 32. Luke xix. 42. See above, on Ps. xxvii. 13. A simpler and more natural construction than either is to make this the condition of the statement in the first clause. 'I will speak, if thou wilt hear me.'

10 (9.) There shall not be in thee a strange God, and thou shalt not worship a foreign God. The divine name here used is the one denoting power. 'Thou shalt acknowledge no Almighty but the true one.' The prohibitory futures have a stronger sense than that expressed in some translations, let there be no strange God in thee, i. e. in the midst of thee, among you. A strange God, a God who is an alien to Jehovah and to Israel. Worship, literally bow down or prostrate thyself. A foreign God, a God of strangeness, or belonging to foreign parts, in other words, a heathen deity. See above, on Ps. xviii. 45, 46 (44, 45.) The specific reason here implied is that expressed in Deut. xxxii. 12. The general principle is the same that is propounded in the first commandment (Ex. xx. 3. Deut. v. 7.)

11 (10.) I am Jehovah, thy God, who brought thee up out of the land of Egypt; open thy mouth wide and I will fill it. The reason of the precept in the foregoing verse is now explicitly declared. The (one) making thee ascend, or causing thee to come up. Open thy mouth wide, literally, widen it. The supply of food is here put for that of all necessities. The reason here suggested for adhering to Jehovah is, that He not only had delivered them from Egypt, but was abundantly able to provide for them in Canaan and the wilderness.

12 (11.) And my people did not hearken to my voice, and Israel did not consent unto me. God having once been introduced as speaking, the description of the subsequent events is still ascribed to him. The phrase my people is designed to aggravate the guilt of their rebellion. My voice has special reference to the warning in vs 7—11 (6—10), supposed to be uttered at the exodus from Egypt. Some interpreters, however, make the whole verse a general description. Consent unto me, acquiesce in my requirements and agree to do my will. The form of expression is like that in Deut. xiii. 9. (8.)

13 (12.) And I gave them up to the corruption of their own

heart; they go on in their own counsels. The first verb strictly means I sent them forth, i. e. to walk in the corruption of their own heart. The word translated corruption occurs elsewhere only in Deut. xxix. 18, and in Jeremiah's imitations of it (Jer. iii. 17. vii. 24. ix. 13. xi. 8.) According to a Syriac analogy, and the most probable Hebrew etymology, it properly means hardness, corresponding to the πρώσις of the New Testament (Mark vii. 5. Rom. xi. 25. Eph. iv. 18.) In their own counsels, in the execution of their own evil purposes and unwise plans. The verb in the last clause may be read as a concession or permission, by referring the words to an anterior point of time. 'I gave them up, etc. (saying) let them go on in their own counsels.' As to the fearful kind of retribution here denounced, see Prov. i. 30, 31. Rom. i. 24. 2 Thess. ii. 10, 11.

14 (13.) If my people would (but) hearken to me (and) Israel in my ways would walk. The conditional particle at the beginning, although not the same with that in v. 9 (8), is construed in the same way, but with a stronger optative meaning. To listen to God's teaching and commands implies a docile and obedient spirit. To walk in his ways is to act as he approves and has required.

15 (14.) Soon would I bow down their enemies, and on their foes bring back my hand. The first Hebrew phrase strictly means like a little, but is used like the English yet a little, i. e. in a little while. See above, on Ps. ii. 12, and compare Ps. lxxiii. 2. To draw back the hand, in Ps. lxxiv. 11, means to withdraw or withhold it from action; but in this connection it conveys the opposite idea of bringing it again into action, with specific reference, as some suppose, to its use in former exigencies, v. 8 (7.) The phrase itself denotes mere action; the idea of hostile or destructive action is suggested by the context. See my note on Isai. i. 25.

16 (15.) The haters of Jehovah should lie to him, and their time should be forever. The first phrase is intended to suggest the consolatory thought that the foes of God's people are the foes of God himself. There is no need, therefore, of referring him to Israel or my people, as in Deut. xxxiii. 29, from which the clause is borrowed. The plurals before and after render this less natural, and as the interests of God and his people are identical, the meaning is the same in either case. To lie is here to yield a feigned obedience to a conqueror or superior enemy. See above, on Ps. xviii. 45 (44.) lxvi. 3. Their time, i. e. the continued existence of Israel as the chosen people. Compare 2 Sam. vii. 24.

17 (16.) And he would feed him with the fat of wheat, and from the rock with honey sate him. The first verb is a causative and means would let (or make) him eat. The fat of wheat, its richest part or finest quality, another transfer of animal attributes to vegetable objects. See above, on Ps. lxxx: 16 (15.) Honey from the rock, some suppose to mean wild honey; others, with more probability, honey supplied by miracle, like the water from the rock in the desert. All these strong expressions are borrowed from Deut. xxxii. 13, 14, and are imitated likewise in Ps. cxlvii. 14. Isai. xxxiv. 16. Wheat and honey, by a natural and primitive association, are here put for the necessities and the luxuries of human sustenance, and these again for the highest enjoyment and prosperity. The English version refers these four verses all to past time, had hearkened, had walked, should have subdued, should have submitted, should have endured, should have fed, should have satisfied. This is in fact the true construction of the similar passage in Isai. xlvi. 18; but there the conditional or optative particle is construed with the preterite, and not with the future tense as here, which makes an essential difference of syntax. See Nordheimer's Hebrew Grammar, § 1078.

P S A L M L X X X I I .

A BRIEF but pregnant statement of the responsibilities attached to the judicial office under the Mosaic dispensation. After declaring the relation which the judges bore to God, v. 1, he rebukes their malversation, v. 2, and exhorts them to a better practice, vs. 3, 4, and in case of their persistency in evil, v. 5, notwithstanding their acknowledged dignity, v. 6, threatens them with condign punishment, v. 7, to which the church responds by praying God himself to appear as the universal judge and sovereign, v. 8.

1. A Psalm. By Asaph. God stands in the assembly of the Mighty; in the midst of the gods he judges. There is no reason for doubting that the Asaph mentioned in this title was the Asaph of the reign of David, in whose times the necessity for such a warning must already have existed, if not in the person of the king, who, perhaps on that account, is not particularly mentioned, yet in his chiefs or nobles, the exalted though inferior magistrates who executed justice under him. The judicial appearance of Jehovah here presented is like that in Ps. l. 1. Stands, or, as the participle strictly means, (is) standing, stationing himself, assuming his position. The word translated assembly is one commonly applied to the congregation of Israel, as an organized whole or body politic. See Ex. xii. 3. xvi. 1. Lev. iv. 15. Num. xxvii. 17. Mighty is singular not plural in Hebrew, being one of the divine names (יְהוָה), and qualifies the congregation or assembly as belonging to God himself, i. e. instituted by him and held under his authority. The parallel expression, in the midst of the gods, superadds to this idea an allusion to a singular usage of the Pentateuch, according to which the theocratical magistrates, as mere representatives of God's judicial sovereignty, are expressly called Elohim, the plural form of which is peculiarly well suited to this double sense or application. See Ex. xxi. 6. xxii. 7, 8 (8, 9), and compare Deut. i. 17. xix. 17. 2 Chron. xix. 6. Even reverence to old age seems to be required on this principle (Lev. xix. 32), and obedience to parents in the fifth commandment (Ex. xx. 12), which really applies to all the offices and powers of the patriarchal system, a system founded upon natural relations, and originating in a simple extension of domestic or parental government, in which the human head represents the original and universal parent or progenitor. The remarkable use of the name God in Exodus, above referred to, is concealed from the reader of the English Bible, by the arbitrary use of the word judges, as a translation of the Hebrew, which of course it cannot be. He judges, will judge, is about to judge. The idea is, that as the judges were gods to other men, so he would be a judge to them. Compare Isai. iii. 13—15. Micah iii. 1—4. Jer. xxii. 1—4.

2. How long will ye judge wrong, and the faces of wicked men accept? Selah. The question implies that they had done so long enough, nay, too long, since it was wrong from the beginning. Wrong, in the strongest moral sense, injustice, wickedness. Wrong, in Hebrew as in English, may be construed either as an adverb or a noun or both, i. e. as a noun adverbially used to qualify the verb. See the similar construction of its counterpart or converse, Ps. lviii. 2 (1.) The last clause exemplifies one of the most peculiar Hebrew idioms. The combination usually rendered respect persons in the English Bible, and applied to judicial partiality, means literally to take (or take up) faces. Some suppose this to mean the raising of the countenance, or causing to look up from deep dejection. But the highest philological authorities are now agreed, that the primary idea is that of accepting one man's face or person rather than another's, the precise form of expression, though obscure, being probably derived from the practice of admitting suitors to confer with governors or rulers face to face, a privilege which can sometimes only be obtained by bribes, especially though not exclusively in oriental courts. The Selah commends the implied charge of official malversation to the serious reflection of the accused parties.

3. Judge the weak and fatherless, (to) the sufferer and the poor do justice. The indirect censure of their evil deeds is followed by a direct exhortation to do well. Compare Isai. i. 16, 17. The verb of the first clause is explained by that of the second, which is a technical forensic term, meaning to make innocent or righteous, i. e. to recognize or declare as such by a judicial act. See Ex. xxiii. 7. Deut. xxv. 1, and compare 2 Sam. xv. 4. Isai. 5. 23. l. 8. The word translated weak is applied to the defect both of bodily strength and of property or substance. See above, on Ps. xli. 2 (1.) It is used by Moses in the same connection. Ex. xxiii. 3. The fatherless or orphans are continually spoken of, as proper objects both of mercy and of justice. See above, on Ps. x. 14. lxviii. 6 (5), and compare Ex. xxii. 21 (22.) The word translated poor seems strictly to denote one who has grown poor or become impoverished. See the verbal root in Ps. xxxiv. 11 (10.)

4. Deliver the weak and the needy (man), from the hand of wicked (men) free (him.) The first verb means originally to suffer or cause to escape; the second to extricate or disembarass. From the hand of the wicked implies from their power, as actually exercised for coercion. The structure of the sentence may be made more regular by disregarding the pause-accent and attaching the needy to the last clause, and the poor from the hand of the wicked set free.

5. They know not and they will not understand ; in darkness they will (still) walk ; shaken are all the foundations of earth. This is the Lord's complaint of their incorrigible ignorance and indocility, which rendered even his divine instructions unavailing. The object of the first verbs is suggested by the context, as in Ps. xiv. 4. What they did not know and would not understand was their judicial duty and responsibility, the end for which they were invested with authority. Darkness is a figure both for ignorance and wickedness. See Prov. ii. 13. The denial or perversion of justice is described as disorganizing society. Compare the figures in Ps. xi. 3. lxxv. 4 (3)

6. I have said, Gods (are) ye, and sons of the Highest all of you. Their sin did not consist in arrogating to themselves too high a dignity, but in abusing it by malversation, and imagining that it relieved them from responsibility, whereas it really enhanced it. They were God's representatives, but for that very reason they were bound to be pre-eminently just and faithful. I have said, not merely to myself or in secret, but in my law ; referring to the passages in Exodus already cited. See above, on v. 1. Ye are gods, or God, i. e. ye occupy his place and are entrusted with his honour as a just and holy God. The pregnant significancy of the plural form is here the same as in v. 1 above. The parallel expression, sons of the Most High, denotes the closest and most intimate relation to Jehovah, as the Supreme or Sovereign God. See above, on Ps. ii. 7. This verse is cited by our Lord (John x. 34, 35), to show that if the divine name had been applied by God to mere men, there could be neither blasphemy nor folly in its application to the incarnate Son of God himself princes shall ye fall. Our idiom requires an adversative particle at the beginning, to bring out the antithetical relation of the sentences. But the first word in Hebrew is properly a particle of strong asseveration, certainly, assuredly. See above, on Ps. xxxi. 23 (22,) and compare my note on Isai. liii. 4. Like mankind, or men collectively, or like a man indefinitely, i. e. any other man. So in the other clause, like one of the princes, i. e. any other prince, or person holding an exalted station. The clauses constitute a climax. The first merely describes them as sharers in the general mortality of man. The second threatens them with death, i. e. violent or untimely death, as a special punishment Ye shall fall, by the sword (Jer. xxxix. 18,) or in some analogous manner. The verb is often absolutely used in this way to denote a violent and penal loss of life. See above, Ps. xx. 9, (8,) and below, Ps. xci. 7, and compare Ex. xix. 21, Jer. viii. 12. The general meaning of this verse, when taken in connection with the one before it, is that notwithstanding their exalted dignity, bestowed and recognized by God himself, they were not thereby exempted from the common mortality of men, nor even from those signal and destructive strokes, with which God often visits men as highly favored and exalted as themselves.

7 (Yet) verily like mankind shall ye die, and like one of the

8. Arise, oh God, judge the earth; for thou art to possess all nations. This is not, as some interpreters suppose, a mere wish that God would do what he had just threatened; for this would make the psalm end with a feeble anti-climax. It is rather a petition that, since the representative or delegated judges had proved so unfaithful, God would appear in person and reclaim the powers which had been so wickedly abused. And this he is besought to do, not only in Israel, where the proximate occasion of the prayer was furnished, but throughout the earth, over all whose nations he possessed, and was one day to make good, the same hereditary right, i. e. a right continuing unchanged through all successive generations.

PSALM LXXXIII.

1 A Song. A Psalm. By Asaph. To the general description (mizmôr), there is here prefixed a more specific one (shîr), which designates the composition as a song of praise or triumph. The same combination occurs above, in the title of Ps. xlviii, a composition which, as we have there seen, was probably occasioned by the victory of Jehoshaphat over the Moabites, Ammonites, and their confederates, as described in 2 Chr. ch. xx. This agrees well with the hypothesis, conclusively maintained by Hengstenberg, that the psalm before us has relation to the same event, and that as the forty-seventh was probably sung upon the field of battle, and the forty-eighth after the triumphant return to Jerusalem, so the eighty-third was composed in confident anticipation of the victory. The points of agreement with the history will be indicated in the exposition of the several verses. After a general petition for divine help, v. 2 (1), follows a description of the violence, craft, destructive purpose, and extensive combination of the enemies of Judah, vs. 3—9 (2—8), and then an earnest prayer for the renewal of God's ancient deeds in similar emergencies, vs. 10—15 (9—14), with a view to the promotion of his glory in the destruction of his irreconcilable enemies, vs. 16—19 (15—18.) According to the view of the historical occasion above given, the Asaph of the title must denote some descendant of the ancient seer, as it seems to do in several of the preceding psalms. Now it happens, by a singular coincidence, that in the history

(2 Chr. xx. 14), such a descendant is particularly mentioned, Jahaziel, upon whom the Spirit of the Lord came in the midst of the assembly, and prompted him to take a leading part in the preliminary movements which resulted in the triumph of Judah (ib. vs. 15—18.) Compare the similar coincidence in reference to the Sons of Korah, as the authors of Ps. 48, vol. 1. p. 400.

2 (1.) Oh God, be not silent, hold not thy peace, and be not still, oh Mighty (One)! This is a general introductory petition, that God would not remain inactive and indifferent to the dangers which environed his own people. The peculiar form of expression in the first clause, let there not (be) silence to thee, is copied by Isaiah (lxii. 6, 7.) The next phrase is one that has occurred repeatedly before. See Ps. xxviii. 1. xxxv. 22. xxxix. 13 (12.) The third petition, be not still or quiet, rest not, has the same relation to act that the others have to word or speech. The use of this divine name (יְהוָה) involves an appeal to God's omnipotence, as furnishing a reason for his interference. Why should He who is Almighty remain silent and inactive, when his people are in danger and his enemies apparently triumphant?

3 (2.) For lo, thine enemies roar, and thy haters raise the head The general prayer in the preceding verse is now enforced by a description of the danger, beginning with the violence and confidence of the assailants. The lo is equivalent to see there, and converts the passage into a description of a present scene. The enemies of Israel are, as usual, identified with those of God, as a reason why he should appear for their destruction. The first verb means to make a noise, and is applied to the roar of the sea in Ps. xlvi. 4 (3), as it is to the howl of dogs in Ps. lix. 7 (6), and to internal commotions in Ps. xxxix. 7 (6.) xlii. 6, 12 (5, 11.) Lift up the head, as a natural indication of confidence and triumph. Compare the description of a conquered people, Judg. viii. 28.

4 (3.) Against thy people they take crafty counsel, and consult against thy hidden ones. To the qualities of violence and arrogance, the description now adds that of treacherous cunning. The construction in the first clause is, they make (their) consultation crafty. For the meaning of the Hebrew noun, see above, on Ps. xxv. 14. lv. 15 (14.) lxiv. 3 (2.) Thy hidden ones, those whom thou hast hidden for safe-keeping, the objects of thy merciful protection. See above, on Ps. xxvii. 5. xxxi. 21 (20.)

5 (4.) They have said, Come and let us destroy them from (being) a nation, and let not the name of Israel be remembered any more. Not only were they turbulent and confident and crafty, but malignant and determined to destroy. The past tense of the first verb represents the combination as already formed. The idiomatic phrase, from a nation, is used more than once by Isaiah (vii. 8. xxiii. 1.) The expression for complete extirpation in the last clause is borrowed from the curse on Amalek, Ex. xvii. 14. Israel, as the name of the chosen people, was rightfully claimed by Judah after the great schism, even while the rival kingdom still existed.

6 (5.) For they have consulted heartily together ; against thee a covenant they ratify. The word translated heartily is really a noun meaning heart, but here used to qualify the verb by adding the idea, with the heart, ex animo, cordially, heartily. The phrase rendered one heart in 1 Chr. xii. 38 is altogether different. For the meaning of the last verb, see above, on Ps. 1. 5. The preterite and future tense represent the combination as already formed and still continued.

7 (6.) The tents of Edom and the Ishmaelites, Moab and the Hagarenes. The use of the word tents does not necessarily imply a wandering mode of life, as it may mean military tents, or be a figure for dwellings. See above, on Ps. lxxviii. 67, and compare Judg. vii. 8. 1 Kings xii. 16. The Ishmaelites inhabited a part of Desert Arabia (Gen. xxv. 18), as did also the Hagarenes or Hagarites, a people driven from their lands by the tribe of Simeon in the reign of Saul. See 1 Chr. v. 10, 19—22 and compare 1 Chr. xi. 38. xxvii. 31.

8 (7.) Gebal and Ammon and Amalek, Philistia with the inhabitants of Tyre. Gebal was probably a part of Idumea. Ammon and Amalek are joined in the same manner, Judges iii. 13, as Philistia and Tyre are, Ez. xxxviii. 13, and Philistia, Tyre, and Edom, Am. i. 6—10.

9 (8.) Also Assyria was joined with them. (These) were an arm to the Sons of Lot. Selah. Assyria is put last as the remotest and least interested in this combination against Judah. It had evidently not yet supplanted Babylonia as the dominant power of Western Asia. The last clause refers, not merely to Assyria, as the plural verb shows, but to all the confederates except the Sons of Lot, i. e. Moab and Ammon (Gen. xix. 37, 38), who are here referred to, as the authors and conductors of the expedition.

10 (9.) Do to them as (thou didst) to Midian, as (to) Sisera, as (to) Jabin, in the valley of the Kishon. This is a prayer for such deliverances as Israel experienced of old. The examples here selected are the victory of Gideon over the Midianites (Judges vii, viii), and that of Deborah and Barak over Jabin and Sisera (Judges iv, v.) Between the first of these and the event which the psalm before us was designed to celebrate there was this remarkable resemblance, that the enemies of Israel were in both cases made to destroy each other (Judg. vii. 22. 2 Chr. xx. 23.) Compare the allusions to the same event in Isai. ix. 4 (3.) Hab. iii. 7. The Kishon is repeatedly mentioned in the history of Deborah and Barak's triumph (Judg. iv. 7, 13. v. 21.)

11 (10.) They were destroyed at Endor, they were dung to the earth. This refers to the second of the battles mentioned in the preceding verse. Endor is not expressly named in the history, but is known to have been in the vicinity of Tabor, which is repeatedly there mentioned (Judg. iv. 6, 12, 14.) The last clause derives illustration from the extraordinary fruitfulness of certain battle-fields in modern times, particularly that of Waterloo. Compare 2 Kings ix. 37. Jer. ix. 21 (22.)

12 (11.) Make them, (even) their nobles, like Oreb and like Zeeb; and like Zebah and like Zalmunnah all their princes. He asks not only that the masses of the enemy may fare like those of Midian, but that their chief men may be utterly destroyed as the kings and chiefs of Midian were by Gideon. See Judg. vii. 25. viii. 5—21. The appeal to the historical associations of the people is greatly strengthened by this recital of familiar names. The first word properly means set or place them, i. e. put them in the same condition.

13 (12.) Who have said, let us inherit for ourselves the dwellings (or pasture-grounds) of God. This relates not to the former but to the present enemies of Israel, and assigns the reason why they should experience the same fate with their predecessors. The double meaning of the word translated dwellings makes it peculiarly descriptive of the Holy Land, where God dwelt with his people, and where he fed them as a shepherd. See above, on Ps. xxiii. 3. lxxv. 13 (12.) lxxiv. 20.

14 (13.) My God, make them like the whirling chaff before the wind. Make them, literally, place them, as in v. 11. Like the whirling chaff, literally, like the whirl (or whirlwind), like the chaff. See above, on Ps. lxxvii. 19 (18), and compare Isai. xvii. 13.

15 (14.) As fire consumes a forest, and as a flame kindles mountains. The original construction is, like a fire (which) consumes, like a flame (which) kindles. By mountains we are here to understand what covers them or grows upon them.

16 (15.) So wilt thou pursue them with thy storm, and with thy tempest scare them. There is no need of translating these futures as imperatives. It is one of those cases, so frequent in Hebrew, and especially in this book, where the form of direct petition alternates with that of confident anticipation

17 (16.) Fill their face with shame, and (men) will seek thy name, Jehovah! With the first clause compare Ps. lxxix. 8 (7.) lxxxix. 46 (45.) Some refer the last clause also to the enemies; but their destruction is still anticipated in the next verse, and to seek the name of God can hardly be expressive of a compulsory humiliation. The word translated shame is very strong, and means contempt, disgrace, or ignominy.

18 (17.) They shall be shamed and terror-stricken to eternity, and blush and perish. This no doubt includes a prayer or the expression of a wish, but it also includes a strong and confident anticipation. To discard the future form is therefore at the same time weakening to the sense and destructive of a characteristic feature of the language. With the first clause compare Ps. vi. 11 (10.) The word translated terror-stricken is the same that was rendered scared in v. 16 (15.) See above, on Ps. ii. 5. vi. 4 (3.) xlviii. 6 (5.)

19. (18.) And (men) shall know that thou, whose name (is) Jehovah, (art) alone Most High over all the earth. The reference here, as in v. 17 (16), is not to the impression made upon the minds of those destroyed, but upon men in general considered as spectators of their fate See above, on Ps. lix. 14 (13), and compare 1 Sam. xvii. 46. 2 Kings xix. 19. Isai. xxxvii. 16, 20. The original construction is peculiar: 'they shall know that thou—thy name Jehōvah—thou alone—art Most High over all the earth.' The simple pronoun thou is explained and amplified by the addition of the words, thy name Jehovah, i. e. thou who hast revealed thyself already as the self-existent and eternal God, and as the covenant God of Israel.

PSALM LXXXIV.

1. To the Chief Musician. On (or according to) the Gittith. By (or for) the Sons of Korah. The Psalmist celebrates the blessedness of intimate communion with God, vs. 2—8 (1—7), and prays that he may himself enjoy it, vs. 9—13 (8—12.) The resemblance of this psalm, in subject, tone, and spirit, to Ps. xlii, is the more remarkable because each stands at the beginning of a series inscribed to the Sons of Korah. The experience here recorded is so evidently David's, that we must either understand the Sons of Korah to be mentioned merely as the musical performers, or suppose that they composed it to express the feelings of the king himself, a hypothesis which Hengstenberg illustrates by the case of David playing and singing before Saul, in order to alleviate his paroxysms of madness. For the arguments on both sides of the question, see above, on Ps. xlii. 1, and for the meaning of the Gittith, on Ps. viii. 1. lxxxi. 1.

2 (1.) How dear (to me are) thy dwellings, oh Jehovah, (God of) Hosts! The adjective is rendered by the English versions desirable, in the sense of the French aimable, lovely. But the usage of the Hebrew word requires it to be understood as meaning dear, beloved, which is exactly the idea here required by the context. See above, on Ps. xlv. 1. The plural dwellings has reference to the subdivisions and appurtenances of the sanctuary, and is applied to the tabernacle in Ps. xliii. 3. Compare Ps. lxviii. 36 (35.) The divine titles are as usual significant. While one suggests the covenant relation between God and the petitioner, the other makes his sovereignty the ground of a prayer for his protection. The force of this impassioned exclamation is enhanced by the structure of the sentence, which consists of a single clause, like Ps. xviii. 2 (1.) With the whole verse compare Ps. xxvii. 1—5.

3 (2.) Longs and also faints my soul for the courts of Jehovah, my heart and my flesh; they sing (with joy) unto the living God. The first verb is expressive of intense desire, as in Ps. xvii. 12. Compare Gen. xxxi. 30. Instead of and also the English Bible has yea even, which is perhaps too strong, and indicates a climax not intended by the writer. Faints, fails, or is consumed with strong desire. The plural courts, i. e. enclosures, is to be explained like dwellings in v. 2 (1.) Solomon's temple had two courts; but one was appropriated to the priests, 2 Chr. iv. 9. The courts of the tabernacle are mentioned as the place where God stately communed with Israel. See above, on Ps. lxv. 5 (4), and below, on Ps. xcii. 14 (13.) They are here mentioned merely as a sign of the communion itself, which might be enjoyed in any place whatever. See above, on Ps. xxvii. 4. xxxvi. 9. Soul, heart, and flesh, denote the whole man. See above, on Ps. lxiii. 2 (1.) The Hebrew accents connect heart and flesh with the preceding words. A much more natural division is the common one, which construes them directly with the verb of the last clause. That verb elsewhere always denotes a joyful shout or song; but the derivative noun (קִרְיָה) is used to signify a cry for help or earnest prayer, which meaning some attach to the verb itself in this place so as to make the clauses strictly parallel. If the usual meaning of the verb be here retained, the clause shows that the speaker had already experienced that for which he prays. The Living God, really existing, and the giver of life to others. See above, on Ps. xlii. 3 (2.)

4 (3.) Yes, the sparrow has found a home, and the swallow a nest, (in) which she lays her young, even thine altars, Jehovah, (God) of Hosts, my King and my God. The first word properly means also, as in the preceding verse, and is by some translated even, as if he had said, 'the very birds have nests in the sanctuary of God, while I am excluded from it.' Compare Matt. viii. 20. But the fact thus alleged is highly improbable and nowhere recorded. A more natural interpretation is to make the sparrow and the swallow (put for small and helpless birds in general) emblems of the worshipper himself. As if he had said, yes, this wandering bird has at last found a resting-place, or home, both for itself and for its young. That this is perfectly in keeping with Davidic usage, is plain from 1 Sam. xxvi. 20, Ps. xi. 1. lv. 7 (6.) lvi. 1. The translation even thine altars supposes the Hebrew particle (אם) to indicate the object of the verb, as it does before the same noun in 1 Kings xix. 10, 14. It may, however, be a preposition meaning at or near, and this sense is preferred by those interpreters who suppose a literal nestling of the birds in the sanctuary to be here alluded to. The altars meant are those of burnt-offering and of incense, as in Num. iii. 31. They are particularly mentioned, because it was by means of sacrifice and prayer that communion between God and man was possible. Compare Ps. xxvi. 6. The young birds are introduced, not only to complete the picture, but to show that the communion and divine protection, which the Psalmist so highly valued, were not merely personal but domestic and social privileges, which he desired both for himself and those dependent on him. The address, Jehovah (God) of Hosts, has the same sense as in v. 2 (1.)

The same essential notions of supremacy and covenant relation are conveyed by the parallel expression, my King and my God, a combination which occurs only here and in Ps. v. 3 (2.)

5 Happy the dwellers in thy house, (for) still they praise thee (or will praise thee.) The first phrase is the idiomatic one with which the book begins, for the peculiar form and sense of which, see above, on Ps. i. 1. ii. 12. xxxii. 1, 2 xxxiii. 12. xli. 2 (1.) Dwellers in, inhabitants of, thy house, i. e. members of thy family, as the same words literally mean in Jer. xx. 5. For the spiritual or figurative meaning, see above, on Ps. xv. 1. xxiii. 6. xxiv. 3. xxvii. 4. lxi. 5 (4.) lxxv. 5 (4.) The privilege thus described might be enjoyed in any local situation; but the outward sign of it, under the old economy, was the frequenting of the sanctuary. As inmates, not mere visitors, they will still have occasion and opportunity of doing what they do when first admitted to God's household. They will still praise, because they will have renewed cause so to do. See above, on Ps. v. 8 (7.) l. 15, 23. lxxix. 13.

6 (5.) Happy the man who (has) strength in thee, (who have) highways in their heart. The original consists of several exclamations or ejaculations—happy man!—(there is) strength to him in thee!—(there are) highways in their heart! This last unusual and obscure expression is supposed by some to mean, in whose thoughts, (or affections) are the highways to Jerusalem, i. e. who still think of going up to worship there. But another explanation, which agrees far better, both with the immediate context and with usage and analogy, supposes the figure to be identical with that in Ps. l. 23. Prov. xvi. 17. Isai. xl. 3, 4, where the removal of all moral or spiritual hinderances to God's revisiting his people and communing with them, is poetically represented as the opening, levelling, and raising of a causeway through a pathless wilderness or otherwise impracticable ground. The word translated high- ways is determined, both by etymology and usage, to denote not a mere beaten track or footpath, but a road artificially constructed and raised above the level of the ground through which it passes. The sudden change of number in the last clause shows that man is a generic or collective term.

7 (6.) Passing through the Vale of Tears, a spring they make it; also with blessings is the Teacher clothed. This is one of the obscurest verses in the book. Interpreters, however, are now commonly agreed as to the first clause. The explanation of Baca, as meaning the Valley of Mulberry or Baca-trees (2 Sam. v. 23, 24. 1 Chron. xiv. 13, 14), is now very commonly abandoned for the one given in the ancient versions, the Vale of Weeping or of Sorrow, a beautiful poetical description of the present life as one of suffering. To the fons lacrymarum is opposed the fountain of salvation or of joy, a figure so familiar in the Scriptures, as to be readily suggested by the one word spring or fountain. See above, on Ps. xxxvi. 10 (9.) xlv. 5 (4), and compare Isai. xii. 3. The meaning of the clause, as thus explained, is, that the persons pronounced happy in the foregoing verse are a source of happiness, and convert the very Vale of Tears into a fountain of delight. The meaning of the other clause is still disputed. As the first noun, by varying a single vowel-point, may mean either pools or blessings, and the next, though it commonly means teacher (2 Kings xvii. 28. Prov. v. 13. Isai. xxx. 20), has in one other place (Joel ii. 23) the sense of rain, or rather of the early rain in Palestine, the clause admits of several very different explanations. 1. The rain also covers the pools. 2. The teacher is clothed in blessings. 3. The rain covers it with blessings. In favour of the second is its close adherence to the usage of the three leading words. It is also found substantially in the ancient versions. The meaning then is, that this strange transforming power is exerted by the good man as a teacher of righteousness, in which sense one of the disputed words (מורה) occurs in Joel ii. 23, which accounts for its being there repeated in the very same sentence, by a kind of paronomasia, in the sense of early rain, elsewhere denoted by a cognate form (רַגַּיִם). Compare the sentiment with that in Ps. li. 15 (13.) For the neuter or intransitive meaning of the last verb, see Lev. xiii. 45. Mic iii. 7. Jer. xliii. 12.

8 (7.) They shall go from strength to strength; he shall appear to God in Zion. The change of number is the opposite of that in v. 6 (5), but to be explained on the same principle. Or the singular verb in the last clause may refer to the Teacher in v. 7 (6.) The strength is that bestowed by God, in the experience of which they make continual advances. The form of expression in the last clause is one used in the Law to denote the stated appearance of the Israelites at the sanctuary. The meaning of the whole verse is, that they who answer to the previous description shall finally attain to the full fruition of that union with God in which their happiness resides.

9 (8.) Jehovah, God, (Lord of) Hosts, hear my prayer; give ear, oh God of Jacob! Selah. Here begins the second part of the psalm, containing the petition founded on the preceding view of the happiness arising from communion with God. The names applied to him suggest, as usual, the grounds of the petition, namely, his eternity, self-existence, sovereignty, and covenant-relation to his people.

10 (9.) (Oh) our shield, see, (oh) God, and behold the face of thine Anointed. Some make the first noun the object of the verb that follows, see our shield; but in v. 12 (11) God himself is so described, as well as in Ps. iii. 4 (3.) Gen. xv. 1. Its position as a vocative, is certainly unusual, but seems to be emphatic Behold the face, i. e. behold it favourably, look upon it graciously.

Thine Anointed (One), i. e. David, by whom, or in whose name, the psalm was written.

11. (10.) For better (is) a day in thy courts than a thousand; I have chosen to occupy the threshold in the house of my God, rather than dwell in tents of wickedness. The comparison in both clauses is expressed, as usual in Hebrew, by the preposition from, away from. 'Good from, i. e. in comparison with, a thousand.' 'I choose from dwelling, i. e. rather than to dwell.' The first clause of course means that one day in God's courts is better than a thousand elsewhere. I have chosen, and do still choose, a stronger expression than I would choose or would rather. The next verb occurs only here and is evidently formed from the noun (שַׁרְצָה) sill or threshold. To be a door-keeper (guard the threshold), and to lie on the threshold, are too specific, and appear to add something to the sense of the original. The idea perhaps is, that he would rather stand at the door of God's house and look in (which was all that the worshippers could do at the Mosaic sanctuary) than dwell in the interior of tents or houses where iniquity prevailed. The use of the word tents in this clause makes it still more probable that the tabernacle, not the temple, is meant by the parallel expression, house of God.

12 (11.) For a sun and a shield is Jehovah, God; grace and glory will Jehovah give; he will not refuse (any thing) good to those walking in a perfect (way.) The for shows that this verse gives a reason for the preference expressed in that before it. God is here called a sun, as he is called a light in Ps. xxvii. 1. Both these figures represent him as a source of happiness; that of a shield describes him as a source of safety, or a strong protector. Grace and glory (or honour) are related as the cause and the effect. The latter includes all the sensible fruits and manifestations of the divine favour. See above, on Ps. xlix. 17 (16) In a perfect is by some understood to mean as a perfect person.

i. e. perfectly, uprightly. See above on Ps. xv 2. xviii. 24 (23) and compare Gen. xvii. 1.

13 (12.) Jehovah, (Lord of) Hosts, happy the man trusting in thee. The participle is expressive of habitual reliance. Trusting in thee, as I do.

PSALM LXXXV.

1. To the Chief Musician. To (or by) the Sons of Korah. A Psalm. On the ground of former benefits, the Church prays for deliverance from present evils, vs. 2—8 (1—7), and joyfully anticipates a favourable answer, vs. 9—14 (8—13.) There is nothing in the title, or the psalm itself, to determine its date or confine its application to any particular historical occasion. It seems to be appropriate to every case in which the fulfilment of the promise (Lev. xxvi. 3—13) was suspended or withheld.

2 (1.) Thou wast gracious, oh Jehovah, to thy land; thou didst return (to) the captivity of Jacob. Some interpreters refer these words to favours recently experienced; thou hast (now) been gracious, etc. But it is clear from vs. 5—8 (4—7), that the people were actually suffering, and that the acknowledgments in vs. 2—4 (1—3) must relate to former instances of God's compassion. The idea, that the benefit acknowledged was deliverance from the Babylonish exile, has arisen from a false interpretation of the last clause, for the true sense of which see above, on Ps. xiv. 7. Captivity is a common figure for distress, and God's revisiting the captives for relief from it. It is also worthy of remark that the favour shown was to the land, i. e. to the people while in possession and actual occupation of it.

3 (2.) Thou didst take away the guilt of thy people; thou didst cover all their sin. Selah. The same form of expression occurs above, in Ps. xxxii. 1, 5 Both verbs suggest the idea of atonement as well as pardon.

4 (3.) Thou didst withdraw all thy wrath; thou didst turn from the heat of thine anger. There is probably an allusion here to the prayer of Moses in Ex. xxxii. 12. The Hebrew verb of the second clause corresponds strictly to the English verb in its transitive or causative sense. It is used, however, in the same way by Ezekiel (xviii. 30, 32), who, in one place (xiv. 6), has the phrase to turn away the face, of which the other may be an abbreviation.

5 (4.) Return to us, oh God of our salvation, and cease thine anger towards us. The recollection of former mercies is here followed by a prayer for their renewal. 'As thou hast had pity on thy people heretofore, so have pity on them now.' Return to us, revisit us again in mercy. See above, on v. 2 (1), and on Ps. xiv. 7. The verb in the last clause means to annul or nullify, put an end to, cause to cease. It occurs above, Ps. xxxiii. 10 The word translated anger is one which properly expresses a mixed feeling of grief and indignation. See above, on Ps. vi. 7 (6.)

7 (6.) Forever wilt thou be angry at us? Wilt thou draw out thine anger to generation and generation? The first Hebrew word strictly means to ages or eternities. The verb to draw out, protract, continue, is used in a favourable sense, Ps. xxxvi 11 (10.) The idea here expressed is the opposite of that in Ps xxx. 6 (5.)

8 (7.) Wilt thou not return (and) quicken us, (and) shall (not) thy people rejoice in thee? With the first clause compare Ps. 'xxi. 20. lxxx. 19 (18.) Deut. xxxii. 39. Hos. vi. 2. With the second compare Ps. v. 12 (11.) ix. 3 (2.) xl. 17 (16.) 'Wilt thou not revisit us in mercy, raise us from the dead or dying state in which we now are, and give us, as thy people, fresh occasion to rejoice in our relation to thee, and in our union and communion with thee?' The construction which continues the interrogation through the sentence is much simpler and more natural than that which makes the second clause contingent and dependent on the first, that thy people may rejoice in thee. At the same time, the interrogative form expresses a more confident anticipation than a bare petition.

8 (7.) Let us see, oh Lord, thy mercy; and thy salvation thou wilt give unto us. The first petition is, that God would cause them to experience his mercy. In the last clause, as in many other places, the form of petition is insensibly exchanged for that of anticipation. As if he had said, 'We can confidently ask thee to show us thy mercy, for we know that thou wilt grant us thy salvation.'

9 (8.) I will hear what the Mighty (God), Jehovah, will speak; for he will speak peace to his people and to his saints; and let them not return to folly. The first clause expresses the people's willingness to hear and to abide by God's decision. The second gives the reason of this willingness, to wit, because they know that the response will be auspicious. The third assigns the necessary limitation to this confidence, by stating the condition of God's favourable answer. The failure to comply with this condition accounts for the partial fulfilment of the promise, both in the case of individuals and of the church at large. See above, on Ps lxxx. 19 (18), and compare the promise in Lev. xxvi 3—13 His saints, the objects of his mercy and subjects of his grace. See above, on Ps. iv. 4 (3.) And let them not turn is equivalent to saying, so (or therefore) let them not turn. The real connection of the clauses might be brought out still more clearly in our idiom by the paraphrase, 'provided they do not return to folly.'

10 (9.) Only nigh to his fearers (is) his salvation, for glory to dwell in our land. As the limitation of the promise to those fearing God is an essential stroke in this description, there is no need of departing from the strict sense of (פָּנֵי) the particle with which the sentence opens. See above, on Ps. lxii. 10 (9.) lxxviii. 7 (6), and compare Ps. lviii. 12 (11.) lxxiii. 1. The meaning then is that salvation is provided by God's mercy for none but those who fear him. The last clause, which is literally rendered above, is equivalent to saying in our idiom, that glory may dwell in our land. Glory has the same sense as in Ps. lxxxiv. 12 (11.) Dwell, reside permanently, long continue.

11 (12.) Mercy and truth have met (together); righteousness and peace have kissed (each other.) By truth, we are to understand the truth of God's promises, the divine veracity. See above, on Ps. xxv. 5. The same combination with grace or mercy occurs above, in Ps. xxv. 10. xl. 11 (10.) lvii. 4 (3.) lxi. 8 (7), and below, Ps. lxxxix. 15 (14.) Righteousness, considered as the gift of God, justification, whether judicial or providential. Peace, immunity from all disturbing causes, which implies prosperity of every kind. See above, on Ps. lxxii. 3. Have met, in a peaceable and friendly manner, an idea still more strongly expressed by the kiss of reconciliation or affection in the last clause. A still more pointed and emphatic meaning may be put upon the sentence by supposing it to mean, that God's mercy or free favour to the undeserving is now seen to be consistent with his truth, which was pledged for their destruction, and their peace or safety with his righteousness or justice, which might otherwise have seemed to be wholly incompatible.

12 (11.) Truth from the earth is springing, and righteousness from heaven looks down. The truth of God's promise may be seen, as it were, springing from the earth in its abundant fruits, and his rectitude, or faithfulness to his engagements, looking down from heaven in the rain and sunshine. By this bold and beautiful conception, the certainty of God's providential care is expressed more strongly than it could be by any mere didactic statement. The beauty of the image in the last clause is heightened by the use of a verb which originally means to lean or bend over, for the purpose of gazing down upon a lower object. See above, on Ps. xiv. 2, and compare Judg. v. 28. 2 Sam. vi. 16.

13 (12.) Jehovah also will give the (material or earthly) good, and our land will give its produce (or increase.) In other words, the promise shall be verified that stands recorded in the Law (Lev. xxvi. 4), from which the form of expression is borrowed, as it is in Ps. lxxvii. 7 (6.)

14 (13.) Righteousness before him shall march, and set (us) in the way of his steps. The verb in the first clause is a poetical intensive form of one which means to walk or go. The idea here expressed seems to be that of public and solemn manifestation. The last clause is obscure and of dubious construction. The latest interpreters understand it as meaning, and set its steps for a way, i. e. mark out by its own steps the way in which we are to walk. This yields, in the end, the same sense as the common version above given.

P S A L M L X X X V I .

1. A Prayer. By David. Incline, oh Jehovah, thine ear (and) answer me, for wretched and needy (am) I. The whole psalm is called a prayer, because entirely made up, either of direct petitions, or of arguments intended to enforce them. The tone and substance of the composition are well suited to David's situation in his days of suffering at the hands of Saul or Absalom more probably the latter, on account of the repeated allusions to deliverance from former trials of the same kind. Some account for the position of this psalm in the midst of a series inscribed to the Sons of Korah, by supposing that the latter composed it in the person or the spirit of David. See above, on Ps. lxxxiv. 1. The same hypothesis is used by these interpreters to explain the many forms of expression borrowed from other psalms of David; as if the Sons of Korah meant to comfort him by the repetition of his own consolatory words in other cases. Compare 2 Cor. i. 4. The psalm admits of no minute or artificial subdivision. The only marked diversity of the parts is, that in vs. 1—10, petition is combined with argument, whereas in vs. 11—17, it is more unmixed. The first ground or reason is derived, in this verse, from the urgency of the necessity. At the same time, there is a tacit claim to God's protection, on the ground that he who asks it is one of his own people. According to the usage of the psalms, the afflicted and the needy denote sufferers among God's people. See above, on Ps. x. 2.

2. Keep my soul, for a gracious one (an) I; save thy servant, even thou, my God, the (servant) trusting in thee. He prays for the safe-keeping of his soul or life, because it was this that the enemy threatened. See below, v. 14. The grounds assigned are two, or rather one exhibited in two forms. The first is, that he is a (גִּבּוֹר) saint or gracious one, a merciful object of God's mercy. See above, on Ps. lxxxv. 8 (7.) The other is that, as a servant of Jehovah, he believes and trusts in him alone. The original expression is not in but to or towards thee, as if implying that the believer turns or looks away from every other ground of confidence to God alone. The same construction occurs twice above, in Ps. iv. 6 (5.) xxxi. 7 (6.)

3. Be gracious unto me, oh Lord, for unto thee will I cry all the day. The prayer is still substantially the same, but enforced by two additional reasons; one implied in the divine name used, to wit, that God is his sovereign and as such bound to protect his subject; the other expressed, namely, that his subject never ceases to invoke his aid. The future meaning of the verb includes the present, but suggests the additional idea of determination to pursue the same course till the blessing is obtained. Compare Gen. xxxii. 27 (26.) Luke xviii. 1. All the day is a common idiomatic phrase equivalent to all the time in English, and may therefore be considered as including, though it does not formally express, the idea of every day or daily. See above, on Ps. xlii. 4, 11 (3, 10.)

4. Gladden the soul of thy servant, for unto thee, Lord, my soul do I raise. The first clause is not a mere periphrasis for "make me glad," or "cause me to rejoice." It means "make me heartily rejoice, because I am thy servant," thus suggesting a new ground of his petition, different in form although substantially identical with that in the preceding verse. A similar analogy exists between the second clause of that verse and the second clause of this, the form of which, however, is borrowed from Ps. xxv. 1. Here, as there, to raise the soul to God is to regard him with affection and strong confidence. See above, on Ps. xxiv. 4. At the same time, there is an allusion to the strict sense of the Hebrew verb, as if he had said, 'make my soul rejoice, since I bring it up or raise it to thee for this very purpose.' The force of the future is the same as in v. 4.

5 For thou, Lord, art good and forgiving and rich in mercy to all (those) invoking thee. God is not only the sovereign of his people, and as such bound by covenant to protect them, but benevolent or good in his own nature; and that not merely in the general, or in reference to all his creatures, but especially in reference to the undeserving and the ill-deserving; that is, to such of them as really desire his favour, and evince their willingness to have it by the act of asking for it. Rich (in) mercy, literally, great (or much, abundant, plenteous, as to) mercy. This expression, and indeed the whole description, is borrowed from Ex. xxxiv. 6.

6. Give ear, Jehovah, to my prayer, and attend (or hearken) to the voice of my supplications. The same verbs are used in a similar connection, Ps. v. 2, 3 (1, 2.) The last word in Hebrew, according to its etymology, denotes specifically prayers for favour, grace, or mercy. See above, on Ps. xxviii. 6. xxxi. 23 (22.) There is no new ground or argument suggested here, beyond what is implied in the use of the word just explained, and of the divine name in the first clause.

7. In the day of my distress I will invoke thee, for thou wilt answer me. The future includes the present, I do and will invoke thee, call thee to my aid, or call upon thee for assistance. The second clause assigns the reason, namely, his conviction that he shall not call in vain. The implied ground of this conviction is, that he never does and never did call. in the exercise of faith, without being favourably heard or answered.

8. There is none like thee among the gods, oh Lord, and nothing like thy works (among their works.) This last, which might seem to be needed to complete the sense and the parallelism, was suppressed perhaps in order to suggest the idea, that the gods have no works, even the gentiles who worship them being creatures of Jehovah, as is expressly stated in the next verse. Even the full comparison, however, in the first clause, does not necessarily concede the personal existence of the gods themselves, but only that of their material images, or at most the belief of their besotted worshippers. Compare with this verse its Mosaic models, Ex. xv. 11. Deut. iii. 24, and the Davidic imitations of them, 2 Sam. vii. 22. Ps. xviii. 32 (31.) The exclusive godhead of Jehovah is here urged as a distinct ground or reason of importunate petition to him.

9. All nations which thou hast made shall come and worship before thee, oh Lord, and give honour to thy name. The common relation of Jehovah to all men as their Maker, although now denied by most nations, shall be one day universally acknowledged, not in word merely, but in act, the most expressive act of worship, involving a believing recognition of the previous display of God's perfections, in the language of the Scriptures called his name. This prospective view of the conversion of the world to the belief and service of its Maker shows how far the Old Testament writers were from cherishing or countenancing the contracted nationality of the later and the less enlightened Jews. See above, on Ps. xxii. 28, 29 (27, 28.) xlv. 13—17 (12—16.) xlvii. 10 (9), and compare Jer. xvi. 19. Zeph. ii. 11. Zech. xiv. 9, 16.

10. For great (art) thou and doing wonders, thou (art) God alone. The only new idea here is the evidence afforded of Je hovah's sole divinity by his miraculous performances. The for, at the beginning of the verse, implies that these proofs of divinity must sooner or later have their full effect.

11. Guide me, Jehovah, (in) thy way; I will walk in thy truth, unite my heart to fear thy name. The common version of the first verb (teach me) is too vague, as it fails to bring out the peculiar suitableness of the term to express the kind of teaching here specifically meant. The original meaning of the Hebrew word is to point out or mark the way. According to the usage of the Psalms, the way of God is here the course of his providential dealings, and his truth the truth of his promises, to walk in which is to assent to them or acquiesce in them and trust them. See above, on Ps. xxv. 4, 5. xxvi. 3. That he may be enabled to do this without distraction or reserve, is the prayer of the last clause. The idea of a united heart is the opposite of a double heart. See above, on Ps. xii. 3 (2), and compare James iv. 8.

12. I will thank thee, oh Lord my God, with all my heart, and I will honour thy name forever. The first verb means not merely to praise in general, but to praise for benefits received. See above, on Ps. vi. 6 (5.) This verse describes the effect that is to follow from the granting of the prayer at the close of the preceding verse. When his heart is once united to fear God, cordial and perpetual thanksgiving will follow as a necessary consequence.

13. For thy mercy (has been) great towards me, and thou hast freed my soul from the lowest hell. The most natural explanation of these words is that which makes them an appeal to former mercies as a reason for expecting new ones. If the psalm belongs to the period of Absalom's rebellion (see above, on v. 1), the reference here may be to David's dangers and deliverances from Saul. Towards me, literally, on me, with an implication of descent from above. Hell, in the wide sense of death or the state of the dead. See above, on Ps. vi. 6 (5.) Lowest, or lower, lying under, subterraneous. The expression is derived from Deut. xxxii. 22. With this verse compare Ps. xviii. 6 (5.) lvi. 14 (13.)

14. Oh God, proud (men) have arisen against me, and an assembly of violent (men) have sought my soul, and have not set thee before them. Nearly the same words had been used by David in reference to the Sauline persecution, Ps. liv. 5 (3). But instead of aliens, he here speaks of proud ones, and before the parallel term violent, oppressive, or tyrannical (Ps. xxxvii. 35), inserts congregation or assembly, as if to imply organization, both which variations agree well with the hypothesis that this psalm relates to the revolt of Absalom.

15. And thou, Lord, (art) a God merciful and gracious, long-suffering, and plenteous in mercy and truth. He here appeals to God's description of himself as warranting his prayer for mercy. See Ex. xxxiv. 6, and the imitations or quotations of it by Joel (ii. 13) and Jonah (iv. 2.) See also Ps. lxxxv. 11 (10.)

16. Turn towards me and be gracious to me; give thy strength to thy servant, and grant salvation to the son of thy handmaid. The first prayer implies that God's face had previously been averted. Give thy strength, exercise it for his protection. The son of thy handmaid or female slave, i. e. a home-born and hereditary servant, and as such entitled to defence and sustenance. The expression is borrowed from Ex. xxiii. 12, and re-appears in Ps. cxvi. 16. The last verb is the common one meaning to save, but here connected with its object by the proposition to.

17. Show me a token for good, and (then) my haters shall see and be shamed, because thou, Jehovah, hast helped me and comforted me. The phrase translated show me strictly means do with me, and is here used because the sign or token asked is neither a verbal declaration nor a miracle, but a practical or providential indication of God's favour, furnished by his dealings with him. The word translated good is the one used in Ps. xvi. 2, where as here it has the sense of physical good, welfare, happiness. A token for good is a pledge of its possession and enjoyment. The oblique construction, that my haters may see, is really included in the direct future. Shamed, surprised, disappointed, and confounded. The preterites in the last clause have reference to the time when this effect shall be produced upon the enemy, and when the divine help and consolation shall have been already granted.

PSALM LXXXVII.

1. To (or by) the Sons of Korah. A Psalm. A Song. His foundation (is) in the hills of holiness. The first title decides nothing as to the date of composition. See above, on Ps. xlii. 1. xli. 1. xlvii. 1. xlviii. 1. It is not only a psalm, a religious lyric, but a song, i. e. a song of praise or triumph. See above, on Ps. lxxxiii. 1. This agrees well with the tone of the composition, which seems to indicate some great deliverance as its historical occasion. The only one that can be fixed upon with any great degree of probability is that of Hezekiah from the power of Assyria. See above, on Ps. xli. 1. lxxv. 1. lxxvi. 1. In view of some such signal intervention in behalf of Israel, the psalm celebrates the actual security of Zion, vs. 1—3, and anticipates its future honours as the spiritual birth-place of the nations, vs. 4—7. His foundation, that which he has founded, meaning his sanctuary and his theocratical kingdom. The plural expression, hills of holiness, means Zion in the wide sense, including all the heights on which Jerusalem was built. It was peculiarly appropriate in this case, if the psalm was written in the reign of Hezekiah, because at that time Zion, in the strict sense, was no longer the exclusive residence of God on earth. At the same time, there is particular reference to Zion as the citadel, in which the strength of the royal city was concentrated.

2. Jehovah loves the gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob. This description of Jehovah's choice of Zion as his dwelling-place is similar to that in Ps. lxxviii. 68. The gates of a walled city give access to it and power over it, and are therefore naturally here put for the whole. The Hebrew participle (loving) implies constant and habitual attachment.

3. Glorious things (have been) spoken in thee, oh City of God! Selah. Glorious or honourable things, in the way of prophecy and promise, the fulfilment of which is here implied. As if he had said, the promises respecting thee are great, but they are or shall be fully verified. So too in the other clause the meaning is, thou art well called the city of God, for he is in thee, to protect and honour thee. See above, on Ps. xlv. 5 (4.) xlviii. 2, 9 (1, 8.) Instead of in thee some read of thee, but the former is entitled to the preference; first, because it is the strict sense and therefore not to be rejected without reason; then, because it really includes the other, but is not included in it; lastly, because it suggests the additional idea of the holy city, as the scene, no less than the theme, of the prophetic visions.

4. I will mention Rahab and Babylon as knowing me. Lo, Philistia and Tyre with Ethiopia! This (one) was born there. Interpreters are commonly agreed, that these are the words of God himself, though not expressly so announced. The first verb in Hebrew is a causative, I will make to be remembered, celebrate, commemorate. See above, Ps. xx. 8 (7.) xlv. 18 (17.) lxxi. 16 (15.) lxxvii. 12 (11.) It here means to announce or proclaim. To know God is to love him and to be his servant. See above, on Ps. xxxvi. 11 (10), and compare Isai. xix. 21. Those knowing him in this sense are his people. As knowing me, literally, to those knowing me, i. e. belonging to their number. Or the sense may be, for knowers of me, I will recognize and reckon them for such. Compare the Hebrew of Ex. xxi. 2, he shall go out free, literally, for free, i. e. as free. The nations thus announced as belonging to God's people are mere samples of the whole gentile world, those being chosen for the purpose, who were or had been most connected with the history of Israel, and were at the same time ruling powers of antiquity. Rahab is an enigmatical name given to Egypt by the Prophet Isaiah. See below, on Ps. lxxxix. 11 (10), and compare my notes on Isai. xxx. 7. li. 9. Babylon is named instead of Assyria, perhaps because in Hezekiah's reign the former began to supersede the latter as the dominant power of Western Asia. See my note on Isai. xxxix. 1. Compare the prophecy respecting Egypt and Assyria in Isai. xix. 23, 24. Philistia and Tyre are put together, as in Ps. lxxxiii. 8 (7.) As to the latter, see above, on Ps. xlv. 13 (12), and compare Isai. xxiii. 18. The conversion of Cush or Ethiopia had already been foretold by David, Ps. lxxviii. 32 (31), and by Solomon, Ps. lxxii. 10. The last words are obscure, but may be rendered clearer by supplying before them, as to each of these it shall be said. The pronoun (this) is then to be referred not to individual men, but to the nations as ideal persons. The idea of regeneration or spiritual birth, applied in the New Testament to individuals, is here applied to nations, who are represented as born again, when received into communion with the church or chosen people.

5. And of Zion it shall be said, (This) man and (that) man was born in her, and He will establish her, the Highest. The strict translation of the first words is to Zion, but the subsequent use of the third person (in her) shows that the act described is that of speaking of a person in his presence, yet not directly to him, or, as we sometimes say in English, talking at him. See above, on Ps. iii. 3 (2.) lxxi. 10. The idiomatic phrase man and man means every one or each one severally. See the Hebrew of Esther i. 8, and compare that of Lev. xvii. 10, 13. The clause may then be understood as asserting of individuals what had just been said of whole communities, or as repeating the latter, in a more emphatic form, for the purpose of connecting it with an additional promise, namely, that the church, thus enlarged by the accession of the Gentiles, shall be permanently established and secured. The pronoun is emphatic and is rendered more so by the epithet attached to it. He the Highest, or the Highest himself. The protector of the church is neither man nor angel, but the supreme and sovereign God. See above, on Ps. xlvii. 3 (2.) xlvi. 9 (8.)

6 Jehovah shall count, in enrolling the nations: This (one) was born there. Selah. The theme or idea of the whole psalm, that Zion should yet be the birth place of all nations, is again repeated, under a new figure, that of registration. Compare Ez. xiii. 9. The meaning is that, as he counts the nations, he shall say of each, in turn or one by one, this one was also born there. In enrolling, literally writing, i. e. inscribing in a list or register. The common version (when he writeth up the people) not only fails to reproduce the plural form of the last word, or to show in any way that more than a single nation is referred to, but ascribes the act of writing to the Lord himself, which, though not so inadmissible in a figurative passage as some writers think it, is not necessarily implied in the original, where the form of expression is in the writing, i. e. at the time or in the act of doing so, whether the act be that of God himself or merely done by his authority and under his direction.

7. And singers as well as players (shall be heard saying), All my springs are in thee. The construction in the first clause is peculiar, singers as players. See above, on Ps. xlvi. 6 (5.) The image present to the Psalmist's mind seems to be that of a procession or triumphal march, composed of the nations on their way to Zion. At the head of this procession are the minstrels, who, as the spokesmen of the rest, acknowledge that the source of their happiness is henceforth to be sought in Zion, not as a mere locality, but as the place where God was pleased to manifest his gracious presence. It matters little, therefore, whether the closing words (in thee) be referred to God directly, or to Zion, as the channel through which he imparted spiritual blessings to the gentiles. Compare the figure of a spring or stream in Joel iv. 18 (iii. 18.) Zech. xiii. 1. xiv. 8 Ez. xlvii. 1, and see above, on Ps. lxxxiv. 7 (6.) The word joined with singers admits of a two-fold derivation, and may either mean players upon instruments, or still more definitely, pipers, as the players on stringed instruments are named in the same connection, Ps. lxxviii. 26 (25); or as some of the latest interpreters prefer, it may mean dancers, as this indication of joy was commonly practised, in connection with singing, not only by women but by men. See above, on Ps. xxx. 12 (11), and below, on Ps. cl. 4, and compare Ex. xv. 20. 2 Sam. vi. 16. The Selah at the end of the preceding verse shows that the variations of the main theme are concluded, and separates the body of the psalm from this verse, which contains the words neither of the Psalmist nor the Church nor God himself but of the converted Gentiles.

P S A L M L X X X V I I I .

1. A Song. A Psalm. To (or by) the Sons of Korah. To the Chief Musician. Concerning afflictive sickness. A didactic Psalm. By Heman the Ezrahite. The first word of this title elsewhere denotes a song of praise or triumph. See above, on Ps. xlii. 9 (S.) lxxxiii. 1. It is here prefixed, however, to the most despondent psalm in the collection, in which the complaints and lamentations are relieved by no joyful anticipations or expressions of strong confidence. The only satisfactory explanation of these facts is afforded by the supposition, that Ps. lxxxviii and lxxxix were intended to constitute a pair or double psalm, like the first and second, third and fourth, ninth and tenth, forty-second and forty-third, etc. The desponding lamentations of P. lxxxviii are then merely introductory to the cheering expectations of Ps. lxxxix. This supposition also explains the unusual length of the inscription now before us, the first part of which may then be considered as belonging to both psalms, while the last clause corresponds to the title of Ps. lxxxix. Afflictive sickness, literally, sickness to afflict or humble. For the figurative use of sickness, and the sense of this inscription, see above, on Ps. liii. 1. Heman the Ezrahite is mentioned, with Asaph and Ethan, as chief musicians in the reign of David, 1 Chron. vi. 18 (33.) xv. 17. xvi. 41, 42. The Heman and Ethan, spoken of in 1 Chron. ii. 6 as Ezrahites (i. e. sons of Zerah), and in 1 King v. 11 as eminent for wisdom, are supposed by some to be different persons, because they were of the tribe of Judah, while others suppose that they were Levites adopted into that tribe. The Psalm before us neither requires nor admits of any minute or artificial subdivision.

2 (1.) Jehovah, God of my salvation, (by) day have I cried, and by night, before thee. God of my salvation, the God in whom I trust to save me, because he is a saving God, or God my Saviour. See above, on Ps. lxxxv. 5 (4.) Day and by night are related to each other here, as night and by day are in Ps. lxxvii. 3 (2.) Before thee implies that his cries were not mere instinctive expressions of distress, but prayers addressed to God. With the whole verse compare Ps. xxii. 3 (2.)

3 (2.) Let my prayer come before thee ; incline thine ear unto my cry. The first petition is that his prayer may attract the divine attention, which is varied in the last clause by the figure of one bending down to catch a faint or distant cry. See above, on Ps. xvii. 6. xxxi. 3 (2.) lxxi. 2.

4 (3.) For sated with evils is my soul, and my life to the grave draws near. Evils, sufferings, distresses. As life is plural in Hebrew, it can be construed regularly with the plural verb ; but as this is properly a causative, it may also be construed with evils, or with men indefinitely, they have brought my life near to the grave. The first construction is favoured by the analogy of Ps. cvii. 18. The grave, sheol, the state of the dead. See above on Ps. vi. 6 (5.)

5 (4.) I am reckoned with those going down to the pit ; I am (or am become) as a man with no strength. With the first clause compare Ps. xxviii. 1. cxliii. 7. With no strength, literally, (to whom) there is no strength. The last word in Hebrew occurs only here, but a cognate form in Ps. xxii. 20 (19.) There is in the original an antithesis, which cannot be conveyed by mere translation, arising from the fact that the first word for man is one implying strength.

6 (5.) With (or among) the dead, free, like the slain, lying in the grave, whom thou rememberest no more, and they by (or from) thy hand are cut off. As to be God's servant is the highest privilege and honour (Ps. lxxxvi. 16), so to be free from his service (Job iii 19) is to be miserable. The reference is not to death in general, but to death by violence and as a punishment. The slain, literally, the (mortally) wounded. See above, on Ps. lxix. 27 (26.) The latter half of the verse contains a strong poetical description of the wicked, as no longer the objects of God's protecting care. Of the two translations, from and by thy hand, the first conveys the same idea with the foregoing words, while the second represents the destruction of God's enemies as the work of his own hands.

7 (6.) Thou hast placed me in a deep pit, in dark places, in abysses. A deep pit, literally, a pit of low or under places. See above, on Ps. lxiii. 10 (9.) lxxxvi. 13, and compare Ez. xxvi. 20. The dark places are those of the invisible and lower world. Abysses, deeps, or depths of water. See above, on Ps. lxix. 3 (2.)

8 (7.) Upon me weighs thy wrath, and (with) all thy waves thou dost oppress me. Selah. The word translated waves corresponds etymologically to breakers. See above, on Ps. xlii. 8 (7.) With the first clause compare Ps. xxxviii. 3 (2.) The verb to oppress or afflict is applied in historical prose to the oppression of Israel in Egypt, Gen. xv. 13. Ex. i. 12. The infinitive of the same verb occurs in the title of the psalm before us. The Selah indicates the depth of his distress, and the necessity of a pause before resuming the description.

9 (8.) Thou hast put far my acquaintances from me; thou hast made me an abomination to them; (I am) shut up and cannot come forth. The circumstance complained of in the first clause, is one often mentioned as an aggravation of distress. See above, on Ps. xxxi. 12 (11.) xxxviii. 12 (11.) lxix. 9 (8), and compare Ps. xxvii. 10. The next clause shows that he complains of something more than mere neglect. Made me, literally, put or placed me. See above, on Ps. xxxix. 9 (8.) There may be an allusion to the statement in the history, that the Israelites were an abomination, an object of religious detestation and abhorrence, to their Egyptian masters. See Gen. xliii. 32. xlv. 34. The last clause is by some understood to mean, I am encompassed by inextricable difficulties. Compare Lam. iii. 7. Job. iii. 22. Others, with more probability, connect it with what goes before, and understand the sense to be, that he is not willing to expose himself to this unmerited hatred and contempt. See Job. xxxi. 34, and compare Ps. xlv. 14 (13.) lxxx. 7 (6.)

10 (9.) My eye decays by reason of affliction; I invoke thee, oh Jehovah, every day; I spread out unto thee my hands. With the first clause compare Ps. vi. 8 (7) xxxi. 10 (9.) xxxviii. 11 (10.) lxix. 4 (3.) With the last compare Ps. xlv. 21 (20.) The first Hebrew verb is one of rare occurrence; a derivative noun is used by Moses, Deut. xxviii. 65. The preterites represent the suffering as no new thing but one of long continuance.

11 (10.) Wilt thou to the dead do wonders, or shall ghosts arise (and) thank thee? Selah. The argument implied is that the present life is the appropriate time for those favours which belong to it. See above, on Ps. vi. 6 (5.) The word Rephaïm, in the last clause, is the name of a Canaanitish race of giants, but is applied poetically to the gigantic shades or spectres of the dead. See my note on Isai. xiv. 9. Do wonders, literally, wonder, as in Ps. lxxvii. 12 (11.)

12 (11.) Shall thy mercy be recounted in the grave, thy faithfulness in destruction? The last word (Abaddon) appears elsewhere in conjunction with the grave and death, as a poetical equivalent. See Prov. xv. 11. Job. xxvi. 6. xxviii. 22.

13 (12.) Shall thy wonders be known in the dark, and thy righteousness in the land of forgetfulness? These are varied metaphorical descriptions of the state of death, considered negatively as the privation or the opposite of life. Darkness is here opposed to the light of life or of the living, Ps. lvi. 14 (13.) The land of forgetfulness, where men forget, Ecc. ix. 5, 6, 10, and are forgotten, Ps. xxxi. 13 (12.)

14 (13.) And I unto thee, oh Jehovah, have cried, and in the morning shall my prayer come before thee. What he has done he is still resolved to do, as the only means of safety. Hence the alternation of the preterite and future. The first verb means to cry for help. See above, on Ps. xviii. 42 (41.) With the last clause compare Ps. v. 4 (3.) lvii. 9 (8.) lix. 17 (16.) The verb has its proper sense of coming before one or into his presence. See above, on Ps. xvii. 13. xviii. 6 (5.) xxi. 4 (3.)

15 (14.) Why, oh Jehovah, wilt thou reject my soul, wilt thou hide thy face from me? The first verb means to reject with abhorrence. See above, on Ps. xliii. 2 xliv. 10, 24 (9, 23.) lx. 3, 12 (1, 10.) lxxiv. 1. lxxvii. 8 (7.) The question implies that such rejection would be inconsistent with God's faithfulness, and is therefore not expressive of entire despondence.

16 (15.) Wretched (am) I and expiring from childhood; I have borne thy terrors; I despair. Expiring, ready to perish, at the point of death, a strong description of extreme distress. The childhood may be that of the individual sufferer, or of Israel as a nation (Hos. xi. 1.) Both applications may have been intended.

17 (16.) Over me have passed thine indignations; thy terrors have destroyed me. The image in the first clause is the same as in Ps. xlii. 8 (7.) Indignations, literally, heats or inflammations, but always applied to anger. The plural occurs only here. The unusual form of the last verb is supposed by some to have been coined by the writer, for the sake of an allusion to Lev. xxv. 23.

18 (17.) They have surrounded me like waters all the day; they have encompassed me at once (or all together.) The figure of overwhelming waves is still continued. The subject of the verbs can only be the indignations and the terrors of v. 17 (16.)

19 (18.) Thou hast put far from me lover and friend; my acquaintances (are) darkness (or a dark place.) The first clause is a repetition of v. 9 (8.) The other is obscure, and is supposed by some to mean, my acquaintances vanish, disappear in darkness; by others, my acquaintances give way to darkness, are succeeded by it; my only friend is now the dark place, i. e. the grave or death. Thus understood, the sentiment is not unlike that in Job xvii 14.

P S A L M L X X X I X .

1 Maschil. By Ethan the Ezrahite. From the fact that Ethan and Jeduthun are both named with Asaph and Heman, but never named together, it has been inferred that they are two names of the same person, or rather that Ethan is the personal name, and Jeduthun (derived from a verb which means to praise) the official title. Heman and Ethan are both described as Ezrahites, i. e. adopted sons of Zerach, 1 Chron. ii. 5, but by birth were ne doubt both Sons of Korah, 1 Chron. vi. 18, 22 (33, 37.) To the lamentations and complaints of Heman in the first part of this double psalm (Ps. lxxxviii) is now added an appeal to the divine promise by Ethan in the psalm before us. The particular promise here insisted on is that in 2 Sam. vii, which constitutes the basis of all the Messianic Psalms. The hypothesis of Hengstenberg and others, that the psalm was composed in the interval between the death of Josiah and the Babylonish exile, by the Korhites of that period, who merely assumed the name and breathed the spirit of their great progenitors, could be justified only by extreme exegetical necessity, which does not here exist, since nothing is more natural than to assume, that these psalms were nearly contemporaneous with the promise itself, and intended to anticipate misgivings and repinings, which, although they existed even then in germ, were not developed till the period of decline began, or rather till it was approaching its catastrophe. By far the larger part of this psalm is occupied in amplifying and expounding the great Messianic promise, vs. 2—38 (1—37), while the remainder, like Ps. lxxxviii, teaches the chosen people how to apply it, in their times of suffering and despondency, vs. 39—53 (38—52), a feature of the composition which fully warrants its description in the title as a maschil or didactic psalm.

2 (1.) The mercies of Jehovah forever will I sing; to generation and generation will I make known thy faithfulness with my mouth. The mercies particularly meant are the favours promised to David as the progenitor and type of the Messiah. The faithfulness mentioned in the other clause is that of God in the fulfilment of these promises. Compare my note on Isai. lv. 3, where the same idea is expressed by the sure mercies of David. Forever, literally eternity, the noun being used adverbially, as its plural is in Ps. lxi. 5 (4.) The promise of perpetual commemoration shows that the Psalmist speaks not only for himself but for the church of which he is the mouth or spokesman.

3 (2.) For I have said, Forever shall mercy be built up. The heavens—thou wilt fix thy faithfulness in them. The church will celebrate God's merey and faithfulness forever, because they will endure forever. I have said, i. e. this is the view of the matter I have taken and expressed already. The scheme of God's gracious dispensations is conceived of as a building, already founded and hereafter to be carried up to its completion. The emphatic construction of the heavens as an absolute nominative (as to the heavens, thou wilt fix etc.) is inadequately represented in the common version (shalt thou establish in the very heavens.) For the proverbial use of the heavens and the heavenly bodies as a standard of permanence and immutability, see above, on Ps. lxxii. 5. The idea here is, thou shalt make thy faithfulness as fixed and stable as the frame of nature.

4 (3.) I have ratified a covenant with my chosen (one); I have sworn unto David my servant. These are the words of God himself, though not expressly so described, as in v. 20 (19) below. We have here a summary statement of the substance of the promise in 2 Sam. vii, upon which this and the other Messianic psalms are founded. Ratified a covenant, see above, on Ps. l. 5. With my chosen, literally, to my chosen, as in the parallel expression, because what is here called a covenant was really a conditional promise or engagement upon God's part. My servant, i. e. my chosen and appointed instrument in executing my designs. See above, on Ps. xviii. 1, and compare Ps. lxxvi. 16.

5 (4.) Unto eternity will I confirm thy seed, and build, to generation and generation, thy throne. Selah. Confirm thy seed, establish thy descendants in the permanent possession of the royal dignity. The same two verbs which, in the foregoing verse, are applied to the divine grace and fidelity, are here applied directly to their objects, the throne and family of David.

6 (5) And the heavens acknowledge thy wonders, Jehovah, likewise thy faithfulness (is acknowledged) in the assembly of holy (ones.) The promise just cited is entitled to men's confidence, because the omnipotence and faithfulness of Him who uttered it are thankfully acknowledged by superior beings. The parallelism of heavens and holy ones shows that the former are here put for their inhabitants. For the true meaning of the first verb, see above, on Ps. vi. 6 (5), and for that of the following noun, on Ps. lxxvii. 12 (11.) lxxxviii. 11 (10.) Wonders or miracles are here referred to, as proofs of a mighty power. The and, also, at the beginning of the clauses, have the force of even, yea, in our idiom. The word translated holy ones is entirely different from that usually rendered saints. The latter is always applied to men, the former usually to superior beings, i. e. angels. See Deut. xxxiii. 2, 3. Dan. viii. 13. Zech. xiv. 5. Job. iv. 18. xv. 15.

7. (6.) For who, in the sky, can compare to Jehovah? (Who) is like to Jehovah among the Sons of the Mighty? The question involves a strong negation, or an affirmation that there is none like him, even in the orders of existence superior to man. This is given as a reason for the adoring recognition of his power and veracity in v. 6 (5.) The word translated sky is elsewhere used in the plural to denote the clouds collectively. See above, on Ps. lxviii. 35 (34.) lxxvii. 18 (17.) lxxviii. 23. The singular form, in this sense, is peculiar to the psalm before us. See below, v. 38 (37.) The twofold usage of the English verb compare, as active and neuter, corresponds exactly to that of the original expression, for the primary and proper sense of which, see above on Ps. v. 4 (3.) xl. 6 (5.) l. 21. The Sons of the Mighty or Almighty are the angels. As to the peculiar form of the description, see above, on Ps. xxix. 1, from which it seems to be directly borrowed in the case before us.

8 (7.) A God to be dreaded in the secret council of (his) holy (ones) greatly, and to be feared above all (those) about him. This is not a distinct proposition, but a further description of the Being pronounced in the foregoing verse to be incomparable. The divine name (יהוה) here used implies that what makes him so terrible is his infinite power. The angels are again called holy ones, but furthermore described as the privy council, the confidential intimates, of God himself. See above, on Ps. xxv. 14. lv. 15 (14.) lxxxiii. 4 (3.) Yet even to these, as being endlessly superior, he is and ought to be an object of adoring fear. The intensive adverb greatly is the same with that in Ps. lxii. 3, and like it is placed emphatically at the end of the clause. Compare Ps. xlvi. 2 (1.) lxxv. 10 (9.) Above may either mean more than, or by, with an implication of his vast superiority as the cause or reason. Those about him, i. e. those immediately surrounding him, his heavenly attendants, the angels. See the same expression, in a somewhat different application, Ps. lxxvi. 12 (11.)

9 (8.) Jehovah, God of Hosts, who (is) like thee, mighty, Jah, and thy faithfulness (is) round about thee. The infinite superiority of God to men and angels is here expressed, or rather indicated, by an accumulation of descriptive titles. We have here the full phrase, Jehovah God of Hosts, which occurs so frequently in an abbreviated form. See above, on Ps. xxiv. 10. The word translated mighty is used only here; but its sense is clear from the analogy of cognate forms, confirmed by the testimony of the ancient versions. As to Jah, the pregnant abbreviation or concentration of Jehovah, see above, on Ps. lxviii. 5 (4.) It may here be in apposition either with Jehovah, as a vocative, or with Jah, as a descriptive title. ‘Who is like thee, a mighty one, oh Jah?’ Or, ‘who like thee is mighty, who like thee is Jah?’ Faithfulness, as elsewhere, is veracity or truth in the fulfilment of a promise. The word translated round about is the feminine or neuter form of that used in the preceding verse, and there applied to persons. The meaning of the whole clause is that God’s fidelity is never absent from him but appears wherever he does, the proofs of its existence being visible on all hand^s. The English Bible supplies a preposition and assumes a second question, 'who is like thy faithfulness round about thee?' But the other construction, which is that adopted in the ancient versions, is much simpler and more natural, the ellipsis of the preposition in such cases being rare, whereas that of the substantive verb is the general rule of Hebrew syntax, to which its insertion is a mere exception.

10 (9.) Thou rulest the swell of the sea; in the rise of its waves thou stillest them. The general declaration of God's power is now rendered more distinct by specifying one of the most striking forms in which it manifests itself. At the same time, there is no doubt an allusion to the scriptural usage of the sea as an emblem of the world and its conflicting powers. See above, on Ps. xlvi. 3, 4 (2, 3.) lxxv. 8 (7.) The appropriateness of the words both to physical and moral changes affords an easy and beautiful transition to the latter in the next verse. The verbal form at the beginning is a participle, thou (art) ruling, i. e. habitually, constantly. The connective particle may be retained by rendering it rulest over. The first noun is applied elsewhere (Ps. xvii. 10) to the swelling or elation of the heart with pride; but that this is only a derived and secondary meaning may be gathered from the use of the same word to denote the loftiness or majesty of God (Ps. xciii. 1), and also from the application of the verbal root to the rise of water in an inundation (Ez. xlvi. 5.) The parallel term is an abbreviated infinitive used as a noun, and therefore well represented by the English rise, which is also both noun and verb.

11 (10.) Thou didst crush, like the slain, Rahab; with thine arm of strength thou didst scatter thy foes. This relates wholly to the sea of nations, in which Egypt stands first, as the earliest national enemy of Israel, and also perhaps because the power of Pharaoh, at the exodus, was literally broken in the sea. The first verb means to shatter, crush, or break in pieces. See above, Ps. lxxii 4. The pronoun is emphatic ; (it was) thou (and none other than) didst crush, etc. The significant name Rahab, meaning pride or insolence, corresponds to the swelling of the sea, in the foregoing verse. See above, on Ps. lxxxvii. 4. Like the slain, like one mortally wounded, especially in battle. See above, on Ps. lxxxviii. 6 (5.) The point of comparison is the sudden change from overbearing arrogance to helplessness and weakness. Thine arm of strength, or strong arm, the active exertion of thy power. See above, on Ps. x. 15. xxxvii. 17. xlv. 4 (3.) lxxxiii. 9 (8.) The last verb belongs to the dialect of poetry, and occurs above, in Ps. liii. 6 (5.) See below, Ps. cxii. 9. cxli. 7. This verse relates only indirectly to the enemies of God in general. Even the last clause has specific reference to the enemies who perished in the Red Sea.

12 (11.) To thee (belongs) heaven, also to thee earth, the world and its fulness, thou didst found them. The power of God is now described as universal and creative. Heaven and earth is the usual comprehensive phrase for the whole frame of nature or material universe. The last clause is evidently borrowed from Ps. xxiv. 1. Its fulness, that which occupies and fills it, its contents and its inhabitants. The verb to found suggests the two ideas of creation and sustentation. He not only called them into being, but made them permanent or lasting. See above, on Ps. lxxviii. 69, and below, on Ps. civ. 5. The world, the cultivated and productive earth, as opposed to the desolate and barren sea. The English Bible, following the masoretic accents, construes the world and its fulness as absolute nominatives. A simpler construction is to put them in apposition with heaven and earth, and refer the pronoun at the end to all these antecedents.

13 (12.) North and south, thou didst create them ; Tabor and Hermon in thy name rejoice. The pronoun at the end of the first clause is superfluous in English; the original construction requires north and south to be taken absolutely, (as for) the north and south, thou hast created them. The word for north originally means concealment; that for south the right hand. The east and west are represented by two mountains on either side of Jordan. As to Hermon, see above, on Ps. xlii. 7 (6.) The points of the compass are here put, like heaven and earth in the preceding context, for the whole world, and described as rejoicing in God's name, i. e. praising his perfections by their very existence.

14 (13.) To thee (is) an arm with strength; strong is thy hand, high is thy right hand. This is simply another declaration of the divine omnipotence, under the usual emblems, arm, hand, and right-hand. See above, on v. 11 (10.)

15 (14.) Justice and judgment (are) the place of thy throne; mercy and truth shall go before thy face. The word translated place may also have the more specific sense of dwelling-place. The meaning is that God reigns in the midst of perfect righteousness. See above, on v. 9 (8.) The verb in the last clause always means to go or come before, sometimes in the sense of coming into one's presence, sometimes in that of meeting or encountering, sometimes (as here) in that of being a forerunner. See above, on Ps. lxxxv. 14 (13.)

16 (15.) Happy the people knowing joyful noise; Jehovah, in the light of thy face they shall walk. The unusual expression in the first clause seems to mean those who know how and have occasion to rejoice in the experience of God's favour. The last noun in Hebrew denotes any loud expression of exultation, either by voice or instrument. See above, on Ps. xxvii. 6. The light of God's face is the cheering expression of his countenance as indicating favour or benignity. See above, on Ps. iv. 7 (6.)

xliv. 3 xlv. 4 (3.) To walk in this light is to live in the habitual enjoyment of it. This last clause gives the reason for their being pronounced happy in the first.

17 (16.) In thy name they shall rejoice all the day, and in thy righteousness shall be exalted. In thy name, in the display of thy perfections. In thy righteousness, i. e. in the exercise of that essential rectitude which secures the performance of God's promise and thereby the salvation of his people.

18 (17.) For the beauty of their strength (art) thou and in thy favour thou wilt lift our horn. God is at once their mighty ornament and their glorious protection. See above, on Ps. lxxviii. 61. In thy favour, at the time, and by the means, of thy experienced favour. Lift our horn, enable us to triumph in security. See above, on Ps. lxxv. 11 (10), and below, on Ps. xcii. 11 (10.)

19 (18.) For unto Jehovah (belongs) our shield, and to the Holy One of Israel our king. Our protectors are themselves protected by Jehovah. This construction is much simpler and more natural than that adopted in the English versions, which entirely overlooks the preposition in both clauses, or arbitrarily regards it as a sign of the nominative case. A better construction, although not precisely the true sense, is given in the margin of the English Bible.

20 (19.) Then thou spakest in vision to thy gracious one and saidst, I have laid help on a Mighty (Man); I have raised one chosen from (among) the people. The Psalmist here returns to the vocation by David and the promise made to him. See 2 Sam. vii. 17 (compare 1 Chron. xvii. 9), where the divine communication made through Nathan to David is called a vision. Thy saint or gracious one may signify either of these persons.

The ancient versions, followed by the Prayer Book and some eminent interpreters, have the plural form instead of the singular, thy saints, meaning Israel at large, to whom the promise was truly addressed. See 2 Sam. vii. 10. 1 Chr. xvii. 9. To lay help upon one is to impart it to him, with a strong implication of descent from above. See above, on Ps. xxi. 6 (5.) The gift in this case was not merely for himself, but for others through his agency. God helped him to help the people. Chosen has here its strict sense, but not without allusion to its specific use as signifying a young warrior. See above, on Ps. lxxviii. 31, 63.

21 (20.) I have found David my servant; with my holy oil have I anointed him. This verse removes all doubt as to the person primarily intended in the foregoing verse, but without excluding his successors, and especially the last and greatest of them, to whom the royal dignity was given in the unction of David. See 1 Sam. xvi. 13. This act denoted not only consecration to the divine service, but the spiritual gifts required in order to its right performance. See above, on Ps. ii. 2.

22 (21.) With whom my hand shall be ever present; also my arm shall strengthen him. Ever present, literally, established, permanently fixed. See below, v. 38 (37), and above, Ps. lxxviii. 37. The hand and arm, as usual, are emblems of strength. See above, on vs. 11, 14 (10, 13.)

23 (22.) The enemy shall not vex him, and the son of iniquity shall not afflict him. The verb in the first clause means specifically to annoy or persecute as a creditor his debtor. The second clause is copied, almost word for word, from 2 Sam. vii. 10. Compare 1 Chr. xvii. 9.

24 (23.) And I will crush before him his foes, and his haters I will smite. The last verb is especially applied to strokes inflicted by the hand of God.

25 (24.) And my faithfulness and my mercy (shall be) with him, and in my name shall his horn be high. See above, on vs. 17, 18 (16, 17.) Faithfulness and mercy are combined, as in Ps. lxxxviii. 12 (11.)

26 (25.) And I will set in the sea his hand, and in the floods his right hand. I will cause him to lay hands upon them, and exercise authority over them, as his own possession and domain. Hand and right hand, as in v. 14 (13.) Sea and floods, streams, or rivers, as in Ps. xxiv. 2. The watery parts of the earth are here put for the whole. Compare 1 Chr. xiv. 17.

27 (26.) He shall call me (or cry unto me), Thou art my Father, my God, and the rock of my salvation. The emphatic pronouns in the original bring out more clearly the mutual relation and reciprocal action of the parties. With the first clause compare 2 Sam. vii. 14. 1 Chr. xxii. 10. Job xvii. 14. With the second compare Ps. xviii. 3 (2.) xxxi. 3 (2.) The rock of my salvation, the rock that saves me, the hiding-place and stronghold where my safety lies.

28 (27.) Also I (as my) first-born will give him, higher than kings of the earth. He shall be treated not only as the son but as the eldest son of God himself. The same description is applied elsewhere to Israel (Ex. iv. 22), to Ephraim (Jer. xxxi. 9), and to Christ (Heb. i. 6.) The last clause is borrowed, both in form and substance, from Deut. xxviii. 1 (compare xxix. 16); but instead of high above, we have here high as to, in reference to (or in comparison with) the kings of the earth.

29 (28.) Forever will I keep for him my mercy, and my cov- nant is sure to him. Forever, literally, to eternity. Keep, i. e. keep it in reserve for him. My covenant, or conditional promise. See above, on v. 4 (3.) Sure, or more exactly, made sure, ratified, confirmed. Compare Isai. lv. 3.

30 (29.) And I will establish forever his seed, and his throne as the days of heaven. See 2 Sam. vii. 12. The promise is now extended from David to his posterity. Establish, literally, set or place. The pronoun in the second clause may refer either to David or his seed. In the latter case, it might be rendered its or their throne. The question, however, is purely grammatical, since the throne of David and the throne of his descendants are identical. In the last clause the idea of duration is again expressed by a reference to the stability of nature. See above, on Ps. lxxii 5, 7, 17, and compare Deut. xi. 21.

31—33 (30—32.) If his sons forsake my law, and in my judgments will not walk; if my statutes they profane, and my commandments will not keep; then will I visit with a rod their transgression, and with stripes their guilt. The promise of perpetual favour to the house of David was not intended to ensure impunity to its unfaithful members. To profane God's statutes is to deny in theory or practice, their sacred obligation and divine authority. The and at the commencement of the last verse is equivalent to then in English after a conditional clause. The whole passage is an amplification of 2 Sam. vii. 14.

34 (33.) And my mercy I will not withdraw from him, and will not prove false (or deal falsely) in my faith. Our idiom requires a but to render clear the relation of this sentence to the foregoing context. The verb in the first clause means to break or violate, but construed, as it here is, with the preposition from, suggests the idea of breaking an engagement by withdrawing what was stipulated to be given and secured. Faith in the last clause means fidelity or truth, as in the phrases, good faith, keep faith, etc. See above, on Ps. xlv. 18 (17.) The promise in this verse is not to them but him, not to the sinning individuals mentioned just before, but to the family or race as such, to David as still living in his natural descendants. Compare 1 Kings xi. 36. 2 Kings viii. 19. 2 Chr. vi. 42. Isai. xxxvii. 35.

35 (34.) I will not profane my covenant, and the utterance of my lips I will not change. In the first clause there is obvious allusion to v. 32 (31.) What God requires of them he renders to them. The engagement is reciprocal. As they are not to profane his covenant by breaking it, neither will He. The obligation is a sacred one on both sides. See below, on the next verse, and above, on Ps. lv. 21 (20.) The utterance or outgoing of the lips is a technical expression of the Law, in reference to oral vows and other engagements. See Num. xxx. 13 (12.) Deut xxiii. 24 (23.) It is a stronger expression than that which I have said or promised, although this is really the meaning here. I will not change, evade the execution of my promise by altering its terms or its conditions. Compare the form of expression in Ps xv. 4.

36 (35.) One (thing) have I sworn in my holiness, I will not lie unto David. The first word in Hebrew is not an adverb of time (ἅπαξ, semel, once), but a numeral adjective in the feminine form, used as the neuter is in Greek and Latin. See above, on Ps. xxvii. 4. 'Whatever else may fail, there is one thing that cannot, for I have sworn that it shall come to pass.' In my holiness, as a holy God, including all divine perfection, but with special reference to moral rectitude. See above, on Ps. lx. 8 (6.) The last verb might be rendered, I cannot lie. See Num. xxiii. 19. 1 Sam. xv. 29, and compare Heb. vi. 18. vii. 20, 21. The form of the original is highly idiomatic, if I lie unto David. Compare the Hebrew of 1 Sam. xxiv. 7 (6.) 2 Sam. iii. 35.

· 37 (36.) His seed to eternity shall be, and his throne as the sun before me. See above, on v. 30 (29), and compare Ps. xlv. 7 (6.) Shall be, shall continue to exist. Or the whole phrase may mean, shall be eternal. As the sun, see above, on Ps. lxxii. 5, 17. Before me, in my sight and under my protection.

38 (37.) As the moon is fixed eternally, and the witness in the sky is sure. The verse, thus translated, does not repeat the promise in the one before it, but merely confirms it by a further reference to the course of nature, as the customary standard of duration. It is equally grammatical, however, to translate, as the moon it (the throne) shall be fixed forever, and (as) the witness in heaven is sure. In either case the witness is the moon. See above, on v. 7 (6), 29 (28), and compare Ps. lxxii. 5.

39 (38.) And (yet) thou hast cast off and rejected; thou art wroth with thine Anointed. Having fully recited and expounded the great promise to the house of David, the psalm now contrasts it with the present reality, and seems to complain that it had not been verified. For a similar transition, see above, Ps. xlv. 10 (9.) There is no need of confining this description to the last days of the kingdom of Judah, or to any other period of its history exclusively. If the psalm was really composed by Ethan, as we have no sufficient ground for doubting that it was, he may have designedly so framed it as to suit any season of distress and danger, in which the theocratic sovereign seemed to be forsaken of Jehovah. Both verbs in the first clause signify abhorrent and contemptuous rejection. See above, on Ps. xv. 4. xliii. 2. xlv. 10 (9.) lxxviii. 52, 67. lxxxviii. 15 (14.)

40 (39.) Thou hast broken the covenant of thy servant; thou hast profaned to the earth his crown. The first verb in Hebrew occurs only here and Lam. ii. 7. The usual explanation is conjectural, or founded on the ancient versions. A cognate verb in Arabic means to abhor, which would be appropriate in this place. The covenant of thy servant, i. e. thy covenant with thy servant. See above, on vs. 29, 35 (28, 34.) The pregnant construction, profaned to the ground, i. e. profaned by casting to the ground, occurs above, Ps. lxxiv. 7. The theocratical crown was a sacred or religious dignity, any contempt of which might therefore well be called a profanation. Compare what is said of the priestly diadem, Ex. xxviii. 36. xxix. 6.

41 (40.) Thou hast broken down all his walls ; thou hast made his defences a ruin. As the word translated walls is commonly used to denote the enclosures of vineyards, whether walls or hedges, this may be the figure here intended, which is then exchanged, in the last clause, for that of a walled town, with its defences or defensive works, its fortifications. See above, on Ps lxxx. 13 (12.) Some interpreters allege that the last word always has the sense of terror; but it may be doubted whether it ever has, whereas that of ruin often occurs, particularly in the Book of Proverbs.

42 (41.) All spoil him that pass by the way ; he has become a contempt to his neighbours. With the first clause compare Ps lxxx. 13 (12); with the last, Ps. lxxx. 7 (6.) These resemblances prove nothing as to the relative antiquity of the two psalms, or the date of either. The figure is more fully carried out in Ps. lxxx, but this no more proves that to be the original than it proves it to be the copy. If any such conclusion were legitimate, it would be easier to account for the amplification of the hint here thrown out by a later writer, than for the omission, in the case before us, of so many fine strokes in that admirable apologue. A contempt, an object of supercilious pity and disdainful wonder.

43 (42.) Thou hast lifted the right hand of his foes, hast caused to triumph all his enemies. As the hand, and especially the right hand, is the symbol of exerted strength, and a high hand that of triumphant superiority, especially in war, so to raise the right hand in the first clause of the verse before us, really means nothing more than the literal expression (caused to triumph) in the other. This seemed to be in direct contradiction to the promise in vs 23, 24 (22, 23), as well as to the prayer in Ps. xxv. 2.

44 (43.) Also thou turnest the edge of his sword, and dost not allow him to stand in the battle. The particle (הַאֵל) at the beginning indicates a climax. Not only was his enemy superior, but himself delinquent and disgraced. Edge, literally rock, of his sword. The idea suggested may be that of hardness, as a hard edge is essential to a serviceable weapon. See my note on Isai. xxvii. 1. Some interpreters, however, think it best to adhere to the ordinary usage of rock in Hebrew as an emblem of strength, and to understand the whole phrase as meaning the strength of his sword, either in the strict sense or in that of strong sword, both of which are here appropriate. See above, on v. 27 (26.) The construction in the last clause is ambiguous, as the pronoun may refer to sword or rock, no less grammatically than to its possessor. The general sense remains the same, however, as in the similar case above, v. 30 (29.)

45 (44.) Thou hast made (him) to cease from his brightness, and his throne to the earth cast down. Brightness is in various languages a figure for distinction, eminence, celebrity, or glory. Compare with the last clause what is said of the crown in v. 40 (39), and of the throne itself in v. 5 (4.)

46 (45.) Thou hast shortened the days of his youth; thou hast covered him with shame. Selah. His youth, his youthful energy and vigour. See Job xxxiii. 25. Thou hast made him an object of contempt by cutting short his vigorous career and rendering him prematurely old. This might be said of certain individual kings, as well as of the kingdom when approaching its catastrophe. Covered him with shame, literally, covered shame upon him, i. e. heaped it on him so as to cover him.

47 (46.) How long, Jehovah, wilt thou hide thyself forever? (How long) shall burn, like fire, thy wrath? On the doubtful construction of the first clause, and the meaning of the combination, how long forever, see above, on Ps. xiii. 2 (1.) lxxix. 5. How long, literally, until what, i. e. until what point (how far), or until what time (how long)?

48 (47.) Remember what duration I have; why (for) nought hast thou created all the sons of Man (or Adam)? The construction in the first clause is obscure and broken, as if it consisted of incoherent exclamations. Oh remember—I—what—duration. For the meaning of the last word, see above, on Ps. xvii. 14. xxxix. 6 (5), and with the whole clause compare Ps. lxxviii. 39. cxix 84. Job vii. 6. xiv. 1. The last clause is to be hypothetically understood. ‘Why hast thou made all men in vain, as must be the case if their short life is entirely filled with suffering?’ Or, ‘why dost thou give colour and occasion to the charge of having made men to no purpose?’ Why, literally, on what (account), or for what (reason)? The next word in Hebrew (אֵינִי) is a noun meaning vanity, nonentity, or nothing, here and in Ps. cxxvii. 1, 2, used adverbially in the sense of vainly, to no purpose, or for nought.

49 (48.) What man shall live and not see death (but) rescue his soul from the hand of Sheol? Selah. An indirect assertion of the melancholy fact that all must die, rendered still more pointed by the use of a word for man implying strength. See above, on Ps. lxxxviii. 5 (4.) As if he had said, what man is so strong as to live forever and escape the common destiny of mortals? This allusion cannot be preserved in any mere translation. Rescue, literally, cause to escape. His soul, considered as his life or vital principle. Hand may be here, as often elsewhere, a figure for power; or it may have its proper sense and denote the hand of Sheol, the Grave, Mortality or Death, as an ideal person. The Selah has the same force as in Ps. xxxix. 6, 12 (5, 11.)

50 (49.) Where are thy former mercies, Lord, thou didst swear unto David in thy truth (or faithfulness.) The first or former mercies of the Lord are those which he promised of old, especially to David, as expressly mentioned in the other clause. See above, on vs. 4, 36 (3, 35.) The inquiry where they are implies that they have vanished, or that the fulfilment has not become visible. The last clause may be closely united with the first by supplying a relative between them, as in the common version, which thou swarest unto David. A simpler and more emphatic syntax is to make it a distinct proposition: thou didst swear unto David, and thy oath cannot be broken. See above, on v. 36 (35.) This last idea is involved in the concluding words, in thy veracity or faithfulness. What God, as a God of truth, has sworn, not only will but must be executed.

51 (50.) Remember, Lord, the reproach of thy servants, my bearing in my bosom all the many nations. The form of address is the same as in v. 48 (47.) The reproach of thy servants, the contempt and disgrace to which they are subjected. Thy servants, of whom I am one. Or the sudden transition to the first person singular may show that the petitioner, in this whole context, is not an individual believer, but the Church at large. In my bosom may denote good measure or abundance. See above, on Ps. lxxix. 12. Or bearing in my bosom may mean feeling in my heart, i. e. intensely, exquisitely, in which case nations must be put for the contempt of nations. More probable than either is the figure of gestation, according to which Zion, although now despised or hated by the nations, is one day to be their spiritual mother or their spiritual birth-place. See above on Ps. lxxxvii. 4, 6. The Hebrew adjective (גָּדוֹל) may mean either great or many; but the latter sense is more agreeable to usage and the collocation of the words in this case. The idiomatic phrase, all many nations, is equivalent to saying, all the nations who are many in number. The word all might be used, however small the number of the nations. To express the whole idea, therefore, both words were required.

52 (51.) Wherewith thine enemies have reproached, Jehovah wherewith they have reproached the footsteps of thine Anointed The connection indicated by the relative at the beginning is by no means clear. The common version, above given, makes reproach in v. 51 (50) the antecedent. Some interpreters connect the relative with the verb at the beginning of that verse, and give it the force of a conjunction, ‘remember that (or how) thine enemies have reproached.’ Its proper meaning as a relative pronoun may be retained by referring it to different antecedents: ‘(1) whom thine enemies have reproached, (thine enemies) who have reproached the steps of thine Anointed.’ This last expression seems to mean that they had tracked or followed him, wherever he went, with calumny and insult.

53 (52.) Blessed (be) Jehovah to eternity. Amen and Amen This is commonly regarded as no part of the psalm, but a doxology marking the conclusion of the third book. See above, on Ps. xli 14 (13.) lxxii. 18—20, and compare the Preface, vol. 1, p. xi

P S A L M X C .

THE Fourth Book, according to the ancient traditional division of the Psalter, opens with the oldest psalm in the collection. Or rather the author of the present arrangement, who was probably no other than Ezra, placed this sublime composition by itself, between the two great divisions of the book, containing respectively the Earlier and Later Psalms. See the Preface, vol. i. p. xiii. It may therefore be regarded as the heart or centre of the whole collection, and indeed as the model upon which even David, "the sweet psalmist of Israel" (2 Sam. xxiii. 1), formed that glorious body of psalmodic literature or hymnology, which, with its later but inspired and authoritative imitations, constitutes the present Book of Psalms. The date of the composition, though uncertain because not recorded, may with most probability be fixed near the close of the Error in the Wilderness, when the dying out of the older generation on account of their transgressions, and the threatened exclusion of Moses himself from the Promised Land, were exactly suited to produce such views of man's mortality and sinfulness as are here presented, but without destroying the anticipation of a bright futurity, such as really ensued upon the death of Moses, and is prospectively disclosed in the conclusion of this psalm. Its great theme is the frailty and brevity of human life, considered as the consequence of sin, and as a motive to repentance and obedience. He first contrasts the eternity of God with the mortality of man, vs. 1—6, which is then described as the effect of the divine wrath on account of sin, vs. 7—11, and made the ground of a prayer, with which the psalm concludes, for the speedy restoration of the divine favour, vs 12—17.

1. A Prayer. By Moses, the Man of God. Lord, a home hast thou been to us, in generation and generation. The psalm is called a prayer, because the petition at the close (vs. 12—17) contains the essence of the composition, to which the rest is merely preparatory. For another case precisely similar, see above, on Ps. lxxxvi. 1. The correctness of the title which ascribes the psalm to Moses is confirmed by its unique simplicity and grandeur; its appropriateness to his times and circumstances, as already stated; its resemblance to the Law in urging the connection between sin and death; its similarity of diction to the poetical portions of the Pentateuch, without the slightest trace of imitation or quotation; its marked unlikeness to the psalms of David, and still more to those of later date; and finally the proved impossibility of plausibly assigning it to any other age or author. The arguments against its authenticity have commonly been framed by a preposterous inversion of the evidence, converting into proofs of later date the very points of similarity which prove that this was the original and model psalm, the primeval basis upon which even David reared a noble superstructure of his own. The title Man of God is given to Moses, in Deut. xxxiii. 1. Josh. xiv. 6. Ezr. iii. 2, and is often applied to later prophets, especially Elijah and Elisha. See 1 Sam. ii. 27. 1 Kings xvii. 18, 24. xx. 28. 2 Kings i. 13. iv. 9, 21, 27, 42. It is here significant, implying that Moses wrote the psalm in this capacity. See above on Ps. xviii. 1. xxxvi. 1, where David is in like manner called the Servant of Jehovah, a title given to Moses himself in the account of his death, Deut. xxxiv. 5, as David, on the other hand, is called the Man of God, 2 Chr. viii. 14. Instead of hast been some read art; but though the preterite of other verbs may be used to express general truths, the present of the substantive verb is so commonly suppressed, that its form, when inserted, must have some significance. The truth seems to be, that the verse expresses only what God had been, but implies what he still was and still would be. A home, a fixed or settled dwelling, even while they wandered in the desert. The same noun is used by Moses, Deut. xxvi. 15, and a kindred form, Deut. xxxiii. 27. In generation and generation, in all successive generations. See above, on Ps. x. 6. xxxiii. 11. xlv. 18 (17.) xlix. 12 (11.) lxi. 7 (6.)

2. Before mountains were born, and (before) thou hadst brought forth earth and land, and (indeed) from eternity to eternity, thou (art) God. The mountains are first mentioned according to a scriptural usage which describes them as the oldest portions of the earth. See Gen. xlix. 26. Num. xxiii. 7. Deut. xxxiii. 15. Hab. iii. 6. By a strong but common and intelligible figure, creation is here described as generation. This is true not only of the first verb but of the second, which is too vaguely rendered in the common version (thou hadst formed.) Earth, as opposed to heaven; land, as opposed to sea. These are separately mentioned, as in the account of the creation. See Gen. i. 1, 9. The last clause may also be translated, thou art, oh God! It then simply asserts his existence from eternity. According to the other and more usual construction, it likewise asserts his omnipotence, the attribute denoted by the divine name here employed. This is the fuller and more comprehensive sense; but in favour of the other may be urged, that it is simpler and agrees best with the proximate design of the Psalmist to contrast the eternal God with short-lived man.

3. Thou turnest man even to dust, and sayest, Return, sons of Man (or Adam)! The evident allusion to Gen. iii. 19, which is also found in Job x. 9. xxxiv. 15, and re-appears in Ps. civ. 29 (compare Ps. ciii. 14), may serve to determine the meaning of the word translated dust in the first clause, but which is properly an adjective signifying crushed, broken to pieces, ground to powder, and is figuratively applied, in Ps. xxxiv. 19 (18), to brokenness of heart. Compare Isai. lvii. 15. The Hebrew preposition (עַד) is stronger than our to, and means as far as, even to. The full sense of the whole phrase is, even to the state of one completely crushed or ground to powder, even to a pulverized condition. The shortness and fragility of human life is thus brought into the strongest contrast with the eternity of God.

4. For a thousand years in thine eyes (are) as yesterday when it is past and a watch in the night. However long human life may appear to man himself, it is in God's sight evanescent and contemptible. Even the patriarchal measure, which so often approximated to a thousand years, was in God's sight like a single day in man's, or rather like a mere subdivision of it, a third part of the night, which was divided by the ancient Hebrews into three watches. See above, on Ps. lxxiii. 7 (6.) That this division was as old as Moses, may be seen from Ex. xiv. 24. When it is past or passing. It might also be translated, for it passes, i. e. no less hastily and swiftly. This verse is quoted and amplified, but without any change of meaning, 2 Pet. iii. 8.

5. Thou sweepest them away—a sleep are they—in the morning, like the grass, they pass away. The first Hebrew verb has no equivalent in English; it means to sweep away or carry off, as by a driving rain. The supposition of a reference to the flood is not necessary though admissible. A derivative form of the same verb occurs above, Ps. lxxvii. 18 (17.) The comparison of human life to a sleep or dream is common in all languages. The morning is mentioned as the time of waking, the time when we are most impressed with the unsubstantial nature of our dreams. See above, Ps. lxxiii. 20, and compare Ps. xxxix. 7 (6.) The grass is an additional but obvious emblem of caducity. The last verb is not a plural form in Hebrew, but agrees with sleep, or rather with man, in the generic sense, whose life is here compared to sleep.

6. In the morning it blooms and (then) passes away, (for) at evening he mows and it withers. The mention of the morning, in v. 5, as following the night, suggests the mention of the morning here, as followed by the evening. The first verb means not merely to flourish in the wide sense, but to bloom, as plants do. See above, on Ps. lxxii. 16, and compare Num. xvii. 23 (8), which proves it to be a Mosaic expression. The verbs may agree with grass, or with man whom the grass represents, more probably the latter. The idea conveyed by supplying then is really involved in the grammatical relation of the Hebrew verbs, the second of which never means to grow or sprout, but always to pass or undergo a change. The third verb is active but may be construed with an indefinite subject, and is then equivalent in meaning to a passive, he is mown and withers. The withering is not here referred to as the effect of natural decay but of violent excision. With the whole verse compare Ps. xxxvii. 2. ciii. 15. Job xiv. 2.

7. For we fail in thine anger, and in thy wrath are we affrighted. The natural decay or violent interruption of man's life is the effect of God's displeasure. The first verb means to waste away, decay, wear out, cease to exist. Compare its use in Ps. lxxi. 9. lxxiii. 26. The other verb is very inadequately represented by the English troubled. It means shocked, confounded, agitated, terror-stricken. See above, on Ps. ii. 5. vi. 3, 4 (2, 3.) xlviii. 6 (5.) lxxviii. 33. lxxxiii. 16 (15), and below, on Ps. civ. 29, and compare my note on Isai. lxxv. 23. It here denotes the natural instinctive dread of death. There is here a very sensible progression in the thought. Thus far the Psalmist had insisted merely on the frailty and brevity of human life; but now he proceeds further and propounds the fearful doctrine, that this sorrowful mortality is not an accident but an infliction, the direct effect of the divine wrath. Whatever instrumental agencies may be employed to kill us, our real destroyer is the anger of our Maker.

8. Thou hast set our iniquities before thee, our secret (sins) in the light of thy countenance. As man's mortality is the effect of God's wrath, so this wrath itself is the effect of sin. And this sin becomes the cause of death. See Gen. ii. 17, and compare Rom. v. 12. The verse before us represents God in the act of shortening man's life, and gives the necessary explanation of what might otherwise have seemed at variance with his infinite benevolence. The Bible, as an eminent interpreter has well said, throws the blame of death entirely on man himself. When God slays man, he puts his sins before him, looks directly at them; not only those which are notorious, but those which are concealed from every eye but that of omniscience. See Jer. xvi. 17. Heb. iv. 14, and compare Ps. xix. 15 (14.) 1 Cor. iv. 4, 5. Another reading in the last clause, and most probably the true one, makes secret or concealed a singular and not a plural form, our secret; but the reference is still to sin. The word translated light does not properly denote the element itself, but that from which it is derived, a luminary, just as we call a candle or a lamp a light. See above, on Ps. lxxiv. 16. The precise sense seems to be, that God holds our sins to the light of his own countenance, and therefore cannot fail to see them.

9. For all our days are gone in thine anger; we spend our years like a thought. The all in the first clause is emphatic. What he says is true of our whole life. Are gone, literally, turned away, as an act preparatory to departure. The word translated anger, though synonymous, is not identical, with either of those used above in v. 7. It occurs, however, in Ps. vii. 7 (6) and according to its derivation properly denotes an outbreak of angry feeling. Spend, not as a mere synonyme of pass, but in the strong sense of consuming, wasting, as in Job. xxxvi. 11 (compare xxi. 13.) The Hebrew verb is the causative of that translated fail in v. 7. The use of years as a parallel to days gives the sentence a climacteric effect. The word translated thought is elsewhere applied to audible sound (Ez. ii. 10. Job. xxxvii. 2), but only as the natural spontaneous expression of the thoughts and feelings, not to others but one's self. See above, on Ps. lxiii. 7 (6) lxxvii. 13 (12.) By some strange misapprehension the Septuagint and Vulgate make it mean a spider, and the English versions have the singular periphrasis, a tale that is told.

10. The days of our years! In them (are contained) seventy years, and if with strength eighty years, and their pride (is) trouble and mischief, for he drives (us) fast and we fly away The parallelism of days and years in the preceding verse suggests their combination here, a combination used by Moses elsewhere in describing the long lives of the patriarchal history. See Gen. xxv. 7. xlvii. 8, 9. The words may here be taken simply as an absolute nominative, (as for) the days of our years, in them etc. See above, on Ps. lxxxix. 3 (2.) But it adds to their significance, as well as to the beauty of the sentence, to explain them as a kind of wondering exclamation, as if such a term scarcely deserved to be computed. In them are seventy years, this is what they comprise or comprehend, it is to this that they amount. The life of Moses was much longer (Deut xxxiv. 7), but even in the history appears to be recorded as a signal exception to the general rule. If with strength, if accompanied with strength, or, as some prefer to construe it, if (the person be endued) with (more than usual) strength. The plural (strengths) may be an idiomatic form of speech, simply equivalent to the singular, or an intensive term denoting extraordinary strength. See above, on Ps. xviii. 51 (50.) Their pride, the best part of our days or years, the part in which we are most confident or most contented

The words translated trouble and mischief are in usage both applied to suffering at the hands or through the fault of others. The common version of the next verb (it is cut off) rests upon a doubtful etymology. In the only other place where the Hebrew verb certainly occurs (Num. xi. 31), it is applied to the driving of the quails by a strong wind over the camp of Israel. It may here agree with God himself, or with a subject undefined, one drives (us), which is tantamount to saying, we are driven. Fast, literally, (in) haste or hastily. And, as a necessary consequence, we fly before the propellent power.

11. Who knows the power of thine anger and, according to thy fear, thy wrath? The separation of the clauses as distinct propositions makes the last unmeaning. The whole is one interrogation, implying strong negation, as if he had said, no one knows the power of thine anger. See above, on Ps. xiv. 4. liii. 5 (4.) The sense is not that no one can, but that no one will know it, as he might and ought. Knows, literally, knowing, i. e. habitually. See above, on Ps. i. 6. The power of thine anger, its degree and the extent to which it operates. According to thy fear, as true piety or reverence for God demands. Thy wrath, the same word that is used in the first clause of v. 9 above.

12. To number our days thus make us know, and we will bring a heart of wisdom. The verb translated make us know is the causative of that in the preceding verse, to which there is an obvious allusion. It is therefore probable that they were meant to govern the same object. 'Who knows the power of thine anger?' 'So make us know (the power of thine anger.)' The first words of the verse before us are then not immediately dependent on the phrase make (us) know, but merely indicate the end for which the knowledge was desired. 'In order that we may number our days, i. e. know and feel how few they are, thus make us know, i. e. give us this knowledge of the connection between God's wrath and our own mortality.' The common version of the last clause (that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom) is forced and ungrammatical, without an arbitrary change of pointing. The only admissible construction of the masoretic text is that first given, which may either mean, as some of the rabbinical interpreters suppose, 'we will bring into ourselves (i. e. acquire) a heart of wisdom,' or, 'we will bring (as an offering to thee) a heart of wisdom,' with allusion to Gen. iv. 3, 4, where the same verb is absolutely used of Cain and Abel's offerings.

13. Return, Jehovah! How long (wilt thou forsake us)?—And repent us to thy servants. To the prayer that the people may understand the causes of God's wrath is now added a prayer for its removal. The loss of God's favour is, as usual, represented as his absence. The aposiopesis in the question (how long?) is like that in Ps. vi. 4 (3.) xiii. 2 (1.) This clause being parenthetical, what follows is connected by the copulative particle with the imperative at the beginning. The meaning of the last clause is, so change thy dealing with thy servants as if thou hadst repented of afflicting them. The same bold form of speech is used by Moses elsewhere. See Ex. xxxii. 12. Deut. xxxii. 36, and compare the imitations in Judg. ii. 18. Jer. xv. 6. Joel ii. 13. Jon. iv. 2. Ps. cxxxv. 14.

14. Satisfy us, in the morning, with thy mercy, and (then) we shall rejoice and be glad through all our days. God's grace is here presented as the food required for the sustenance of his people. Satisfy or sate us, i. e. fill us, abundantly supply us. In the morning, early, speedily, perhaps with an allusion to the night as a common figure for affliction. See above, on Ps. v. 4 (3.) xlvi. 6 (5.) xlix. 15 (14.) lix. 17 (16.) lxxxviii. 14 (13.) The oblique construction of the last clause, that we may rejoice etc., is really involved in the direct one, which is much more pointed and emphatic. In or through all our days, i. e. throughout the remainder of our lives. The English idiom allows the suppression of the particle, as in the common version.

15. Make us glad according to the days thou hast afflicted us the years we have seen evil. According to, literally, as or like. The meaning is, compensate all our sufferings by proportionate enjoyments. The ellipsis of the relative is common in both idioms. The English Bible, by supplying it, enfeebles the expression without making the sense clearer. Days and years, as in v. 9. The plural forms in the Hebrew are unusual and borrowed from Deut. xxxii. 7, a Mosaic feature of the psalm which cannot possibly be reproduced in any version.

16. Let appear unto thy servants thy doing, and thy glory on their sons (or children.) He prays that even to the elder generation there may be vouchsafed a token for good (Ps. lxxxvi. 17), i. e. some assurance of the favours to be actually bestowed upon their children. Thus understood, the use of the two prepositions, to and on, is not unmeaning or fortuitous. God's work or doing is the course of his providential dealings, as in Ps. xcii. 5 (4) below; his glory the manifestation of his divine perfections in external act. See above, on Ps. viii. 6 (5.) xlv. 4 (3.) This was to appear not only to but on the younger race, i. e. in their own experience.

17. And let the beauty of Jehovah our God be upon us, and the work of our hands establish upon us, and the work of our hands, establish thou it. While the glory of Jehovah is expected to be fully revealed only in his dealings with the next generation, he is still besought to grant their fathers the experimental knowledge of his beauty, loveliness, or all that renders him an object of affection. See above, on Ps. xxvii. 4. The work of our hands is a favourite Mosaic phrase for all that we do or undertake, all our affairs and interests. See Deut. xiv. 29. xvi. 15. xxiv. 19. xxviii

12. xxx. 9. To establish or confirm it is to prosper and succeed it, to bring it to a favourable issue. The expression on us, as before, suggests the idea of an influence exerted and a favour granted from above. The yea of the common version is substituted for the idiomatic repetition of the copulative and in the original.

PSALM XCI.

AN amplification of the theme, that God is the dwelling-place and refuge of his people. This and other points of contact with the Prayer of Moses seem to mark it as an imitation of that psalm, and thereby account for its position in the Psalter. The most remarkable peculiarity of form in the psalm before us is the frequent change and alternation of the persons. The only division which can well be made is that into two stanzas or strophes, supposed to be marked by the recurrence in v. 9 to the theme propounded in v. 1.

1. Sitting (or dwelling) in the secret place of the Most High, in the shadow of the Almighty he is lodged. The common version seems to make this an identical proposition, amounting really to this, that he whom God protects is protected by him. To avoid this, some make the whole verse a mere description of the person speaking in the next verse, and as this seems to be forbidden by the use of the first person there, they either make an arbitrary change of pointing (אֲמַר for אֶמַר), or suppose a sudden change of person, as in other parts of this same psalm. Better than either of these constructions is a third, which makes the parallel clauses of this first verse descriptive of an ideal person, with whom the speaker is then tacitly identified. As if he had said, ‘happy the man who dwells, etc.,' and then added, 'such is my condition; I can say, etc.' For the figure of a secret place or covert, see above, on Ps. xxvii. 5. xxxi. 21 (20.) xxxii. 7; for that of a shadow, on Ps. xvii. 8. xxxvi. 8 (7.) lvii. 2 (1.) The divine titles, Highest and Almighty, suggest the reason of this perfect safety. The latter is the patriarchal title mentioned in Ex. vi. 3, where it is combined with (יְהוָה) a more familiar name denoting the same attribute. The last verb is strictly a reflective, and as such means to take up one's lodgings, to domesticate one's self, implying a voluntary choice more clearly than the primitive verb, as used above, in Ps. xxv. 13. xxx. 6 (5.) xlix. 13 (12.)

2. I will say to Jehovah, My refuge and my fortress, my God, I will trust in him. The first verb, while it expresses purpose or determination, includes both a present and potential meaning. I can say, I have reason and a right to say; and I do (habitually) say. In order to avoid another change of person, the common version and some others read of the Lord, which is admissible but needless. See above, on Ps. iii. 3 (2.) Compare the other figures here used to denote divine protection with those in Ps. xviii. 3 (2) lxxi. 7. In the last clause, I will trust in him, there may seem to be another sudden change of person; but these words are really equivalent to a relative construction, in whom I trust, and may therefore be used even in a direct address.

3. For lo, he will free thee from the fowler's snare, from the plague of mischiefs. The confiding soul is now addressed directly in the tone of promise. The supposition of responsive choirs is a gratuitous refinement. The fowler's snare is a figure for insidious and complicated dangers. See above, on Ps. xviii. 6 (5), and below, on Ps. cxxiv. 7, and compare 2 Tim. ii. 26. The parallelism requires plague or pestilence to be taken as a metaphor, no less than snare. Both probably denote dangers arising from the craft of wicked enemies, to which the word translated mis- chiefs is peculiarly appropriate. See above, on Ps. v. 10 (9.) lii. 4, 9 (2, 7.) lvii. 2 (1.)

4. With his pinion he will cover thee, and under his wings thou shalt find shelter; shield and buckler (is) his truth. Compare the figure of an eagle, Deut. xxxii. 11. For the meaning of the first noun, see above, on Ps. lxxviii. 14 (13.) Cover thee, literally, cover (or provide a covering) for thee. Find shelter or take refuge, see above on Ps. ii. 12. The word translated buckler is properly a participle and means surrounding. See above, on Ps. xxxv. 2.

5. Thou shalt not be afraid for the terror by night, for the arrow (that) flies by day. Shalt not fear, i. e. shalt have no reason for alarm. Terror by night, literally, of night, i. e. nightly or nocturnal terror. There is no need of restricting this expression to any particular form of danger or distress, since all are usually aggravated by their occurrence in the night. Should any specific sense be put upon the figure of an arrow, from analogy and usage, it would be that of human enmity. See above, on Ps. lviii. 8 (7.) The Hebrew preposition, in both clauses, properly means from, i. e. arising or proceeding from, occasioned by, in consequence of, something else.

6. For the plague (that) in darkness walks, for the pestilence (that) wastes at noon. Here the words are to be taken in their proper sense, and not as in v. 3, where they are figures for a different kind of danger, or for danger in the general.

7. There shall fall at thy side a thousand, and a myriad at thy right hand; to thee it shall not come nigh. This is equivalent to saying in our idiom, though a thousand fall, etc., which, however, would not be an exact translation, as it substitutes a hypothetical for an affirmative proposition. For the double sense and usage of the word translated myriad see above, on Ps. iii. 7 (6), and compare the cognate form, Ps lxviii. 18 (17.) Myriad represents the original term better than ten thousand, because it is wholly different, in form and etymology, from that translated thousand.

8. Only with thine eyes shalt thou behold, and the recompense of wicked (men) see. The only puts mere sight in opposition to experience or participation. Compare Deut. xxxii. 35, 41. As usual in such cases, it is implied that the destruction of the wicked and deliverance of the righteous will be coincident and simultaneous. See below, on Ps. xcii. 12 (11.)

9. For thou, Jehovah, (art) my refuge. The Most High hast thou made thy home (or habitation.) The construction adopted in the English Bible is a forced one, only assumed in order to avoid the enallage or sudden change of person, which, however, is characteristic of this psalm. Equally needless and objectionable is the supposition of responsive choirs.

10. There shall not happen to thee (any) evil, and a stroke shall not approach into thy tent. The first verb is a causative passive and strictly means shall not be suffered or allowed to happen. Evil, i. e. natural evil, suffering or distress. The word translated stroke is very commonly applied to God's strokes or afflictive judgments. See above, on Ps. xxxviii. 12 (11.) xxxix. 11 (10.) Into thy tent is an expression apparently intended to qualify the promise, which might otherwise have seemed too absolute and inconsistent with the context from which we learn that danger was to draw nigh, even to the righteous, but not so as actually to enter his tent, and take up its abode with him.

11. For his angels he will charge concerning thee, to keep thee in all thy ways. The plural angels shows that there is no allusion to a guardian spirit attending the individual believer, but merely to the angels collectively, as ministering spirits, the instrumental agents of God's providential care over his people. See Heb. i. 14. The promise here given does not extend to dangers rashly incurred or presumptuously sought, and was therefore no justification of the act to which our Lord was tempted by the devil, Matth. iv. 6. That the mere omission of the phrase in all thy ways was a part of the temptation, seems to be a gratuitous refinement, as our Lord himself makes no such charge; as the first words of the sentence would of course suggest the rest; and as ways, in the usage of the Psalms, does not mean ways of duty, but the ways in which a man is led by Providence. Neither the tempter's argument nor our Lord's reply to it would be at all affected by the introduction of the words suppressed.

12. Upon (their) hands shall they bear thee, lest thou strike against the stone thy foot. The dual form, denoting both hands, might be regarded as emphatic and suggestive of peculiar care; but the Hebrew noun has no other plural form in common use. A smooth path and unimpeded walk is a common figure for prosperity and safety. Compare Prov. iii. 23.

13. On lion and adder thou shalt tread; thou shalt trample young lion and dragon. These are commonly supposed to be strong figures for the two kinds of danger from which men need protection, open violence and secret treachery. The last word denotes a serpent, as in Ex. vii. 9. The specific meaning of the parallel term is unimportant. The young lion (not the lion's whelp) is mentioned as peculiarly fierce and greedy. See above, on Ps. xvii. 12. xxxiv. 11. xxxv. 17. From this verse our Lord derived the terms in which he promised protection to his followers, Luke x. 19.

14. For he has set his love upon me, and I will rescue him; I will set him on high because he knows my name. The first verb is a very strong expression for the warmest and most violent attachment, corresponding in part with our idiomatic phrase to fall in love, and followed by a kindred preposition. It seems to be here used to describe God as an object of supreme devotion to the true believer. Rescue him, cause him to escape. Set him on high, i. e. beyond the reach of danger. See above, on Ps. xviii. 3 (2.) .49 (48.) xx. 2 (1.) lix. 2 (1.) lxix. 30 (29.) Knows my name, has already experienced my goodness and seen the evidence of my perfections. See above, on Ps. v. 12 (11.) ix. 11 (10.)

15. He shall call me and I will answer him. With him (am) I in trouble. I will deliver him and honour him. The meaning of the first clause is essentially the same as if he had said, when he calls I will answer, but with much more directness and force in the expression. Calls me to his aid, invokes me, prays to me. Answer him by granting his request, the idea commonly conveyed by the Hebrew verb here used. See above, on Ps. iii. 5 (4.) The futures have their proper sense, as this is a direct and formal promise. I will be with him would have been expressed in the same manner; but I am with him is still stronger, for it describes God as already present for the protection and deliverance of his people. Deliver him, extricate him from his embarrassments and dangers; and lest the promise should be thought to ensure mere safety, it is added, I will honour him, procure for him the respect of others by showing that I favour him myself.

16. (With) length of days will I satisfy him, and will show him my salvation. With the first clause compare Ex. xx. 12 Deut. v. 16. Ps. xxiii. 6. Satisfy or satiate, i. e. abundantly supply and fully gratify his largest wishes. With the last clause compare Ps. l. 23, where we have the same idiomatic construction of the verb to see with the preposition in, meaning to behold with strong emotion, and especially, emotion of a pleasurable kind. For a different application of the same phrase, see above, on Ps. xxxvii. 34. In the last three verses, God is him self the speaker, although not expressly so announced. See above, on Ps. xlvi. 11 (10.) lxxv. 3, 4 (2, 3.) lxxxvii. 4.

PSALM XCII.

1. A Psalm. A Song. For the Sabbath-Day. The second title designates the Psalm as one of praise, in strict conformity to its contents. The immediate subject of the praise is the exhibition of God's power and wisdom in his providential dealings both with the wicked and the righteous. As one main design of the sabbath was to afford an opportunity for the admiring contemplation of God's works or doings, the psalm before us was peculiarly appropriate at such a time, and the third clause of the inscription is evidently correct.

2 (1.) Good (is it) to give thanks unto Jehovah, and to make music to thy name, Most High. The duty about to be performed is here described as not only right but pleasant. For the meaning of the two verbs, see above, on Ps. vii. 18 (17.)

3 (2.) To declare in the morning thy mercy, and thy faithfulness in the nights. The sentence is continued from the preceding verse, the infinitive with which this opens being governed by the phrase it is good. In the morning, taken by itself, implies eagerness and promptness, and with the parallel phrase (in the nights) unremitting diligence and constancy. See above, on Ps. xvi. 7. xlii. 9 (8.) lxxvii. 7 (6.) lxxxviii. 14 (13.) xc. 14 (13.) Faithful- ness in the fulfilment of promises. Faithfulness and mercy are here combined like truth and mercy in Ps. lxxxix. 15 (14.)

4 (3.) On decachord and on lyre, on meditation with a harp. The first word in Hebrew means a decade, a group or set of ten, and then an instrument of ten strings. See above, on Ps. xxxiii. 2. In the last clause, by a bold but intelligible figure, meditation is referred to as an instrument, precisely as the lyre and harp are, the latter being joined with it as a mere accompaniment.

5 (4.) For thou hast gladdened me, Jehovah, with thy work, in the doings of thy hands I will rejoice. This verse introduces the theme or subject of the praise proposed, to wit, the work and doings of the Lord, i. e. his providential dealings. See above, on Ps. xc. 16, 17. The last verb denotes properly the vocal expression of an inward joy.

6 (5.) How great are thy doings, Jehovah, (how) exceedingly deep thy thoughts! Thoughts and doings are correlative expressions, signifying plan and execution. Deep, not mysterious, but vast, immense, and inexhaustible, corresponding to great in the other clause. With this verse, compare Ps. xl. 6 (5.) Isai. lv. 9. Rom. xi. 23.

7 (6.) A man-brute will not know, and a fool will not understand this. The compound term at the beginning means a man who is no better than a brute, i. e. equally irrational. See above, on Ps. xl. 21 (20.) lxxiii. 22, and below, on Ps. xciv. 8. Will not, cannot, or does not know. This, i. e. what has just been said as to the depth of God's providential plans and purposes.

8 (6.) In the springing up of wicked (men) like grass, and (when) all the doers of iniquity bloom, (it is) that they may be de- stroyed forever. The infinitive, as well as the future, indicates the time of action. The literal translation of the last words is, for them to be destroyed until eternity.

9 (8.) And thou (art) Most High to eternity, Jehovah! This brief but pregnant proposition is the centre of the psalm, and at the same time a summary of its contents. The superlative expression Most High is here used to translate a single Hebrew word which strictly means a height or high-place, but here denotes that which holds the highest place in the scale of being. For other applications of the same word, see above, on Ps. vii. 8 (7.) x. 5. xviii. 17 (16.)

10 (9.) For lo, thine enemies, Jehovah—for lo, thine enemies shall perish; dispersed shall be all the doers of iniquity. Jehovah must be the Most High, because his enemies not only yield to him, but perish in his presence. Here, as in Ps. lxxxix. 11, 52 (10, 51), the enemies of God and of his people are identified. The last verb is properly a reflexive, and may be translated, they shall scatter (or disperse) themselves, implying more activity and eagerness than the simple passive, shall be scattered. Compare Job iv. 11.

11 (10.) And thou hast raised, like the unicorn's, my horn; I am anointed with fresh oil. He now contrasts his own experience with that of his enemies and God's. With the figure of the first clause compare Ps. xviii. 3 (2.) lxxv. 5, 6, 11 (4, 5, 10.) lxxxix. 18, 25 (17, 24.) I am anointed or I anoint (my head), the Hebrew verb being elsewhere always active. The figure is borrowed from the ancient custom of anointing the head on festive occasions. See above, on Ps. xxiii. 5. Fresh oil, literally, green, i. e. verdant, a quality properly belonging to the tree being here transferred to its most valuable product.

12 (11.) And my eye has looked upon my enemies ; of those rising up against me, evil-doers, my ears shall hear. The sense is that he sees and hears what is become of them. Their destruction is implied, though not expressed. The word translated enemies occurs only here. According to the most probable etymology it means watchers, liers in wait or ambush. See above, on Ps. xxvii. 11. liv. 7 (5.) lvi. 3 (2.) lix. 11 (10), where a cognate form occurs. My insurgents, or those rising up against me, expresses the accessory idea of rebellion against rightful authority. See above, on Ps. iii. 2 (1.) liv. 5 (3.) lxxxvi. 14. The addition of malefactors, evil-doers, shows that it is not merely as his enemies, but on account of their transgressions against God, that he expects his foes to perish.

13 (12.) A righteous (man) like a palm-tree shall sprout, like a cedar in Lebanon shall grow. Some suppose an allusion to the fact that these trees thrive even in the most unfavourable situations. All that it is necessary to assume, however, is that as trees in general are natural and common emblems of a prosperous existence, so the same idea is conveyed with still more emphasis by the noblest species. The supposition of a reference to the decorations of the temple is gratuitous and far-fetched.

14 (13.) Planted in the house of Jehovah, in the courts of our God they shall bloom (or flourish.) See above, on Ps. lii. 10 (8), where the same image is presented, in a still more specific form, the olive-tree being there particularly mentioned.

15 (14.) Still shall they bear fruit in old age ; fat and green shall they be. In old age, literally, in grey or hoary hair. Of the epithets in the last clause one properly denotes an animal, the other a vegetable quality. The essential idea is that of the foregoing verse carried out into detail.

16 (15.) To declare that Jehovah is just—my Rock—and no unrighteousness in Him. See above, on Ps. xviii. 3 (2), and compare Deut. xxxii. 4. The epithet just denotes the essential rectitude of God, including his veracity and faithfulness to his engagements. See above, on Ps. xxv. 8. My Rock may be simply in apposition with Jehovah, Jehovah my Rock is just, or a second predicate, Jehovah is just (and) my Rock.

PSALM XCIII.

THE theme of this psalm is God's superiority to all opposing powers and the consequent safety of his church and people. There are strong reasons for believing that it was designed, with the one before it, to form a pair or double psalm. Besides those drawn from the number of verses and of the divine names, this whole psalm may be described as an amplification of the laconic dictum in Ps. xcii. 9 (8.) There is nothing to determine its precise date; but there seem to be expressions in it, which imply the existence of imminent danger to the theocracy from some great hostile power.

1 Jehovah reigns; (with) majesty he clothes himself; Jehovah clothes himself with strength (and) girds himself; also established is the world, it shall not be moved. The first clause does not simply affirm Jehovah's sovereignty as a general truth, but announces the fact that he has just become king or begun to reign, i. e. manifested himself anew in his regal character. The same form of the verb is used in reference to the accession of earthly monarchs, 2 Sam. xv. 10. 1 Kings i. 11, 13. 2 Kings ix. 13. The word translated majesty is the one applied in Ps. lxxxix. 11 (10) to the swelling of the sea. Its use here may be intended to suggest the superiority of God to the powers of this world. Clothes himself with, literally, puts on, wears. The other verb is reflexive in form. The also introduces the consequence of this exaltation. See below, Ps. xcvi. 10. xcvii. 1. xcix. 1, and compare Isai xxiv. 23. Obad. 21. Zech. xiv. 9. Rev. xi. 17. xix. 6.

2. Fixed (is) thy throne of old; from eternity (art) thou. Fixed, firmly established, permanently settled. Compare 2 Sam. vii. 13, 16. 1 Kings ii. 45. Of old, literally, from then, as in the margin of the English Bible. Compare Prov. viii. 22. Isai. xlvi. 3. v. 7. With the last clause compare Ps. xc. 2, and with the whole verse Rev. i. 17.

3. The floods have raised, Jehovah, the floods have raised their voice; the floods will raise their crash, or crashing noise. The last Hebrew word occurs only here, but its etymology is obvious and perfectly analogous to that of waves or breakers in the next verse. The idea here conveyed is that of the noise made by the dashing of waves against each other or upon the shore. The preterite and future forms include the present, but suggest the additional idea of what has been heretofore and may be expected to continue hereafter. The emphatic repetition of the verb is like that in v. 1, and reappears in this whole series (Ps. xci—c) as a characteristic feature.

4. More than the voices of waters—many—mighty—sea-billows—mighty in the high-place (is) Jehovah. More than, literally, from, away from, the particle by which comparison is commonly expressed in Hebrew. The common version of the next clause, mighty waves of the sea, is scarcely grammatical, as the adjective, according to analogy and usage, cannot agree with the noun following, but must be in apposition with the adjective before it and agree with the same object. The word translated mighty corresponds, in part, to our epithets, sublime and grand. See above, on Ps. viii. 1. Sea-billows, literally, breakers of the sea. Compare Ps. xlii. 8 (7.) lxxxviii. 8 (7.) Jon. ii. 4 (3.) That the comparison was meant to be between the noise of the sea and that of thunder considered as the voice of God, is an admissible but not a necessary supposition. See above, on Ps. xxix. 5.

5. Thy testimonies are sure, very (sure) ; to thy house suits (or is becoming) holiness, Jehovah, unto length of days. The testimonies of God are all the provisions of his Law, as in Ps. xix. 8(7.) xxv. 10, but with special reference, in this as in several other cases, to its promises. See above, on Ps. lx. 1. lxxx. 1. The verb here used is a passive, meaning strictly to be founded, settled, or secured. From this clause is borrowed the form of expression in Rev. xix. 9. xxi. 5. xxii. 6. The intensive adverb very or exceedingly has the same effect as when in English we use an epithet and add extremely so or very much so. The verb translated suits (or is becoming) is the root of the adjective used in Ps xxxiii. 1. Compare my note on Isai. lii. 7. Holiness is by some understood to mean sacredness, immunity from profanation, and of course from violent intrusion. See above, on Ps. lxxiv. 3. The house of God is here referred to, as the place where he dwelt with his people, and they with him. To length of days, see Ps. xxxiii. 6.

P S A L M X C I V .

THIS psalm may be divided into two parts, in the first of which the ancient church complains of Jehovah's absence and apparent desertion, and of the consequent triumph of his enemies, vs. 1—11, while in the second she asks and confidently looks for his return and their destruction, vs. 12—23. There is nothing to determine the precise date of the composition, much less to restrict it to any particular historical occasion. Though some things in it seem peculiarly appropriate to the state of Judah on the eve of the Babylonish conquest, it is so constructed as to be a vehicle of pious feeling to the church in various emergencies.

1. God of revenges, Jehovah, God of revenges, shine forth! Some interpreters, following the ancient versions, make the last Hebrew word a finite verb, as it certainly is in Deut. xxxiii. 2. Ps. 1. 2. lxxx. 2 (1.) The meaning then is, he has shined or shines, and the psalm opens with a confident anticipation of God's intervention, as in Ps. xciii. 1. xvii. 1. xcix. 1. In this case, however, the tone of confidence does not reappear until v. 12, and the imperatives in v. 2 make the similar construction of the verb in this case much more natural, though less agreeable to usage, than the other. The terms of this verse are borrowed from Deut. xxxii. 35. xxxiii. 2. See above, on Ps. 1. 2. The plural form (revenges) denotes fulness and variety. See above, on Ps. xviii. 51 (50.) This expression, with the two divine names (El and Jehovah) recognize God as almighty, eternal, self-existent, bound by covenant to his people, and alone entitled to take vengeance.

2. Raise thyself, Judge of the Earth, return a recompense upon the proud. The first verb is equivalent in meaning to the more familiar term arise, i. e. arouse thyself from inactivity, address thyself to action. See above, on Ps. iii. 8 (7.) The specific sense, which some interpreters assume, 'ascend the judgment-seat,' is not expressed by this verb, but suggested by the context. The word translated recompense strictly means the treatment of one person by another, to return which is to retaliate or recompense it. See above, on Ps. vii. 5 (4), and compare Ps. lxxix. 12. The use of the particle upon implies the inequality of the parties or the superiority of the avenger, from whom the recompense, as it were, comes down upon the guilty.

3. How long shall wicked (men), Jehovah, how long shall wicked (men) triumph? The question, as usual in such cases, implies that they have already triumphed long enough or too long, and therefore really involves a prayer that they may triumph no longer. The interruption and resumption of the sentence is like that in v. 1, and in Ps. xcii. 9 (8.) xciii. 1, 3.

4. (How long) shall they pour forth, utter insolence, talk of themselves—all the workers of iniquity? This is usually taken as an independent proposition, they pour forth, etc. But it seems a more natural construction to continue the interrogation from the other sentence. Pour forth is a figure for excessive and unadvised speech. See above, on Ps. lix. 8 (7), and compare Ps. xix. 3 (2.) Utter in words, speak, talk. Insolence, arrogance, as in Ps. lxxv. 6 (5.) The last verb is a reflexive form of the verb (אמר) to say, occurring only here. According to the general analogy of those forms, it may mean to talk to one's self, or of one's self, or with each other. The second agrees best with what is said just before of their insolent or arrogant discourse.

5. Thy people, Jehovah, they grind (or crush), and thy inheritance they humble (or afflict.) The first verb means to bruise, break in pieces, or reduce to powder. The people and heritage of God are synonymous expressions, the people being so called because they belonged to him, and were possessed by him, from generation to generation. The terms of this verse seem to point out foreign persecutors or oppressors as the subject of complaint.

6. Widow and stranger they kill, and orphans they murder. The strongest description of injustice and violence is given by saying, that they not only wrong but murder the very classes of sufferers, who in the Law are constantly exhibited as objects of compassion. See Ex. xxii. 20—23 (21—24.) Deut. x. 18.

7. And they say, Jah will not see, and the God of Jacob will not attend. The same impious presumption is expressed in Ps. x. 11, 13. xiv. 1. lix. 8 (7.) The divine names are, as usual, significant. That the self-existent and eternal God should not see, is a palpable absurdity; and scarcely less so, that the God of Israel should suffer his own people to be slaughtered without even observing it. The last verb means to mark, note, notice.

8. Attend ye brutish among the people; and ye fools, when will ye act wisely? See above, on Ps. lxxiii. 22. xcii. 7 (6.) The first verb is the same with that at the end of the preceding verse. It is stronger than the English word attend, implying in all cases, an intelligent attention, so that it may be rendered, as it is by many, understand. The word translated brutish is a participle, denoting habitual conduct or a permanent condition. The question in the last clause is a virtual exhortation to begin at once. The verb in this clause has its usual active meaning. See above on Ps. ii. 10. xiv. 2. xli. 2 (1.) In (or among) the people no doubt means in Israel itself, as in Judg. v. 9, where the form of expression is the same.

9. Shall the planter of the ear—shall he not hear? Or the former of the eye, shall he not see? The words translated planter and former are active participles, and denote something continually going on. The figure of planting suggests the two ideas of formation and insertion. By a similar figure we might speak in English of implanting the faculty or sense of hearing. The act denoted by the parallel Hebrew word is that of shaping, moulding. The participle here used, when employed as a noun, means a potter. See above, Ps. ii. 9. The peculiar form of the translation of the first clause is intended to represent that of the original, in which the interrogative but not the negative particle is repeated. This may be reckoned as another instance of the reduplicated forms by which this series of psalms is characterized.

10. Shall the reprover of nations—shall he not chastise—he that teaches mankind knowledge? The antithesis is not between Israel and the Gentiles, but between whole nations or all mankind and individual offenders. Reprover, the one reproving or accustomed to reprove, warn, or admonish. See above, on Ps. ii. 10. xvi. 7. The parallel term is nearly synonymous and means to correct by word or deed. The structure of the first clause is the same as in the verse preceding. In the last clause, by an aposiopesis not uncommon in the Hebrew idiom, the parallelism is left to be completed by the reader. The full sense seems to be, is he who teaches all mankind not competent to teach men individually? He that teaches, literally, the (one) teaching.

11. Jehovah knows the thoughts of mankind, that they (are) vanity. The verbal form is still that of a participle, knowing, habitually knowing, what they are and what they deserve. Such knowledge carries with it, as a necessary consequence, condemnation and punishment. See above, on Ps. i. 6. Thoughts, purposes, designs. See above, on Ps. xl. 5 (4.) Instead of that, some give the particle its usual sense of for, because, without a material change of meaning. The pronoun they seems in English to relate necessarily to thoughts; but in Hebrew the more natural antecedent is man as a generic or collective term, because the pronoun is masculine and thoughts feminine; because the same thing is predicated, in the same form, of men themselves, Ps. xxxix. 6, 12 (5, 11); and because this idea is better suited to the context here.

12. Happy the man whom thou warnest, Jah, and from thy law teachest him. This is the turning point, at which the tone of the composition becomes more encouraging. The word for man is the one implying strength, and here suggesting the idea, that he is truly fortunate whose strength arises from the divine counsel and control. Warnest and wilt warn, or admonish, the same verb that occurs in the first clause of v. 10. From thy law may be partitively understood, as meaning something of thy law, a part or portion of it. But it more probably means out of, from, thy law, as the source of consolation and instruction. See above, on Ps. xxii. 26 (25.)

13. To give him rest from days of evil, until a pit be digged for the wicked. Compare Ps. xlix. 6 (5.) cxii. 8. The first verb is a causative, to make him rest. From days of evil does not mean merely after them, but so as to escape them. The last clause ensures the safety of the righteous even during the prosperity and triumph of the wicked.

14. For Jehovah will not forsake his people, and his inheritance he will not leave. The reason why they are happy who confide in and obey the divine instructions is that God can never utterly forsake those who thus trust him, although he may leave them for a time when they leave him. See Deut. xxxii. 15. Judg. vi. 13. Isai. ii. 6.

15. For unto righteousness shall judgment turn, and after it (shall go) all the upright in heart. The apparent disturbance of the divine administration is to cease, and justice to return to its accustomed channels. In the last clause the righteous are described as following in its train or attending its triumphal march.

16. Who will arise for me with evil-doers? Who will stand up for me with workers of iniquity? Arise, address himself to action. See above, on Ps. iii. 8 (7.) For me, for my support in my defence. With, in conflict or contention with. Stand up, take a stand, assume a position. See above, on Ps. ii. 2. Evil-doers, as in Ps. xcii. 12 (11.) Workers of iniquity, as in v. 4 above. The interrogation in this verse prepares the way for the expression of confidence in that which follows.

17. Unless Jehovah (were) a help for me, soon would my soul inhabit silence. The phrase a help for me occurs above, Ps. lxiii. 8 (7), and a similar one, Ps. xlv. 27 (26.) For the meaning of the phrase translated soon, see above, on Ps. ii. 12. lxxxi. 15 (14.) To dwell in (or inhabit) silence is to be constantly surrounded by the silence of the grave or of death. See above, Ps. xxxi. 18 (17), and below, Ps. cxv. 17.

18. If I say, My foot slips, thy mercy, oh Jehovah, holds me up. If at any time my hope of safety from the Lord's protection yields to fear, his grace sustains and reinvigorates it. The preterites in the Hebrew of the first clause imply that such lapses or temptations have occurred in his experience, when his foot seemed to have swerved or slipped already; while the future at the close represents the act of sustentation as one which he expects to be continued or renewed hereafter.

19. In the multitude of my cares within me, thy comforts cheer my soul. The second noun, which is of rare occurrence, does not mean thoughts in general, but uneasy, anxious thoughts, solitudes, or cares. The addition of within me renders still more prominent the idea that it was not mere external troubles that disturbed his peace. Thy comforts, the consolations of thy word. See above, on v. 13. Cheer or shall cheer, gladden, or exhilarate My soul not only completes the parallelism, but suggests the idea of a cordial genuine exhilaration. See above, on Ps. iii. 3 (2.)

20. Shall the throne of iniquity have fellowship with thee, which frameth mischief by a law. This, which is the version in the English Bible, yields a good sense, and the one preferred by some of the best interpreters. Others explain the last clause, framing mischief against law. In either case, framing means contriving, plotting. The first verb in Hebrew is supposed by some to be a passive form, shall it be associated or allied (with) thee, the connective particle being omitted by a common poetic license, for another instance of which see above, Ps. v. 5 (4.) Others explain it as an active verb corresponding with the dubious English verb to fellowship a person. Iniquity, or more exactly, crimes. See above, on Ps. v. 10 (9.) xxxviii. 13 (12.) lii. 4, 9 (2, 7.) lv. 12 (11.) lvii. 2 (1.) xci. 3. Both this word and its parallel translated mischief are applied in usage to the sufferings brought upon one person by the misconduct of another. With respect to the second term (לִמְדָה), see above, on Ps. vii. 17 (16.)

21. They crowd upon the soul of the righteous, and innocent blood they condemn. The first verb means to rush in crowds or troops, and may therefore be expressed in English by the verbs, to crowd, to troop. Condemn, literally, make guilty, i. e. recognize and treat as such. The futures, as usual, suggest the probable continuance of the evil in question.

22. And (yet) Jehovah has been to me for a high-place, and my God for the rock of my refuge. Our idiom would require but at the beginning of this sentence. The verb to be followed by for, is sometimes used in Hebrew to express the meaning of our verb become, which may here be considered as at least included. A high-place, beyond the reach of danger. My rock of refuge, the rock where I take refuge from my enemies. See above, on Ps. ix. 10 (9.) xviii. 3 (2.) xlvi. 8, 12 (7, 11.) xlviii. 4 (3.) lix. 10, 18 (9, 17.)

23. And he returns upon them their iniquity, and in their wickedness he will destroy them, (yes) destroy them will Jehovah our God. The first verb denotes retaliation or requital. The preposition upon suggests the idea of infliction by a superior power. Iniquity expresses their misconduct towards others, wickedness the general depravity which prompted it. In their wickedness, i. e. in the midst of it, and by implication on account of it. The verb destroy is the one used in Ps. liv. 7 (5.) lxix. 5 (4.) ci. 5. The repetition of the last verb with its object is like that in Ps. xc. 17. Compare Ps. xcii. 8 (7.) xciii. 4. xciv. 1. The force of this emphatic repetition may be partially secured in English by a particle of affirmation, yea or yes.

P S A L M X C V .

THIS psalm contains, first, an exhortation from the Psalmist to praise God as the creator and the sovereign of the earth, vs. 1—8, and then, a warning from God himself to his people not to imitate the obstinate unbelief of their fathers in the wilderness, vs. 9—11. The psalm is quoted in the New Testament (Heb. iv. 7) as what God said in David, which may either mean the Book of Psalms, so called from its chief author, or this particular psalm, as actually written by him. The latter supposition, although not necessary, is entirely admissible, because, however suitable the psalm may seem to particular junctures long posterior to David, the very generality of its expressions makes it probable that it was not composed in the midst of the events, but long beforehand.

1. Come, let us sing unto Jehovah, let us shout unto the rock of our salvation. The first verb properly means go, but is constantly used like come in other languages, as a formula of invitation, in summoning others to participate in some act of the speaker. The two verbs in this verse are those commonly applied to the vocal expression of joy and triumph. The rock of our salvation, the strong ground of our confidence, the basis upon which our hope of safety rests. See above, on Ps. xviii. 3 (2), and compare Ps lxii. 8 (7.) xcii. 16 (15.) xciv. 22.

2. Let us come before his face with thanksgiving, and in songs let us shout unto him. The first verb is here used in its primary and proper sense. See above, on Ps. xvii. 13. That of surprising, or taking by surprise, upon which some interpreters insist, is neither intelligible in itself, nor suited to the context, nor justified by usage. To shout in songs is to sing aloud and with a voice of triumph.

3. For a great God (is) Jehovah, and a great King above all gods. This is not inconsistent with the doctrine elsewhere taught, that other gods have no real existence. See below, Ps. xevi. 4, 5, where both truths are asserted together. The very name of God used in the first clause is expressive of omnipotence.

4. In whose hand are the depths of the earth and the strength of the hills (belongs) to him. God's possession of the whole earth is so asserted as to leave no room for other gods. The word translated depths means, according to its etymology, places to be searched into, i. e. requiring search to find them, inmost recesses. The word translated strength is plural in Hebrew, and seems properly to mean fatiguing exertions, from which some derive the idea of strength, others that of extreme height, which can only be reached by exhausting effort.

5. To whom (belongs) the sea, and he made it, and the dry land his hands did form. The land and water are here put together, as the depths and heights are in v. 4, to describe the earth in its whole extent as subject to Jehovah, by virtue of his right as its creator.

6. Come, let us bow down and bend, let us kneel before Jehovah our Maker. The come at the beginning of this verse is not a mere particle of exhortation, as in v. 1, but an invitation to God's presence. The Hebrew verb is one that strictly means to come, and sometimes to enter. See above, on Ps. lxxi. 16. This verse requires the external indication of devout emotion, and not the mere internal feeling, although the latter is the most essential, as appears from what follows.

7. For He (is) our God, and we (are) the people of his pasture, and the sheep of his hand, to-day, if to his voice ye will hearken. The people of his pasture are those fed and nurtured by him. The sheep of his hand are those led and guarded by him. See above, on Ps. xxiii. 3, 4. lxxiv. 1. lxxx. 13 (12.) We not only have been so, but are so now, to-day, provided we obey him. The last clause contains the condition of the first, precisely as in Ps. lxxxi. 9 (8.) In both cases this construction is more natural and satisfactory than either of the others among which interpreters have been divided; some making if an optative particle, 'if ye would only hear!'—some supplying an apodosis, as in Ex. xxiii. 21, 22, to which there seems to be an obvious allusion;—some continuing the sentence into the next verse, which is forbidden by the change of person there. This last construction is adopted in the Septuagint, as quoted in Heb. iii. 9; but this decides nothing as to the Hebrew syntax. To hear (or hearken to) God's voice is a common Hebrew phrase for obeying his commands.

8. Harden not your heart like Meribah, like the day of Massah in the wilderness. Be not wilfully and obstinately insensible. Your heart, in the singular number, because the people are addressed as an ideal person. Like Meribah, i. e. as your fathers did at Meribah. Like the day of Massah, as they did at that period of your national history associated with the name of Massah. The reference is to Ex. xvii. 7. The incident there recorded is here specified, for the sake of the significant names given to the place, Meribah (strife) and Massah (temptation.) God himself is here abruptly introduced as speaking. See above, on Ps. xlvi. 11 (10.) lxxv. 3, 4 (2, 3.) lxxxvii. 4. xci. 14.

9 When (or where) your fathers tempted me; they proved me

(and) also saw my work. The first word in Hebrew is the relative pronoun, which for in which, as in Ps. lxxxiv. 4 (3.) This may either mean in which place (where), or at which time (when), more probably the former, as the preceding verse is full of local nouns. Tempted me, see above, on Ps. lxxviii. 18, 41. Proved me, put me to the proof of my existence, presence, and power, by requiring me to work, i. e. to act in an extraordinary manner. And this desire, unreasonable as it was, I gratified. They not only demanded but they likewise (וַיִּרְאוּ) saw my work, i. e. what I could do. Some restrict these last words to the previous displays of God's almighty power, especially the plagues of Egypt. 'They proved me, or put me to the proof, although they had seen my work.' But neither the sense thus put upon the likewise, nor the pluperfect meaning of the verb, should be assumed without a greater necessity than here exists.

10. Forty years I am vexed with a (wicked) generation, and say, A people of wanderers in heart (are) they, and they do not know my ways. The first verb strictly means to be sick of, or disgusted with, a thing or person. The future form expresses more distinctly the idea of protracted trial and annoyance. A generation, or contemporary race, as distinguished from mere individuals. This expression is the more appropriate because the threatening was fulfilled, with scarcely an exception, in the whole generation that came out of Egypt. The qualifying epithet supplied in the translation is derived from Deut. 1. 35 (compare Deut. ii. 14.) I say or said, i. e. I had occasion or good cause to say, I could have said with truth, or I was compelled to say. The next clause contains an allusion to their twofold wandering or error. They were not only wanderers in body but in heart, i. e. they erred from the path of duty, truth, and safety. This allusion seems to be continued in the last clause. They were not more bewildered in the mazes of the trackless waste, than ignorant of God's ways, i. e. of the meaning and design of his providential dealings with them. Compare Deut. xxix. 3.

11. Unto whom I swear in my wrath, If they shall come into my rest (or resting-place.) Here again the first word is a relative pronoun, and may either be a dative, as in the common version of the first clause above given; or an adverb of time or place (when or where) as in v. 9 above; or a conjunction (so that) as the latest interpreters prefer. The conditional clause, with which the sentence closes, is the strongest form of negation, being that employed in the most solemn oaths. See above, on Ps. lxxxix. 36 (35.) It is here equivalent to saying, they shall not come, etc. The form of speech is that actually used in the original threatening, as recorded by Moses, Num. xiv. 23, 30. Deut. i. 35. The word for rest is not an abstract but a local term as indicated by its form. It is here applied to the Promised Land, as in Deut. xii. 9. There is something unusual and abrupt in the conclusion of this psalm, without any cheering prospect to relieve the threatening. This may be best explained by assuming, that it was not meant to stand alone, but to form one of a series

PSALM XCVI.

A JOYOUS celebration of the universal spread of the true religion and conversion of the Gentiles. The structure of the psalm is perfectly simple, and all attempts at artificial subdivision and arrangement are either wholly arbitrary or founded upon dubious hypotheses. The marked resemblance of the diction to that of Isaiah in his later prophecies, has been thought to fix the date of the composition as posterior to that Prophet. This seems indeed to be forbidden by the fact that in 1 Chr. xvi, as commonly interpreted, this psalm, with portions of others, is said to have been sung at the dedication of the tabernacle on Mount Zion in the time of David. But according to Hengstenberg, the true sense of that passage is, that David instituted the musical service of the sanctuary, of which samples are then given, taken not from the most ancient psalms, but from those most familiar to the people when the history was written. See below, the prefatory note to Ps. cv and cvi. The psalm before us seems to form a pair or double psalm with that preceding, the Jews and Gentiles being then successively addressed, as in Isai. ii. 3—5, but in an inverted order.

1. Sing unto Jehovah a new song ; sing unto Jehovah all the earth. A new song implies fresh occasion to praise God, not for the mere repetition of his former favours, but for some new dispensation of his grace. See above, on Ps. xxxiii. 3. xl. 3 (2.) The one here meant is the extension of his favour to the nations, who are therefore summoned in the last clause to celebrate his praise themselves. Compare Isai. xlii. 10. Rev. v. 9, 10.

2. Sing unto Jehovah, bless his name, proclaim from day to day his salvation. To bless his name is to praise him for the manifestation of his attributes. The verb translated proclaim is constantly applied to joyful tidings. See above, on Ps. xl. 10 (9.) lxxviii. 12 (11), and compare Isai. lx. 9. lii. 7. lx. 6. The phrase from day to day implies that the occasion of the praise required is not a transient one but permanent and perpetual. His salvation, that which he has wrought, provided, and revealed, not for the Jews only but for the Gentiles also. With this and the preceding verse compare 1 Chr. xvi. 23.

3. Recount among the nations his glory, among all the peoples his wonders. The use of glory, to denote the special manifestation of God's attributes, is a characteristic feature of Isaiah's later prophecies. To preclude all doubt as to the extent of the invitation, the ambiguous expression all the earth, in v. 1, is here explained to mean the nations, and then still more absolutely all the peoples. The only variation of the parallel passage (1 Chr. xvi. 24) is the insertion of the objective particle (אֵל) in the first clause.

4. For great (is) Jehovah and to be praised exceedingly ; to be feared (is) He above all Gods. He is not a mere local deity, as the heathen were disposed to imagine, even in reference to their own divinities. With this verse compare Ps. xlvii. 3 (2.) xlviii. 2 (1.) lxxvii. 14 (13.) lxxxvi. 8. xc. 3. xcii. 8. xcix. 2.

5. For all the gods of the nations are nothings, and Jehovah the heavens did make. Nothings, nonentities, a favourite description of idols in Isaiah's later prophecies. See e. g. Isai. xli. 24, and compare Lev. xix. 4. xxvi. 1. 1 Cor. viii. 4—6. x. 19. A less probable etymology of the Hebrew word makes it a diminutive of (אֱל) El, analogous to godlings as an expression of contempt. The contrast intended is extreme and absolute. He called the world into existence ; they do not even exist themselves. See above, Ps. xc. 4.

6. Honour and majesty 'are) before him, strength and beauty in his holy-place. The first combination occurs above, Ps. xlv. 4 (3.) Before him, as his constant attendants or forerunners. Beauty, all that is lovely and admirable. See above, on Ps. lxxi. 8. His holy place, his earthly residence, regarded as a radiating centre even to the Gentiles ; or the place where God reveals himself, whatever it may be.

7. Give to Jehovah, ye families of nations, give to Jehovah glory and strength. Compare Ps. xxix. 1. Here, as there, to give is to ascribe or recognize as belonging to him. The expression families of nations is Mosaic. See Gen. xii. 3. The parallel passage (1 Chr. xvi. 27) has, strength and joy (are) in his place.

8. Give unto Jehovah the glory of his name; take an offering and come to his courts. With the first clause compare Ps. xxix. 2. The verb translated take includes the ideas of taking up and carrying. See above, on Ps. lxviii. 30 (29.) lxxii. 10. lxxvi. 12, and compare 2 Sam. viii. 2. The word offering is the one used to denote the bloodless or vegetable oblation of the Mosaic ritual. His courts, see above, on Ps. lxv. 5 (4.) lxxxiv. 3 (2.) xcii. 14 (13.) The parallel passage (1 Chr. xvi. 29) has before him.

9. Bow down to Jehovah in beauty of holiness; tremble before him, all the earth! The first verb denotes the act of bowing to the ground, as practised in the East. For the meaning of the next phrase, beauty of holiness, see above, on Ps. xxix. 2, from which place it is borrowed here. The last clause enjoins the reverential awe due to the exhibition of the divine majesty. Compare Ps. ii. 11. The plural form of the verb (tremble ye) shows that the earth is put for its inhabitants. Before him, literally, from his face. The parallel passage (1 Chr. xvi. 30) has a double preposition, a Hebrew idiom which cannot be reproduced in English, and which does not in the least affect the sense. We also find there added to the verse before us the middle clause or member of the next verse. •

10. Say ye among the nations, Jehovah reigns; likewise fixed is the world, it shall not be moved; He will judge the peoples in rectitude. The object of address can only be the nations themselves, as in the foregoing context. They are therefore summoned to announce the joyful news to one another. Jehovah reigns, has begun to reign, i. e. visibly. See above, on Ps. xciii. 1, and compare Isai. xxiv. 23. lii. 7. As in Ps. xciii. 1, the conservation of the world is ascribed to God's power, so here to his justice. Compare Ps. lxxv 4 (3.) He will judge the nations: see above, on Ps. vii. 9 (8.) lxxii. 2, 4, and compare Isai. xi. 4. In equities, see above, on Ps. lxxv. 3 (2.) It may here mean impartiality, without distinction between Jew and Gentile. This last clause is omitted in the parallel passage (1 Chr xvi. 31) which also has instead of say ye, they shall say, and joins it to what is here the next verse.

11. Let the heavens rejoice and the earth exult; let the sea roar and its fulness. The optative form of the second verb determines the meaning of the other futures, which, however, really include a prediction or, what here amounts to the same thing, a confident anticipation. Its fulness, that which fills it, its contents. This verse does not necessarily imply a participation of inferior creatures in God's favour to his people (Rom. viii. 21), but may be understood as a strong poetical description of events so joyous that even the inanimate creation breaks forth into singing. Compare Isai. xlv. 23. lv. 12. The verb translated roar is a cognate form of that which means to thunder, Ps. xxix. 3.

12. Let the field exult and all that (is) in it; then shall sing for joy all the trees of the wood (or forest.) The strict sense of the future, which was latent in the preceding verse, here, by a beautiful transition, reasserts itself. See below, on Ps. cxxvi. 2, and compare Isai. xxxv. 5, 6. The field is the cultivated and productive portion of the earth. All that is in it, with particular reference to its productions. Sing for joy is the translation of a single verb in Hebrew. See above, on Ps. xcvi. 1. The parallel passage (1 Chr. xvi. 32, 33) has precisely the same sense, but with two slight variations in the words, a less familiar form being substituted in one case, and a more familiar form in the other

13. Before Jehovah, for he cometh, for he cometh to judge the earth; he shall judge the world in righteousness, and nations in his truth (or faithfulness.) The rejoicing described in the preceding verse is to take place in the presence (literally, to the face) of God when he assumes his universal sovereignty, the judicial function of which is here made prominent, in order to suggest the moral perfection of his reign. In righteousness, not merely in a righteous manner, but in the exercise of his inherent and essential justice. The use of the word people, in the common version of the last clause, obscures the sense, by seeming to apply the verse to Israel, whereas it is expressly applied in the original to the nations generally. Even the truth or faithfulness of God, which commonly denotes his veracity in fulfilling his promises to the chosen people, has here a wider sense, as opposed to the dishonesty or partiality of human judges. In the parallel passage (1 Chron. xvi. 33) the emphatic repetition in the first clause, and the whole of the last clause, are omitted, perhaps because so striking and sonorous a conclusion would not have been appropriate, when another psalm was to be added.

PSALM XC VII.

ANOTHER exhibition of Jehovah's universal sovereignty, in which his judicial functions are again made prominent, but with special reference to the condemnation and destruction of the unbelieving nations. The structure of the psalm is remarkably like that of the second, consisting of four stanzas of three verses each. The first describes the Lord's appearing as the Judge of the Nations, vs. 1—3. The second, its effects upon inanimate creation, vs 4—6. The third, its effects upon idolaters and Israel respectively vs. 7—9. The fourth applies it as a present warning and encouragement to true believers, vs. 10—12. The characteristic feature of the psalm is its frequent citation of older scriptures, all anterior to the Babylonish exile, from which Hengstenberg infers, not only the date of this composition, but the fact that all the sacred writings of the ancient Hebrews are now extant in the Bible.

PSALM XCVII.

1. Jehovah reigneth, let the earth exult ; glad be the many islands ! For the meaning of the first clause, see above, on Ps. xciii. 1. xvi. 10 ; for that of the second, on Ps. xvi. 11. The manifestation of the divine royalty is often represented as a cause for universal joy, even when attended by direct advantage only to the chosen people, and by fearful judgments to mankind at large. See above, on Ps. xviii. 50 (49.) xlvii. 2 (1), and compare Deut. xxxii. 43. The last clause bears a strong resemblance to Isai. xlii. 10, 12, the use of the word isles in both, to designate the Gentiles, being founded upon Gen. x. 5. See also Ps. lxxii. 10. The many islands, see above, on Ps. lxxxix. 51 (50.)

2. Vapour and gloom (are) round him ; righteousness and judgment (are) the place of his throne. The images and terms in the first clause are borrowed from Deut. v. 22. Compare Ex. xix. 16, 18, and see above, on Ps. xviii. 10, 12 (9, 11.) With the last clause compare Ps. lxxxix. 15 (14.) Righteousness and judgment seem to be here related as the attribute and act. The word translated place has, from its very derivation, the specific sense of a permanent or fixed place, and especially a dwelling-place. Compare 1 Kings viii. 13. The figures in the first clause are expressive of concealment or mystery, but only as a source of solemn awe, as in the great theophany on Sinai.

3. Fire before him goes, and burns up around (him) his feet With the first clause compare Ps. l. 3 ; with the last, Isai xlii. 25. See also Ps. lxxxiii. 15 (14.) The future form is used because the verb describes not what the wrath of God is doing or has actually done, but what it will do when provoked by obstinate resistance.

4. His lightnings made the world shine ; (then) saw and trembled the earth. Compare Ps. lxxvii. 17, 19 (16, 18.) Here begins the second stanza, in which, as in most cases of the same sort, inanimate creation is described as sharing in the powerful effects of the divine epiphany. See above, on Ps. xviii. 8 (7.) xevi. 11, 12, and compare Judg. v. 4. Nah. i. 5. Hab. iii. 6. Isai. lxiv. 1.

5. Mountains like wax are melted from before Jehovah, from before the Lord of all the earth. Compare Mic. i. 4. iv. 13. As in all such cases, while mountains are mentioned as the salient points of the earth, they suggest, at the same time, the idea of great states and kingdoms, of which they are a standing symbol. See above, on Ps. xxx. 8 (7.) xlvi. 3 (2.)

6. The heavens declare his righteousness, and all the nations see his glory. With the first clause compare Ps. l. 6, and with the last Isai. xl. 5. lxvi. 18. See also Isai. xxxv. 2. lix. 19. The manifestation of Jehovah's glory to the Gentiles is a favourite conception of Isaiah, and particularly frequent in his later prophecies.

7. Shamed shall be all serving a graven image and boasting themselves of idols. Bow down to him, all ye gods! The first word means not merely ashamed, but disappointed, defeated, and confounded. All serving or all servers (i. e. worshippers) of a graven image. Boasting themselves, exulting in the knowledge and possession and imagined favour of material images. Idols, nothings or nonentities, as in Ps. xevi. 5. The use of this word shows that in the following clause the false gods are invested with existence only to be treated with the more contempt. Compare Ex. xii. 12. Num. xxxiii. 4. Isai. xix. 1. xlii. 17. xlv. 9. The verb in this clause might be taken as a preterite, worship or have worshipped; but the imperative construction seems to be required by the analogy of Ps. xcvi. 9. These words are not applied to Christ directly in Heb. i. 6. It is merely said that when God sends his son into the world, he may be understood as saying again (πάλιν) of him, what is here said of himself, to wit, that even the false gods are required to worship him, much more the angels who have real existence. The passage was no doubt suggested to the mind of the New Testament writer by the fact that the Septuagint renders gods by angels, though he does not copy this erroneous version.

8. Zion hears and rejoices, and glad are the daughters of Judah, because of thy judgments, Jehovah! While the heathen are confounded, the people of God rejoice. The terms of the verse are borrowed from Ps. xlviii. 12 (11), in the note upon which the ambiguous phrase, daughters of Judah, is explained. The judgments here particularly meant are those inflicted on the unbelieving Gentiles.

9. For thou, Jehovah, (art) Most High above all the earth; greatly art thou exalted above all gods. Jehovah's infinite superiority to idols and their worshippers is once more solemnly asserted. With the first clause compare Ps. lxxxiii. 19 (18); with the second Ps. xlvii. 10 (9.) It is remarkable that two psalms are here put together in quotation, which there is strong internal reason for supposing to have been occasioned by a victory of Jehoshaphat.

10. Lovers of Jehovah, hate evil! He keeps the souls of his gracious ones; from the hand of wicked (men) he will set them free. The people of God are now exhorted not to do evil in the hope of thereby being safer. Evil, in the moral sense of wickedness, and more especially injustice. See above, on Ps. vii. 10 (9.) xxxiv. 14, 15. With the first words of the verse compare Ps. v 12 (11.) He keeps, or rather, he (is) keeping, i. e. habitually constantly preserving. The danger, against which they particularly need protection, is distinctly mentioned in the last clause, namely, that arising from the enmity of wicked men. Gracious ones, objects of God's mercy, subjects of his grace, a favourite description of the righteous or true believers, as a class. See above, on Ps. iv. 4 (3.)

11. Light (is) sown for the just (man), and for right-hearted (men) joy. The figurative term light is explained by the literal one joy or gladness. Its being sown suggests the two ideas of diffusion and productiveness. Compare the similar and parallel expression, Ps. cxii. 4. The alternation of the singular and plural number shows that the just man of the first clause is an ideal person, representing a whole class.

12. Rejoice, ye righteous, in Jehovah, and give thanks to the memory of his holiness. Since joy is the portion of the righteous, let them accept it and make use of it, but only in the Lord, i. e. in reference to the possession and enjoyment of his favour, as the reason and the warrant for rejoicing. At the same time let them testify their gratitude to that divine perfection which is treasured in their memory and suggested by the name of God. See above, on Ps. xxx. 5 (4.) xxxii. 11, from which the language of this verse is borrowed.

PSALM XCVIII.

THIS psalm is similar, in tone and structure, to the one before it, containing three stanzas of three verses each. The first propounds the subject of the praise to which the whole world is exhorted, vs. 1—3. The second prescribes the form in which it shall be rendered, vs. 4—6. The third determines its extent, or in other words, requires it to be universal, vs. 7—9.

1. A Psalm. Sing ye to Jehovah a new song, for wonders he has done; his right hand has wrought salvation for him, and his holy arm. This is the only case in which the word psalm (מְזִמֶּר) stands by itself as a complete inscription. This fact has been ingeniously explained by supposing, that the word was intended to distinguish this, as a purely lyrical composition, from the one before it, which has more of the prophetic character and style. The first clause after this inscription is like Ps. xevi. 1, where the words have been explained already. Wonders, or wondrous deeds—things wonderfully done, as in Ps. xevi. 3. Wrought salvation, literally, saved for him, i. e. enabled him to save his people. The idea and expression are both found in Isai. lix. 16. lxiii. 5, as the expression arm of holiness (or holy arm) is in Isai. lii. 10. This is one of the cases in which holiness has the wide sense of divine perfection, as opposed to what is finite or belongs to the creature. See above, on Ps. xxii. 4 (3.) With the whole verse compare Judg. vii. 2. The allusions to Isaiah, or quotations from him that the wonders to be celebrated are like those which constitute the theme of his later prophecies, namely, Jehovah's interpositions for the deliverance and protection of his people.

PSALM XCVIII.

2. Jehovah hath made known his salvation, to the eyes of the nations he hath revealed his righteousness. He has shown the world his power and his willingness to save his own people according to his promise, with respect to which his righteousness and his salvation are related to each other as cause and effect. With this verse compare Isai. lii. 10.

3. He hath remembered his mercy and his truth for the house of Israel; all the ends of the earth have seen the salvation of our God. The common version connects to the house of Israel with what immediately precedes, the mercy and truth which he formerly exercised towards the house of Israel. But according to the Hebrew idiom and the usage of the Psalms, the preposition is dependent on the leading verb; 'he has called to mind his mercy and truth for the present benefit of the house of Israel.' Truth, fidelity to his engagements. See the same combination in Ps. xcii. 3. The last clause is another citation from Isai. lii. 10, which shows that the salvation primarily meant is that of Israel. This, however, is closely connected in prophecy with that of the Gentiles

4. Shout to Jehovah, all the earth! Burst forth, and sing, and play! The second stanza prescribes the form or manner of the praise. This verse accumulates the verbs denoting joyful noise, whether inarticulate, articulate, or instrumental. The first clause differs from Ps. xcvi. 1, only by substituting one divine name for another. See also Ps. xlvii. 2 (1.) The verb (פצץ) to burst forth (into praise or singing) is almost peculiar to Isaiah (xiv. 7 xiv. 23. xlix. 12. liv. 1.) This very combination with the verb to sing occurs in Isai lii. 9.

5. Make music to Jehovah with a harp, with a harp and a musical voice! The first verb is the one translated play in the preceding verse. Its repetition is like that in Ps. xlvii. 2 (1.) It is strictly applied to instrumental music, but often extended to any musical expression, especially of praise to God. A musical voice, or a voice of singing, as distinguished from the voice of speech. The phrase occurs in Isai. li. 3. The repeated introduction of the verb זמר or its derivatives is supposed by some to be the reason of the title מזמור. See above, on v. 1.

6. With trumpets and sound of cornet, shout before the King Jehovah! The first noun is supposed to denote the long straight trumpet, the other the cornet or curved horn of ancient music. These are named as the accompaniments of the act described in the other clause, where the verb may therefore have the sense of shouting, which it has most generally in these psalms. The act described is the joyful acclamation at the accession or public recognition of a sovereign. King Jehovah is a combination found in Isai. vi. 5. Compare Ps. xcv. 3. xcvi. 10. xcvii. 1. The whole is equivalent to saying, hail him who has now become your king!

7. Let the sea thunder and what fills it—the land and those dwelling on it. The last stanza represents the praise as universal. For the meaning of the first clause, see above, on Ps. xcvi. 11; for that of the second, on Ps. xxiv. 1. The word there translated world is here used in opposition to sea, and therefore rendered land. See above, on Ps. xc. 2.

8. Let rivers clap the hand; together let mountains sing (or shout for joy!) This bold but beautiful personification is also found in Isai. lv. 12, the only other place where the clapping of the hands is ascribed to lifeless objects. This was a customary sign of joy, especially when joined with acclamation in honour of a sovereign, as it is not only here, and in Ps. xlvii. 2(1), in highly figurative poetry, but also in historical prose, e. g. the account of the coronation of Joash, 2 Kings xi. 12. Together, not merely with each other, but at the same time and in concert with the applauses of the floods or rivers.

9. Before Jehovah, for he cometh to judge the earth; he will judge the world in righteousness and nations in equity. The acclamations must be uttered to Jehovah, not only as a sovereign king, but as a righteous judge. The first clause is like Ps. xcvi. 13, except that it omits the emphatic repetition, which is also the case in 1 Chr. xvi. 33. The first verb might, in all these cases, be more exactly and emphatically rendered, he is come. In equity, literally equities or rectitudes, the plural form denoting fulness and perfection. See above, on Ps. xcvi. 10

PSALM XCIX.

THE theme of this psalm, as of those immediately preceding, is the kingship of Jehovah, v. 1. The remainder falls into two stanzas of four verses each. In the first, Jehovah's goodness to his people is propounded as a subject of applause to all mankind, vs. 2—5. In the second, the same duty is enforced by an appeal to historical examples, vs. 6—9. The strophical arrangement is marked by the resemblance of vs. 5 and 9. The psalm is related in the closest manner to those before and after it, as forming one connected series. See below, on Ps. c.

1. Jehovah reigns, the nations tremble; sitting on (or dwelling between) the cherubim (he reigns), the earth quakes. The second member of each clause describes the effect produced by the disclosure of the fact that God has begun to reign, is actually reigning. For the meaning of the phrase sitting on (or dwelling between) the cherubim, see above, on Ps. lxxx. 2 (1.) As used in history, it always presupposes the presence of the ark as symbolizing that of God himself. See 1 Sam. iv. 4. 2 Sam. vi. 2. 2 Kings xix. 15. Its use here, therefore, shows that the psalm before us, and by necessary consequence, the series to which it belongs (Ps. xci—c), and by parity of reasoning, the later prophecies of Isaiah, were all composed before the Babylonian conquest, when the temple was destroyed and the ark lost sight of. The futures have their strict sense, as this is a prediction. If they were optative (let the nations tremble, etc.) one of the verbs at least would have that form.

2. Jehovah in Zion (is) great, and high (is) he above all nations. Compare Ps. xlviii. 2 (1.) xcv. 3. xcvi. 4. xcvii. 9. The addition of the qualifying phrase in Zion shows that the reference is not to God's absolute essential greatness, but to some signal manifestation of his greatness to his people. The word translated high is originally a participle, and may be likened to our English towering.

3. They shall acknowledge thy name, great and terrible: Holy (is) He! The subject of the first verb is the nations mentioned in v. 2. See above, Ps. xcvi. 9. xcvii. 7. xcviii. 1, 4. The verb itself means to acknowledge thankfully, to thank, to praise for benefits received. See above, on Ps. vi. 5 (4.) Thy name, the evidence already furnished of thine infinite perfection. Great and feared, or to be feared, epithets derived from Deut. x. 17 xxviii. 58. In the last clause some would read, Holy (is) it, i. e. thy name. But the sense is determined by the analogy of vs. 5, 9, and the obvious allusion to Isai. vi. 3. This allusion is by some supposed to be the reason of the sudden change of person. He instead of Thou. But this may be still more readily accounted for, by making these the very words in which God is acknowledged by the nations: (saying) Holy is He! Holy, in the wide sense which it has in the Old Testament, and more particularly in the Psalms. See above, on Ps. xxii. 4 (3.)

4. And the king's strength loves judgment; thou hast established equity; judgment and justice in Jacob thou hast done. Some continue the construction from the preceding sentence; they shall acknowledge thy name and the king's strength loving judgment. But as sentences of this length are unusual in Hebrew, and as וְיָדָע is not elsewhere a participle or verbal adjective, the best construction is the old one which makes this an independent proposition. The meaning of the first clause seems to be, that God's power is controlled in its exercise by his love of justice. To establish equity is to give it permanence by a habitually pure administration of justice. The terms of the last clause are the same by which the history describes the judicial fidelity of David, 2 Sam. viii. 15, as if to indicate that it was a mere type of God's more perfect and infallible administration of impartial justice.

5. Exalt ye Jehovah our God, and prostrate yourselves to his footstool. Holy (is) He! With the first clause compare Ps. xxx. 2 (1.) xxxiv. 4 (3); with the second, Ps. xvi. 9. xcvii. 7. As in those cases, the address is to the nations. Bow down (or prostrate) yourselves, as an act of worship. Not at his footstool, as the mere place of worship, but to it, as the object, this name being constantly given to the ark, 1 Chron. xxviii. 2. Lam. ii. 1. Ps. cxxxii. 7. Isai. lx. 13. Even in Isai. lxvi. 1, there is allusion to the ordinary usage of the terms. The ark is here represented as the object of worship, just as Zion is in Isai. xlv. 14 both being put for the God who was present in them.

6. Moses and Aaron among his priests, and Samuel among those calling on his name—calling to Jehovah, and he answers them. The structure of the sentence is elliptical, and may be completed either by supplying are or were before among, or by making the participle calling mean are calling, call. In explaining the sentence due regard must be had to its parallel structure. As Moses and Aaron are evidently meant to be included among those who called upon the name of the Lord, so Samuel must be comprehended among his priests. Moses and Samuel are so described because they were theocratic mediators between God and the people, and as such performed occasionally what were strictly sacerdotal functions. See Lev. viii. 15—30. 1 Sam. ix. 13. The prayers here referred to are their intercessions for the people. See Ex. xviii. 19. xxxii. 11—30. Num. xi. 2. xiv. 9. xxi. 7. Deut. v. 5. ix. 18, 19. 1 Sam. vii. 9. xii. 23. Ps. cvi. 23. The connection of this verse with the foregoing context is obscure, but the idea seems to be, that as even the chiefs of the theocracy were under the necessity of seeking the divine favour, such prayer must, to say the least, be equally necessary in the case of others.

7. In a pillar of cloud he speaks to them. They kept his testimonies and the statute he gave unto them. The first clause may be figuratively understood as denoting any special divine communication, or what was literally true of Moses and Aaron (Ex. xxxiii. 9. Num. xii. 5. Deut. xxxi. 15) may be here applied to all three indiscriminately. The verse contains a second lesson drawn from the history of the theocracy, to wit, the necessity of obedience no less than of prayer. It was true, God spoke to these men in an extraordinary manner; but it was for the purpose of making known his will, and that will they obeyed. For the meaning of testimonies, see above, on Ps. xciii. 5. The last clause may be construed as an independent proposition, and he gave a statute to them, i. e. he rewarded their obedience by revealing to them new laws. But the sense thus obtained is not so clear or natural as that afforded by the relative construction, and the statute (which) he gave them.

8. Jehovah our God, thou didst answer them ; a forgiving God wast thou to them, and (a God) taking vengeance on their crimes. The apostrophe to God himself adds solemnity and tenderness to the discourse. The pronoun is emphatic, they called and thou didst hear or answer. The following description is borrowed from Ex. xxxiv. 7. The divine name (יהוה) implies that he had infinite power to destroy and yet forgave them. The last Hebrew word in the verse is used of God in a good sense, and of man always in a bad one. See above on Ps. ix. 12 (11.) xiv. 1. lxxvii. 13 (12.) There is here a beautiful transition from the representatives of the people to the people themselves. The pronoun in the first clause (them) can refer only to Moses, Aaron, and Samuel ; in the second, it is applicable both to them and to the people ; in the third, it relates to the latter exclusively.

9. Exalt ye Jehovah our God, and bow down to his holy hill ; for holy (is) Jehovah our God. See above, on v. 5, from which this differs only in the substitution of the holy hill for the equivalent expression footstool, and in the more distinct assertion of God's holiness as a reason for the worship thus required.

PSALM C.

THIS psalm is related to the ninety-ninth as the ninety-eighth is to the ninety-seventh. The prophecy there latent is here clothed in a genuine lyrical form. There is also the same likeness as to structure and arrangement. The theme, propounded in v. 1, is amplified in two short stanzas, of two verses each. In both these an exhortation to praise God is followed by a reason for so doing. Men ought to praise him as their creator and preserver, vs. 2, 3. They ought also to praise him for his infinite goodness, constancy, and faithfulness, vs. 4, 5. Besides completing the foregoing psalm, it closes the whole series or cycle of harmonious addresses to the nations or the world at large.

1. A Psalm. For thanksgiving. Shout unto Jehovah, all the earth! The title resembles that of Ps. xcvi., but is rendered more specific by the addition for thanksgiving. The version praise is too restricted. See above, on Ps. xcix. 3. The rest of the verse is identical with Ps. xcvi. 4. See also Ps. ii. 11. lxvi. 1

2. Serve Jehovah with joy, come before him with singing! Since he is the king of the nations, they are his subjects, and as such bound to serve him. What they are required to do in Ps. ii. 11 with fear and trembling as repentant rebels, they are here invited to do with joy and gladness as his willing subjects.

3. Know ye that Jehovah is God; (it is) He (that) made us, and not we (ourselves), his people, and the sheep of his pasture. This is the first reason given for acknowledging Jehovah's sovereignty, to wit, that he has made his people what they are. With the first clause compare Ps. xlvi. 11 (10.) Instead of and not we ourselves, the keri or masoretic reading in the margin of the Hebrew Bible has, and his we are. These phrases, though so unlike in English, differ only in a single letter, and not (לֹא) we, and to him (לֵךְ) we. The first is adopted by the Septuagint and Vulgate, the second by the Targum and Jerome. In favour of the latter is the similar construction of the pronoun (אֲנֹכֵנּוּ) we with (עַמֵּנוּ) his people in Ps. lxxix. 13. xcvi. 7. In favour of the other is its antiquity, and its greater significancy and appropriateness to the context. Some who adopt it read, it is he that has made us (to be) his people, the sheep, etc. But besides the violence of this construction, he made us has no doubt the same sense as in Ps. xcv. 6, and his people must mean us who are his people. Sheep (or flock) of his pasture, as in Ps. lxxiv. 1. lxxix. 13. xcv. 7.

4. Enter his gates with thanksgiving and his courts with praise, give thanks unto him, bless his name! Compare Ps. lxxxiv. 3 (2.) xcii. 14 (13.) xcv. 2. xevi. 2, 8. xcvii. 12. The substance of the exhortation is, join in the worship of his people. That the reference to the sanctuary at Jerusalem is merely typical or metaphorical, is clear from the analogy of Isai. lxvi. 23, where all mankind are required to come up every sabbath, a command which, if literally understood, is perfectly impracticable. The combination of the verb to thank (הודר) with its derivative noun (תודה) may throw some light upon the title, a psalm for thanksgiving (לְתוֹדָה).

5. For good (is) Jehovah, to eternity his mercy, and even to generation and generation his faithfulness (or truth.) This verse assigns a second reason for the invitation to praise Jehovah, namely, the goodness, truth, and constancy of the divine nature. With the first clause compare Ps. xxv. 8. xxxiv. 9 (8.) lxxxvi. 5; with the second, Isai. liv. 8, 10; with the third, Ps. lxxxix. 2 (1.) xcii. 3 (2.)

Here ends what Hengstenberg describes as a decalogue of Psalms (xc1—c), all intended to exhibit the relation between Israel and the world at large; all of a cheering and triumphant character, without the slightest intermixture of complaint or lamentation; all crowded with citations from the older Scriptures, or allusions to them ; almost all pointing to a glorious theophany still future ; and almost all distinguished by emphatic repetitions, and the frequent use of musical terms, especially the names of instruments. That these psalms are not thrown together at random, is apparent from the fact that the series begins with a general assurance of divine protection (Ps. xci.), and of God's power both to save the righteous and destroy the wicked (Ps. xcii), followed by variations on the grand theme that THE LORD REIGNETH (Ps. xciii—xcix), and closing with an earnest exhortation to the whole world to receive him as their sovereign (Ps. c.) The mutual relation of the several psalms has been already indicated in the exposition. According to Hengstenberg, these ten psalms are in Psalmody what the later chapters of Isaiah (xl—lxvi) are in Prophecy ; and as the former are undoubtedly anterior to the exile, they confirm the genuineness of the latter.

THE
P S A L M S

TRANSLATED AND EXPLAINED

BY
J. A. ALEXANDER

PROFESSOR IN THE THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY AT PRINCETON.

VOLUME III

SIXTH EDITION.

NEW YORK:
SCRIBNER, ARMSTRONG & CO., 654 BROADWAY.
1873.

THE PSALMS.

PSALM CI.

AFTER propounding as his theme the mercy and justice of the Lord, v. 1, the Psalmist announces his determination to be blameless in his own walk, vs. 2—4, and so to exercise his power over others as to favour the godly and drive out the wicked, vs. 5—8.

1. By David. A Psalm. Mercy and judgment will I sing; to thee, Jehovah, will I play (or make music.) As such a declaration of a present purpose in the Psalms is always followed by its execution, the older interpreters suppose mercy and judgment to be those which David meant to practise, as he states more fully in the remainder of the psalm. But besides that he says nothing in what follows of his mercy, there is no usage of the Psalms more settled than that mercy and justice are combined to denote divine not human attributes, and that to sing and make music to Jehovah never means to praise something else in an address to him, but always to sing praises to himself. See above, Ps. ix. 2 (11.) xiii. 6 (5.) xviii. 50 (49.) xxx. 5 (4.) 13 (12.) xxxiii. 2. lxxviii. 5 (4.) lxxi. 22, 23, in all which cases the form of expression seems to be derived from Judg. v. 3. But the psalm before us contains no such celebration of God's mercy and justice beyond this first verse. The best solution of this fact appears to be the one proposed by Hengstenberg, according to which the execution of the purpose here avowed is contained in Ps. ciii, which then, together with the one before us, and of course the intervening one, compose a trilogy or series of three psalms, all by David, each complete in itself, and yet designed to be connected with the others and interpreted by them. Supposing this to be the case, we must regard them all as psalms of David, whose name is prefixed to the third and the one before us, in which he lays down a rule, as it were, for his own government, and that of his successors, in the regal office. The impression made by these inspired instructions on the first of those successors may account for the remarkable coincidences of expression between this psalm and the Book of Proverbs.

2. I will act wisely in a perfect way. When wilt thou come to me? I will walk in the integrity of my heart within my house. As to the first verb, see above, on Ps. ii. 10. xiv. 2. Its form here is one expressing fixed determination. A perfect way, as in Ps. xviii. 31, 33 (30, 32.) This and other favourite expressions of the same kind, Ps. xviii. 24, 26 (23, 25.) xv. 2, are founded upon Gen. xvii. 1. When wilt thou come to me, and bless me, in fulfilment of thy promise, Ex. xx. 21. This interrogative ejaculation implies a sense of his dependence on divine aid for the execution of his purpose. Integrity (integritas, completeness) of my heart is an expression borrowed from Gen. xx. 5, 6. See above, on Ps. lxxviii. 72, and compare 1 Kings iii. 14. Prov. xx. 7. Way and walk are familiar figures for habitual conduct. Within, literally, in the midst (or inside) of my house, i. e. at home, in private life, as distinguished from the house of God and his official conduct there, to which he afterwards adverts.

3. I will not set before my eyes a word of Belial; the doing of apostasies I hate, it shall not cleave to me. The positive terms of the preceding verse are now exchanged for negatives. Having said what he will do, he now says what he will not do. See a similar transition, but in the inverse order, Ps. i. 1, 2. Set before my eyes, as a model to be copied, or as an object of approving contemplation. A word of Belial, as in Ps. xli. 9 (8), except that word, which there most probably relates to slander or false accusation, may here denote a proposition, and the whole phrase a worthless (i. e. wicked) plan or purpose. Apostasies, departures, deviations from the right course. See the verbal root as used in Ps. xl. 5 (4), and a cognate verb in Num. v. 12, 19. Some make the word here used a participle or verbal noun, as in the English Bible, the work of them that turn aside. But its form and the analogy of Hos. v. 2 entitle the other construction to the preference. It shall not cleave to me, I will not be concerned or implicated in it; or more emphatically still, it shall not cleave to me as a reproach or stigma. In favour of the former sense is the analogy of Deut. xiii. 18 (17), from which the expression seems to have been borrowed.

4. A crooked heart shall depart from me; evil I will not know. Crooked, froward, or perverse, as in Ps. xviii. 27 (26.) Compare Prov. xi. 20. xvii. 20. The whole phrase might be understood to mean a person having such a heart, and the whole clause that the Psalmist would have no intercourse with such. The parallel term evil would then mean a wicked person, as translated in the English Bible. On the ground, however, that the person of the sinner seems to be reserved for the latter part of the psalm, the best interpreters take evil in the abstract sense of moral evil, wickedness, as in Ps. xxxiv. 17, lii. 5 (3.) The first clause will then naturally mean, my own heart shall not be perverse or froward.

5. (One) slandering in secret his fellow—him I will destroy:
(one) lofty of eyes and wide of heart—him I will not beo.

Having declared what his own course of life should be, he now describes the conduct which he should require in his confidential servants. Here again the statement is both negative and positive, but in this case beginning with the former. See above, on v. 3. It is not an improbable conjecture that in specifying slander, David had reference to his sufferings from that cause in the days of Saul. See above, on Ps. xviii. 1. lii. 4—7 (2—5), and compare Ps. xv. 3. The verb translated slandering occurs, in any of its forms, only here and Prov xxx. 10. Wide of heart means neither magnanimous nor greedy, but proud, self-confident, as appears from Prov. xxviii. 25. Both figurative phrases here used are combined again in Prov. xxi. 4. The last verb in the sentence usually means to be able, but is here used absolutely, as in Isai. i. 13.

6. My eyes (are) on the faithful of the land, to dwell with me. (One) walking in a perfect way—he shall serve me. On the faithful, literally, in or with them. See above, on Ps. xxxiv. 16, 17 (15, 16), and compare Ps. xxxii. 8 (7.) My eyes are on them is equivalent to saying, I will seek them out to dwell with me and serve me. The word translated faithful is properly a passive participle meaning trusted, relied upon, confided in. Another passive participle from the same root is commonly supposed to be used in the same sense, Ps. xii. 2 (1.) xxxi. 24 (23.) In the first words of the last clause there is manifest allusion to the form of expression in v. 2 above. This clause is to be understood exclusively, such a person and no other. Shall serve me, be employed by me, clothed with responsible and honourable offices.

7. Not in the inside of my house shall dwell (one) practising fraud, telling lies; not settled shall he be before my eyes. Here again the form of expression corresponds to that in the first part of the psalm. Compare in the midst of my house with v. 2, and before my eyes with v. 3. Shall not dwell, or still more strongly.

shall not (even) sit, which is the primary meaning of the Hebrew verb. The corresponding verb in the last clause means to be established, permanently settled, as opposed to a mere temporary, transient presence. As if he had said: though they should even gain admission to my house, they shall not take up their abode there.

8. In the morning will I destroy all the wicked of the land, (so as to cut off from the city of Jehovah all workers of iniquity. The first phrase literally means at the mornings, and may be intended to suggest the twofold idea of early and constantly, in the morning and every morning. See above, on Ps. lxxiii. 14, and compare Jer. xxi. 12. The last clause serves to show, or to remind the reader, that this rigour was not simply prudential or political, but religious. It had reference not merely to Jerusalem as a city, but as the city of Jehovah, his earthly residence, the centre of the theocracy, the temporary seat of the true religion. See above, on Ps. xlvi. 5 (4) xlviii. 2 (1.) lxxxvii. 3. Under the peculiar institutions of the old economy, the safety of the theocratic state required peculiar vigilance and rigour, in exercising even those powers which are common to all governments.

PSALM CII.

1. A Prayer. By a Sufferer, when he is troubled, and before Jehovah pours out his complaint. The psalm is called a prayer because petition constitutes its substance. See above, on Ps. xc.

1. The translation for the sufferer (or afflicted) would also be grammatical, and perfectly consistent with the real design of the composition. But phrases of this kind, in the titles of the psalms, so constantly indicate the author or performer, and when only one occurs the former, that a departure from this usage here is highly improbable, and the assumption of it altogether arbitrary. At the same time, the indefinite expression, a sufferer, or an afflicted person, seems to be intentionally used for the purpose of giving the psalm an unrestricted application, though the primary reference is no doubt to the suffering kings of Israel, in whom the sufferings of the people were concentrated and represented. The other terms of the inscription all occur in psalms of David; troubled (or overwhelmed) in Ps. lxi. 3 (2); complaint (or moaning) in Ps. lv. 3 (2.) lxiv. 2 (1); and pouring out the soul in Ps. lxii. 9 (8.) This agrees with the general Davidic character of the composition, and favours Hengstenberg's hypothesis, not otherwise demonstrable, nor even very probable, that this psalm forms the connecting link between the pious resolutions of Ps. 101 and the joyful acknowledgments of Ps. 103, and was composed in prophetic foresight of the straits to which the theocratical state should be reduced, and in which the sufferings of David, here immediately described, should, as it were, be realized anew. The psalm may be divided into two parts, in the first of which the tone of lamentation or complaint predominates, vs. 2—12 (1—11), while in the second it is tempered and controlled by the contemplation of God's attributes, and confident anticipation of his favour, vs. 13—29 (12—28.)

2 (1.) Jehovah, hear my prayer, and let my cry (for help) unto thee come. With this verse compare Ps. iv. 2 (1.) xvii. 1. xviii. 7 (6.) liv. 4 (2.) There is no more reason for regarding these resemblances as imitations by a later writer in the case before us than in any of the others. And if not such, they may serve to show, that David only asks, for the future or for others, that favour which he has himself sought and experienced already.

3 (2.) Hide not thy face from me ; in the day (there is) a stress to me, incline to me thine ear ; in the day I call, make haste (and) answer me. Compare Ps. x. 1. xiii. 1. xvii. 6. xviii. 7 (6.) xxvii. 9. xxxi. 3 (2.) lvi. 10 (9.) lxvi. 14 (13.) lxxi. 2. We find here accumulated nearly all the phrases used by David to express the same ideas elsewhere. This is not unnatural if we suppose him to have been preparing a form of complaint and supplication for the use of his successors in their worst distresses.

4 (3.) For wasted in smoke are my days, and my bones like a burning are kindled. With the first clause compare Ps. xxxvii. 20. The bones are mentioned as the seat of strength. See above, on Ps. vi. 3 (2.) xxxi. 11 (10.) xxxv. 10. xlii. 11 (10.) This description, although strictly applicable to the case of individual sufferers, may also be applied to the decline of the theocratic monarchy and the approach of its catastrophe.

5 (4.) Smitten like grass and withered is my heart, for I have forgotten to eat my bread. The first verb is used to describe the effect of the sun on plants, Ps. cxxi. 6. Isai. xlix. 10. (Compare Jon. iv. 7.) The heart is mentioned as the seat of life. The common version of the last clause (so that I forget) is ungrammatical. The failure of the strength is rather described as immediately occasioned by the want of food (1 Sam. xxviii. 20), and this by loss of appetite from extreme distress. See below, on Ps. cvii. 18, and compare 1 Sam. i. 7. xx. 34. 1 Kings xxi. 4. Forgotten to eat, literally, forgotten from eating, so as not to eat, a common idiomatic use of the preposition from in Hebrew.

6 (5.) From the voice of my groaning, my bone cleaves to my flesh. The word voice implies an audible and loud expression of distress. The first clause means, in consequence of the agony which makes me groan. My bone may signify each of my bones, or be used collectively for the whole skeleton or framework of the body. The only natural explanation of this clause is that it describes emaciation, as a consequence and symptom of extreme distress. See above, on Ps. xxii. 15, 18 (14, 17.)

7 (6.) I resemble a pelican of the wilderness ; I am become like an owl (haunting) ruins. The simple idea conveyed by these figures is that of extreme loneliness and desolation. Beyond the fact that they inhabit solitudes, the natural history of the birds mentioned is of no exegetical importance.

8 (7.) I have watched, and have been like a sparrow dwelling alone upon a house-top. The first words suggest the idea of a solitary vigil. As to the word translated sparrow, see above, on Ps. lxxxiv. 4 (3.) The word dwelling is supplied in the translation of the last clause, in order to retain the form of the original expression, which is that of an active participle. Some suppose the idea to be that of a bird, deprived of its mate or of its young.

9 (8.) All the day my enemies have taunted me, my infuriated (foes) swear by me. The verb in the first clause suggests the ideas of contempt and hatred, calumny and insult. See above, on Ps. xlii. 11 (10.) The first word of the last clause is a passive participle, my enraged (or maddened) ones, those who are mad (i. e. insane with enmity) against me. The last phrase does not mean swear at me, i. e. vent their rage by oaths and curses, nor are sworn against me, neither of which is justified by Hebrew usage ; but swear by me, i. e. use me as a formula of execration, imprecating upon others misery like mine. Compare Isai. lxxv. 15. Jer. xxix. 22. The preterite forms imply a long previous continuance of this furious persecution, as all the day does its constant, unremitted raging.

10 (9.) For ashes like bread have I eaten, and my drink with weeping have mixed. The ashes, in which he sat, or with which he was covered, as a sign of mourning, became mingled with his food, and his tears fell into his drink. This last word is, in Hebrew, of the plural number, drinks or beve. ages, analogous to virtuals as a simple synonyme of food. As an opposite example of the same idiomatic difference, the word translated ashes is a singular in Hebrew. The whole verse is a strong poetical description of constant and extreme distress.

11 (10.) Because of thine indignation and thy wrath; for thou hast taken me up and cast me away. The first clause describes his suffering as the fruit of God's displeasure. See above, on Ps. xc. 7. The antithesis presented in the common version of the last clause (lifted me up and cast me down) does not seem to be the sense of the original, in which there is probably allusion to the figure of a storm or whirlwind catching things up and blowing them away. The Prayer Book version of the first verb (taken me up) is more exact.

12 (11.) My days (are) like a shadow inclined, and I (myself) like the grass wither. An inclined shadow is an unusual and obscure expression, but seems to mean a shadow verging towards its disappearance, ready to vanish away. The double or reflexive pronoun (I myself) in the translation of the last clause is necessary to convey the full force of the Hebrew pronoun, which is seldom expressed, except when it is meant to be emphatic. I wither, am withering, or about to wither.

13 (12.) And thou, Jehovah, to eternity shalt sit, and thy memory shall endure) to generation and generation. Here again the pronoun is emphatic, and exhibits a strong contrast between God's eternity and human frailty. While I wither like the grass, thou endurest forever, and not only so, but reignest, sittest on the throne. See above, on Ps. ix. 8 (7.) xxix. 10. lv. 20 (19.) The word memory seems here to be employed for the sake of the antithesis which it implies. While I perish and am utterly forgotten, thy existence and thy memory shall last forever. It may, however, have the same sense as in Ps. xxx. 5 (4), namely, the divine perfection, associated in our memory with the name of God. Thou shalt not only reign forever, but be worthy, as an infinitely perfect being, so to do.

14 (13.) Thou wilt arise, wilt have mercy upon Zion, when (it is) time to favour her, when the set time is come. The pronoun is again emphatic. Thou, the God thus glorious and immutable, wilt certainly arise from this apparent inaction, and have mercy or compassion on thy people, when the time fixed in thy eternal purpose is arrived. The sense of when, thus given to the Hebrew particle (כִּי), although less usual, is sometimes absolutely necessary, and is therefore admissible in this case, where it suits the sense much better than the ordinary sense of for. Or the one may be resolved into the other, by explaining the whole thus: thou wilt certainly arise and have compassion upon Zion, at the proper time, FOR there is a time fixed at which thou dost design to favour her. For the meaning of the word translated set time, see above, on Ps. lxxv. 3 (2.)

15 (14.) When thy servants love her stones, and her dust regard with favour. Both verbs in Hebrew mean to favour, or more strongly, to delight in, to take pleasure in. See above, Ps. lxii. 5 (4.) lxxxv. 2 (1.) Stones and dust are here put for ruins or rubbish, as in Neh. iii. 34 (iv. 2.) iv. 4 (10.) The verse may be understood as a condition or a premonition of her restoration, that before it takes place, God will fill his servants with affectionate concern for her desolate condition. The same sense may be obtained without departing from the usual sense of the particle. Thou wilt have mercy upon Zion, FOR thy servants already look with interest and strong desire on her ruins, a sure sign of the approaching restoration.

16 (15.) And nations shall fear the name of Jehovah, and all kings of the earth thy glory. The impression of awe, unavoidably produced by these exhibitions of Jehovah's attributes, shall not be limited to Israel but extend to other nations, and even kings shall vie with each other in their reverential admiration of his regal honours. Compare the similar expressions of Isaiah (lix. 19.)

17 (16.) Because Jehovah has built Zion; he has been seen in his glory. These are not praeterita prophetica, describing future events as past; nor are they to be taken as mere presents, but as denoting a relative past, dependent on the futures of the verse preceding. The nations and their kings are to fear because Jehovah has built (i. e. will then have built) Zion. Still another construction may seem possible, viz. 'when Jehovah has built Zion, he shall be seen in his glory.' But in this case, Hebrew usage would require the last verb, if not both, to have the future form

18 (17.) He has turned unto the prayer of the destitute, and has not despised their prayer. This verse continues to assign the reason why the nations and their kings will be struck with awe, viz. because this great and glorious God has turned round, as it were, and listened to the prayer of the destitute and granted their petition. The word translated destitute occurs only here and in Jer. xvii. 6; but from its etymological affinities and its intensive form, appears to mean stark naked, and then figuratively, stripped of every thing, impoverished, entirely destitute.

19 (18.) This shall be written for an after generation, and a people (yet to be) created shall praise Jah. This fulfilment of God's promise and illustration of his attributes is left on record for the learning or instruction of posterity. Compare 1 Cor. x. 11. An after generation, as in Ps. xlviii. 14 (13.) lxxviii. 4. Equivalent in meaning, but abridged in form, is the expression in the passage upon which these are founded, Ps. xxii. 31 (30.) See also Ps lxxi. 18. Created may have the force of a gerundive, as the passive participle often has in Hebrew; or it may mean (then) created (but not now.) See above, on Ps. xxii. 32 (31.) As the verb (אֵצַר) create is applied only to divine acts, its use here seems to indicate that what is meant is not merely a future generation, a race yet to come into existence, but a people in the strict sense, an organized body to be formed hereafter by sovereign authority and almighty power. Shall praise Jah, recognize Jehovah as possessing and as being all that is denoted by his name.

20 (19.) For he has leaned from the high-place of his holiness; Jehovah from heaven to earth has looked. The first word may also be translated that, and the verse be understood as an amplification of the pronoun this at the beginning of v. 19 (18.) This is what shall be written for a future generation; this is what they shall praise Jah for; viz. that he has looked, etc. To avoid the repetition of the English verb, as well as to add life to the description, the Hebrew verb is here represented by what seems to be its primary meaning. See above on Ps. xiv. 2. lxxxv. 12 (11), and compare Deut. xxvi. 15.

21 (20.) To hear the groaning of the prisoner, to loose the sons of mortality. The construction is continued from the foregoing verse, and the design of God's thus looking down is stated. The word translated groaning is almost peculiar to the psalms of David, and according to its etymology properly denotes suffocation. To loose, literally to open, sometimes applied to the opening of a dress for the purpose of removing it, as in Ps. xxx. 12 (11); then to the loosening of chains, as in Ps. cxvi. 16; then to the deliverance of the prisoner himself. Sons of mortality or death, i. e. those doomed to die. See above, on Ps. lxxxix. 11.

22 (21.) To recount in Zion the name of Jehovah and his praise in Jerusalem. This, according to the laws of Hebrew syntax, does not necessarily denote an act of God himself, as the similar construction in the preceding verse does, but may have a vaguer sense equivalent to saying, that his name may be declared in Zion. To recount God's name is to recount the mighty deeds which constitute it, and the celebration of which constitutes his praise. Zion is still represented as the great scene of Jehovah's triumphs, not however as the capital of Israel or Judah merely, but as the radiating centre of religious light and influence to all the earth.

23 (22.) In the gathering of peoples together, and kingdoms to serve Jehovah. This verse is necessary to complete and qualify the sense of that before it. God has looked down from heaven to deliver his people and receive their praise, not in their secluded, insulated state, but in their glorious reunion with the converted nations. The first verb is a passive infinitive in Hebrew, in their being gathered. The preposition in relates both to the time and to the act of convocation. To serve Jehovah, not only as a King, but as a God, to be both his subject and his worshipper. Compare Ps. ii. 11.

24 (23.) He has humbled in the way his strength; he has shortened my days. The Psalmist here resumes the tone of complaint, but only for a moment, and as an introduction to what follows. Humbled, weakened, or afflicted. In or by the way of his providential guidance, as distinguished from the glorious end to which it led. His strength and my days seem clearly to refer to the same person. To avoid this harsh enallage, the masoretic critics changed a single letter, and for (בְּזוֹרֹ) his strength read (בְּזוֹרִי) my strength, which, though adopted in most versions, is an obvious evasion of a supposed difficulty. With the last clause compare Ps. lxxxix. 46 (45.) See also Ps. lv. 24 (23.)

25 (24.) I will say, Oh my God, take me not up in the half of my days ; through generation of generations (are) thy years. Take up, cause to ascend, i. e. as some suppose, like smoke, which is very forced and far-fetched. Others make it simply mean to take away, which gives a good sense, but is not sufficiently sustained by usage. Better than either is the supposition that death or removal out of life is here described by a figure corresponding to the actual departure of Enoch and Elijah. See Gen. v. 24. 2 Kings ii. 1, 3, 5, 10, 11. In the half (or midst) of my days ; see above, on Ps. lv. 24 (23), and compare Isai. xxxviii. 10. Generation of generations, i. e. all generations, as in Ps. lxxii. 5. Isai. li. 8. He prays that God, whose years are endless, would not, as it were, grudge the few days granted to his creatures. See above, on Ps. xxxix. 6 (5.)

26 (25.) At first thou the earth didst found, and the work of thy hands (are) the heavens. The phrase at the beginning means originally to the face, and then before, as an adverb both of time and place ; but this would be ambiguous here, since it might be understood as a conjunction, before thou didst found the earth, expressing the same idea as in Ps. xc. 2. It here means long ago, of old, in the beginning. With the last clause, compare Ps. viii. 4 (3.) xix. 2 (1.) xxxiii. 6. God's creative power is here added to his eternity, in order to enhance the contrast between his infinity and man's littleness, as a reason for compassion to the latter.

27 (26.) They shall perish and thou shalt stand, and all of them like a garment shall wear out, like a dress shalt thou change them and they shall change. The contrast is brought out as pointedly as possible in Hebrew, by the insertion of the pronouns they and thou, neither of which is grammatically necessary to the expression of the meaning. Stand, stand fast, endure, remain, continue. All of them, without exception, even the noblest of God's works, shall at least lose their present form, and in that sense perish, a sense which may be still more readily put upon the parallel verb pass away or change. The twofold usage of the English verb, as active and neuter, or transitive and intransitive, makes it an appropriate representative of the primitive and derivative forms of the Hebrew verb (אָזַח). The corresponding verb, in the second member of the sentence, means not only to wax old, but, as the necessary consequence, to wear out. See above on Ps. xxxii. 3, and compare Ps. xlix. 15 (14.)

28 (27.) And Thou (art) He—and thy years shall not be finished. The construction of the first clause is disputed. Some read it, Thou thyself and thy years shall not end. Others, Thou art the same, giving אָזַח the same sense with the Greek ὁ αὐτός, which is actually used here to translate it in the Septuagint. In favour of the version first above given, is its agreement with the usage of the Hebrew words, with the analogy of Deut. xxxii. 39 and Isai. xliii. 10, and with the context here. The meaning then is, Thou art the Unchangeable One just described. Or, it is Thou, and nothing else, that shall thus endure. Be finished, spent, consumed, as the Hebrew word invariably means. What is elsewhere literally said of the violent destruction of human life is here transferred to the lapse of time.

29 (28.) The sons of thy servants shall abide, and their seed before thee shall be established. [†] This might also be translated as a prayer, let the sons of thy servants continue, which is really included even in the prediction. Before thee, as in Gen. xvii. 1. Ps. lxxxix. 37.(36.) Be established, as in Ps. lxxxix. 38 (37.) ei. 7. With this conclusion of the whole psalm compare Ps lxi 36, 37 (35, 36.) xc. 16, 17.

PSALM CIII.

THE Psalmist calls upon himself to praise God for personal favours already experienced, vs. 1-5. From these he rises, in the body of the psalm, to the contemplation of God's attributes, in themselves considered, and as manifested in his dealings with his people, vs. 6-19. He concludes as he began, with an exhortation to bless God, no longer addressed merely to himself, but to all creatures, vs. 20-22. According to the exegetical hypothesis already mentioned, this is the song of mercy and judgment promised in Ps. ci. 1. The arguments in favour of this theory have been already stated. The principal objection to it, and that by no means a conclusive one, is the want of unison and even concord, as to tone and spirit, between the psalm before us and the two preceding it. Be this as it may, the psalm before us is a complete and finished composition, being one of the most simple and yet regular in structure that the book contains. This has contributed, with other obvious peculiarities, to make it a favourite vehicle of thankful praise among the pious of all ages.

1. By David. Bless, oh my soul, Jehovah, and all within me (bless) his holy name! The attempts which have been made by modern critics to discredit the inscription in the first clause chiefly consist in representing the many imitations and allusions to this noble composition in the later scriptures as a cento of citations from those scriptures by the writer of the psalm itself, a preposterous inversion of the laws of evidence to which the neological critics are especially addicted, and by which any thing and every thing can be disproved or proved at pleasure. (Bless, when applied to God, means to praise,) but with a strong implication of devout affection. (By calling on his soul to do this, he acknowledges his own obligation, not only to praise God, but to praise him cordially, with all the heart, according to the solemn requisition of the Law (Deut. vi. 5), to which there is perhaps a reference in all such cases. See above, on Ps. iii. 3 (2.) The parallel expression, all within me, is the plural form of one repeatedly used elsewhere and denoting the inside of any thing, and more especially of man, his mind or heart, as distinguished from his mere professions or external acts. See above, on Ps. v. 10 (9.) xlix. 12 (11.) The literal translation of the form here used is my insides or inner parts, the strong and comprehensive meaning of the plural being further enhanced by the addition of all, as if to preclude exception and reserve, and comprehend within the scope of the address all the powers and affections. His name of holiness (or holy name), i. e. the revelation of his infinite perfections. See above, on Ps. v. 12 (11.) xxii. 4 (3.)

2. Bless, oh my soul, Jehovah, and forget not all his dealings. The positive exhortation is repeated as a kind of foil to the negative one following, in which there seems to be allusion to the frequent admonition in the Law to Israel, not to forget the Lord who brought him up out of the land of Egypt. See Deut. vi. 12. viii. 11, 14. The last word in the verse before us is the passive participle of a verb which means to treat, and commonly to treat well. See above on Ps. vii. 5 (4.) The idea here conveyed is that of treatment, determined by the context to be kind and gracious treatment. The latitude of meaning and the plural form are both represented in the English word dealings, which, though susceptible of either application can, in this connection, only have a good one.

3. Forgiving all thy guilt, healing all thy sicknesses The participles are to be grammatically construed with Jehovah as the object of the praise required, and assign a reason for the requisition, furnished by the personal experience of the soul itself. The original expression is still more definite, each participle having the article prefixed, the (one) forgiving, the (one) healing. See a similar construction carried out still further in Ps. xviii. 33-35 (32-34), 48-51 (47-50.) The last word in the verse is an unusual one borrowed from Deut. xxix. 21, where sicknesses are joined with plagues or strokes, to signify calamities considered as venal inflictions. The same idea is expressed in other words, Ex. xvi. 26. The relation of the clauses, in the verse before us, may be that of cause and effect. Forgiving all thy guilt and thereby removing all the misery occasioned by it.

4. Redeeming from the grave thy life, crowning thee (with) mercy and compassions. The combination of the article and participle is the same as in v. 3, the (one) redeeming, the (one) crowning. The continuation of the sentence in this form keeps the attention fixed upon the reasons for which, or the characters in which, the Lord is to be praised. As if he had said, Bless him as the one forgiving thee and healing thee, redeeming thee and crowning thee. Redeeming means delivering, but with a strong implication of cost and risk. For the twofold sense of (רָדַם) the word translated grave, see above, on Ps. xvi. 10, and compare Ps. xxx. 10 (9.) The peculiar form of the possessive pronoun, in this verse and the one before it, has been represented as a proof of later date, but really belongs to the dialect of poetry, from which, in all languages, certain expressions are continually passing into that of common life, so that what in one age is poetical is in the next colloquial, and seems therefore to belong to the later period and to show the recent date of any composition in which it occurs. The familiar use of such words as ostentimes, perchance, etc. in our own day may thus be used hereafter to prove the writings of our older poets spurious. The figure of crowning, which occurs above in Ps. lxxv. 12 (11), suggests the ideas of dignity and beauty, while the absence of merit in the object, and the sovereign freeness of the gift, are indicated by making the crown itself a crown of mercy and compassions. The last word in Hebrew is expressive of the warmest and tenderest affections. See above, on Ps. xviii. 2 (1.) xxv. 6. xl. 12 (11.)

5. Filling with good thy soul—(then) is renewed, like the eagle, thy youth. The peculiar construction of the two preceding verses is continued through the first clause of the one before us, and then suddenly abandoned. Filling, the (one) filling, in the sense of satisfying or abundantly supplying, but without the accessory notion of satiety. See above, on Ps. lxxxii. 17 (16.) xci. 16. With good, literally the good, by way of eminence, the chief good or the real good. Thy soul is not a literal translation of the Hebrew term, which, in every other case where it occurs, means ornament or decoration. See for example Ps. xxxii. 9 (8.) The translations mouth, life, etc. are gratuitous conjectures from the context. The best explanation is that furnished by the analogous word (פְּבוֹדֶר) honour, glory, which is sometimes applied to the soul as the nobler part of man. See above, on Ps. xvi. 9. This explanation is confirmed by the frequent combination of the noun soul and the verb to satisfy. See above, Ps. lxxiii. 6 (5), and below, Ps. cvii. 9, and compare Isai. lviii. 11. It is also sanctioned by the ancient versions; for although the Targum makes it mean old age, a palpable conjecture, the Septuagint and Vulgate have desire (ἐπιθυμίας, desiderium), a frequent sense of (נַפְשׁוֹ) soul in Hebrew, and Jerome translates it literally, ornamentum. The word then is introduced into the translation of the second clause, in order to retain the Hebrew collocation, which is not without its emphasis. Is renewed, or retaining the reflexive form of the original, renews itself. The supposed allusion in this clause to a fabulous or real renovation of the eagle in its old age.

rests upon a misconception of the language, as the only point of comparison with the eagle is its strength and vigour, as in 2 Sam. i. 23. Isai. xl. 31, and the whole verse may be paraphrased as follows. 'So completely does his bounty feed thy strength, that even in old age thou growest young again, and soarest like an eagle.'

6. Doing righteousneses (is) Jehovah, and judgments for all oppressed. Thus far the reasons urged for praising God were personal, i. e. derived from individual experience. With these, from the very constitution of our nature, all our grateful exercises must begin. But if genuine they do not stop there, as the Psalmist, at this point, ascends from private causes of thanksgiving to more general views of God's administration, as a basis for the universal call with which the psalm concludes. The connection here may thus be stated. 'Such have been the Lord's compassions to myself, but these are only samples of his goodness. He is not only merciful to me, but to all who are oppressed, and to deliver whom he executes his judgments.' There is no contrast here intended between mercy and justice, with respect to different objects of the Lord's compassion. The meaning is, that man's injustice is redressed by God's mercy. The redemption of his people is often represented as coincident with the condign punishment of their oppressors. Compare my note on Isai. i. 27. Doing, i. e. practising in general, and executing in particular cases. The participle (doing) signifies habitual and constant action; the plural form (righteousneses) completeness and variety, adapted to all possible emergencies. Judgments, as usual, denotes judicial acts, as distinguished from mere attributes or principles.

7. He makes known his ways to Moses, to the children of Israel his (mighty) deeds. The general statement of the fact in the preceding verse is now followed by the great historical example furnished in Jehovah's dealings with his people. This serves, not only to illustrate what was said before, but to show that it was not a mere vague declaration of what God will do to all men, but a definite assertion of his purpose and his practice with respect to his own people. All the oppressed, to whom he grants or promises deliverance, are not mankind in general, without distinction or exception, but his own people when in that condition. The first clause contains an obvious allusion to the prayer of Moses, as recorded by himself, Ex. xxxiii. 13, from which passage it appears, that the ways of God, which he desired to know, were his modes of dealing with his people, or the course of his dispensations towards them. See above, on Ps. xxv. 4. lxvii. 3 (2.) The knowledge thus imparted was experimental or afforded by experience. The parallelism between Moses and the Children of Israel shows that the latter were represented by the former. The last Hebrew word is one constantly applied to God's exploits or mighty deeds in behalf of Israel. See above, on Ps. ix. 12 (11.) lxxviii. 11.

8. Compassionate and gracious (is) Jehovah, slow to anger, and rich in mercy. See above, on Ps. lxxvii. 10 (9.) lxxviii. 38. lxxxvi. 15, in all which cases, as in this, the terms of the description are borrowed from Ex. xxxiv. 6. There is here an evident progression in the thought. Not only is God good to me, but to all his people in distress; not only did he prove this to Moses and to Israel by saving them from Pharaoh and their other enemies, but by bearing with their own offences. The previous context might have seemed to concede innocence, if not merit, to God's people, as the object of his kind regard; but they are here exhibited as sinners, needing his forbearance and forgiveness.

9. Not to perpetuity will he strive, and not to eternity retain (his anger.) This of course implies that he is sometimes angry, even with his people, and sometimes strives in opposition to their strivings against him. But as he is always in the right, and they are always in the wrong, it is a signal proof of the divine compassion, that he does not strive and is not wroth forever. The first clause is closely copied by Isaiah (lvii. 16.) The second is itself derived from Lev. xix. 18, where we find a verb meaning to retain or reserve used absolutely in the sense of harbouring a grudge or cherishing a secret spite. This remarkable form of expression is copied in the case before us and in Nah. i. 2. Jer. iii. 5, 12. The original passage is a prohibition, in obeying which the Lord, as it were, here sets his people an example. Compare Matt. v. 48. 1 Cor. xi. 1. Eph. v. 1.

10. Not according to our sins has he done to us, and not according to our iniquities has he dealt with us. That the people stood in need of the divine forbearance, is now still more distinctly intimated. The last verb is the one of which the participle occurs in v. 2, and might here be rendered, with still closer adherence to the strict sense of the Hebrew preposition, has he bestowed upon us. See the same construction in the Hebrew of Ps. xiii. 6. cxvi. 7. cxlii. 8 (7.) The past tense has reference to the previous history of Israel as a nation, but involves the statement of a general truth. At the end of the verse, we may suppose it to be tacitly added: as he might have done, not only in strict justice, but in execution of his express threatening, Lev. xxvi. 21.

11, For as the heavens are high above the earth, mighty is his mercy above those that fear him. The Hebrew preposition is the same in both clauses, and cannot be varied in translation without weakening the sentence. In the last clause it suggests the ideas of descent from above, superior power, and protection, in addition to that of mere relation or direction, which is all that is conveyed by the translation to or towards. The force of the original is likewise impaired by substituting great for strong or mighty. The idea meant to be conveyed is not that of mere extent but of efficiency. The literal meaning of the first words is, like the height of the heavens, or like their being high. His fearers, or those fearing him, is a common description of the righteous or God's people, who are more particularly characterized in v. 18.

12. As far as the east is from the west, he hath put far from us our transgressions. The form of expression at the beginning is the same as in v. 11, like the distance of the east, or like its being far. The Hebrew words for east and west, according to their etymology, denote the place of sunrise and the place of evening. Put far from us, as no longer having anything to do with us, a figure which suggests the idea both of pardon and renewal, justification and sanctification.

13. As a father has compassion on (his) children, Jehovah has compassion on his fearers. The compound phrase, has compassion, is here substituted for the simple verb pity, in order to retain the preposition on, which follows it in Hebrew, and also because the plural form compassions was necessarily employed in v. 4 to translate the cognate noun. The Hebrew verb is peculiarly appropriate in speaking of parental love. See above, on Ps. xviii. 2 (1.) The preterite forms represent the fact alleged as one already known and well attested by experience.

14. For he knoweth our frame, mindful that dust (are) we. The fragility of man is here again assigned as a ground of the divine compassion. See above, on Ps. lxxviii. 39. lxxxix. 48 (47.) Frame, formation, constitution, or as we say familiarly in English, our make, or build. The Hebrew noun is derived from the verb used in Ps. lxxv. 9, and may therefore be intended to suggest the same idea that is there expressed. He who formed us knows of course how we are formed. The same noun is applied to the moral constitution, Gen. vi. 5, viii. 21, Deut. xxxi. 21. The word translated mindful is, in form, a passive participle, (זָכַר) meaning remembered, but equivalent in use to the active, remembering, or the verbal adjective mindful, just as the like form (בָּטַח) trusted is equivalent to trusting, Ps. cxii. 7, the English rejoiced to rejoicing, etc. We are dust, i. e. made of it, and tending to it. Compare Gen. ii. 7, iii. 19, Ps. xc. 3.

15. (As for) man, his days (are) like the grass; like the blossom of the field, so he blossoms. As the preceding verse expresses the fragility of man by referring to his origin and end, so this verse does the same by a familiar but beautiful comparison, borrowed from Ps. xc. 6, and repeated in Isai. xl. 6—8. Job xiv. 2. The very name here given to the race is one denoting frailty and infirmity. See above, on Ps. viii. 5 (4.)

16. For a breath passes over him and he is not, and no more shall his place know him. The pronouns may, with equal grammatical correctness, be referred to the grass and rendered it, its. The primary meaning of the first noun (breath) is, in this connection, stronger than the secondary (wind.) The wind may be a whirlwind; but to say that a mere breath is sufficient to destroy one is the strongest possible expression of fragility. That the wind is called the breath of God, as the thunder is his voice, is a striking and poetical but needless supposition. He is not or no more, there is none of him, no such thing or person. See above, on Ps. xxxvii. 10. With the first clause compare Isai. xl. 7; with the second, Job vii. 10. The last verb means to recognize or know again, as in Ps. cxlii. 5 (4), and the whole clause, that death makes men strangers to the objects with which they have been most familiar

17. And the mercy of Jehovah (is) from eternity even to eternity upon those fearing him, and his righteousness to children's children. Having carried the description of man's frailty to the furthest point, the Psalmist suddenly contrasts with it God's everlasting mercy. The use of the simple copulative and, in such a marked antithesis, where but might to us seem indispensable, is one of the most striking and familiar Hebrew idioms. Upon those fearing him suggests the idea of a gift from above. To children's children simply means given (or belonging) to them. Unless we make the last clause a threatening of hereditary vengeance to the wicked, his righteousness can only mean his rectitude, including his veracity and faithfulness in exercising covenanted mercy. Children's children, literally, sons of sons.

18. To the keepers of his covenant, and to the rememberers of his laws, to do them. This is the necessary qualification of a promise which might otherwise have seemed too absolute. Even to the descendants of those fearing him the promise availed nothing, unless they themselves were faithful to his covenant and obedient to his law. The last words (to do them) show that the remembrance of the law required was not merely intellectual but practical and tending to obedience.

19. Jehovah in the heavens has fixed his throne, and his kingdom over all rules. Not only is he infinitely merciful and faithful, but a universal and almighty sovereign, no less able than willing to fulfil his promises and execute his purposes of mercy. The word translated fixed, like its English representative, suggests the two ideas of preparing and establishing. The same combination with throne occurs above, Ps. ix. 8 (7.) See also Ps. xi. 4. xlvii. 9 (8.). Over all; the original expression is still stronger, over the whole, the universe, τὸ πᾶν. The same phrase is applied to the entire human race, Ps. xiv. 3. The past tense of the last verb represents this unlimited dominion as already established or revealed. The future would have made its ulterior continuance the prominent idea.

20. Bless Jehovah, ye his angels, mighty in strength, doing his word, (so as) to listen to the voice of his word. Having finished his assertion of God's claims to universal praise, the Psalmist resumes the tone of exhortation with which he began. His appeal, however, is no longer to his own soul, but to the hosts of heaven, the noblest of God's creatures, the highest order of finite intelligences. Mighty in strength, more exactly, mighty (ones) of strength, or, as the first word is applied as a substantive to warriors or conquerors, heroes of strength or mighty heroes. See above, on Ps. xxiv. 8. lxxviii. 25. The construction in the last clause is obscure. The infinitive may here have the force of a gerund, audiendo, auscultando, by listening to the voice of his word, or, as in Ps. lxxviii. 18, it may denote the extent or the effect of their obedience, so as to hearken, or so that they hearken, i. e. listen for the faintest intimation of his will. The expression hearken to his voice, as thus applied, is a Mosaic one. See Deut. xxvi. 17. xxx. 20.

21. Bless Jehovah, ye his hosts, his ministers, the doers of his will. As the word hosts is applied both to the angels and the heavenly bodies (see above, on Ps. xxiv. 10), some interpreters, in order to relieve this verse of a tautology, suppose it to relate to the heavenly hosts in one sense, as the preceding verse does in another. In the same way they account for the change of expression in the last clause. Only intelligent creatures can be literally said to listen for God's word and to obey it; but even the inanimate creation may be said, without a metaphor, to execute his will. This last phrase occurs also in Ps. xl. 9 (8.)

22. Bless ye Jehovah, all his works, in all places of his realm; bless thou, O my soul, Jehovah! The angels and heavenly bodies, with men and every other creature, are now summed up in the comprehensive phrase, all his works, i. e. all that he has made, all creatures, and invited to bless God, which invitation the Psalmist then addresses once more to himself, and thus, by a beautiful transition, brings us back to the point from which we started.

P S A L M C I V .

WE have here another of those psalms, in which the hopes of God's people are excited and their faith strengthened by a view of the authority and providential care which he exercises over the creation. The sum of the whole psalm is contained in the first verse, and its application indicated in the last. Here, as in Ps. viii, xix, xxix, lxxv, the description of God's glory, as exhibited in nature, is entirely subservient to a moral and religious purpose, and the psalm is therefore fully entitled to a place in the collection, and adapted to the permanent use of the church. The arrangement of the psalm is founded on the history of the creation, but with such variations as were suited to the writer's purpose. After a general statement of this purpose, v. 1, the Psalmist traces the creative and providential agency of God in the works of the first and second day, vs. 2—5, then in that of the third, vs. 6—18, then in that of the fourth, vs. 19—23, then in that of the fifth, vs. 24—26, with an allusion to the rest of the seventh day in v. 31. The psalm closes with a summary statement of the dependence of all living creatures upon God's care and bounty, vs. 27—32, a resolution to glorify him accordingly, vs. 33—34, and a pregnant inference, that they who are under such protection have nothing to fear from human enemies, v. 35. According to Hengstenberg, this and the two next psalms compose a trilogy added to the Davidic one immediately preceding (Ps. ci—ciii) about the time of the Babylonish exile. This hypothesis, he thinks, accounts for the occurrence of Davidic psalms in this part of the Psalter, which would otherwise have found their place among the Psalms of David in the first division of the book. But having been made the basis or the nucleus of later compositions, they were naturally placed with these in their proper chronological position.

1. Bless, oh my soul, Jehovah! Oh Jehovah, my God, thou art great exceedingly; honour and majesty hast thou put on. The resemblance of the first clause to Ps. ciii. 1 shows the designed connection of the two psalms. The remainder of the verse is a kind of response to this invocation, and contains, as it were, the words in which his soul does actually bless God. At the same time it exhibits in advance the sum and substance of the whole composition, the design of which is to describe the glories of creation and providence as the royal robe of the divine sovereign. Compare Ps. xlv. 4 (3.) xciii. 1. xevi. 6. Job xl. 10. Isai. li. 9.

2. Wearing light like a robe, spreading heaven like a curtain. In carrying out the idea summarily stated in the first verse, he begins where the cosmogony in Genesis begins, with the light and the firmament, not the act of their creation, but their use, as the Creator's robe and curtain. It follows of course that light and heaven must be taken in their popular and ordinary sense, and not as denoting the heaven of heavens and the light inaccessible in which he is elsewhere represented as dwelling. The definite forms of the original, the robe, the curtain, as contrasted with the vaguer forms, light, heaven, may be intended to suggest the idea of the robe and curtain known and used in common life, which man puts on and stretches out with perfect ease, but not more easily than God puts on the light and stretches out the sky. Compare Gen i. 6. Isai. xl. 22. Job. ix. 8.

3. Framing with water his halls ; making clouds his conveyance ; moving on wings of the wind. The first word means laying beams or rafters. The next phrase may either mean in or with water. The first is more obvious, the last more striking, as it represents a solid building, made of a liquid or fluid material. In the other case the waters meant are those above the firmament. See Gen. i. 6, 7. Ps. xviii. 12 (11), where the clouds and the wings of the wind are also mentioned in the same connection. The word translated halls denotes the highest room of an oriental house, which is frequently the largest. Hence the frequent mention, in the New Testament, of the δπερῶον as a place of assembly. Making, literally, setting, placing. Chariot is too specific a translation of the Hebrew word, which means anything on which a person rides. The preposterous figure of walking on wings belongs entirely to the versions, ancient and modern. The Hebrew word, though often so applied, is a generic one, denoting all progressive movement, and nearly equivalent to our word going, which is not so agreeable, however, in this place, to English usage, as the more general and poetical term moving. See above, on Ps. xviii. 11 (10.)

4. Making his angels winds, his ministers flaming fire. According to the simplest and most obvious construction of this verse, it can only mean that God makes his angels or ministering spirits swift and ardent in his service. But such a statement would be wholly out of place in a psalm, the rest of which relates exclusively to the material creation. The best interpreters are therefore of opinion that angels and ministers are predicates not subjects, or in other words, that the idea meant to be conveyed is, that he makes the winds his messengers or angels, and the flaming fire his minister or servant. This agrees exactly with the previous declaration that he makes the clouds his chariot or conveyance, and moves upon the wings of the wind. It may seem, however, to be inconsistent with the use made of the passage in

Heb. 1. 7, as a proof that the angels are inferior to the Son of God. But how could this inferiority be proved by the fact that the angels are spirits, or even wind and fire? The latter cannot be literally true, and if metaphorical, can only mean that they are swift and ardent in God's service, which they might be and yet equal to the Son in nature, who, considered as a messenger or agent of the Father, exhibits precisely the same qualities. The truth is that the passage, as thus understood, is perfectly irrelevant and useless to the argument, and therefore that this mode of explaining it is not entitled to the preference, whatever difficulties may attend the other. Let it be observed, too, that the Septuagint version, which is quoted in Heb. i. 7, is an exact transcript of the Hebrew, both as to the sense and collocation of the words, so that if the original admits of a different construction, it may be extended to the version likewise. The most satisfactory conclusion is, that the words are not quoted as an argument or proof of the inferiority of angels, but merely as a striking yet familiar form of words in which to clothe the writer's own idea, which is this, that angels are mere messengers and ministers, and as such may be classed with the material agencies which God employs in execution of his purpose. The wind and the lightning are God's angels and his ministers, and are expressly so described in the Old Testament; but they are never called his sons, much less addressed directly as the sovereign, eternal, righteous, ever-blessed God. Nor are the ministering spirits, who share with these material agencies the character of messengers and servants, ever so described or so addressed. By thus supplying the suppressed links of the chain of argument, the verse before us, in the only sense of which the context really admits, will be found not only as appropriate as the other to the purpose for which it is quoted in the New Testament, but incomparably more so.

5. He founded the earth on its bases ; it shall not be moved for- ever and ever. The idea of bases is rather suggested by the context, and especially the verb founded, than expressed by the Hebrew noun itself, which properly means places, or more specifically, fixed and settled places. See above, on Ps. lxxxix. 15 (14.) xcvii. 2, and with the whole verse compare Ps. lxxviii. 69. lxxxix. 12 (11.) cii. 26 (25.)

6. (With) the deep, like a garment, thou didst cover it; above the mountains stand the waters. Next in importance to the separation of the land and water in the beginning (Gen. i. 9, 10), was the temporary confounding of the two in the universal deluge (Gen. vii. 19, 20), which the Psalmist therefore here connects with the creation, as equally demonstrative of almighty power, and also for the purpose of founding on this seeming violation of the promise in the last clause of v. 5, a still more solemn repetition of it. The grammatical objection that the pronoun in the phrase didst cover it is masculine, and cannot therefore refer to earth which is feminine, is easily removed by a reference to the general license of the Hebrew syntax with respect to genders, and the idiomatic tendency to use the masculine, not as a distinctive but as a generic form, in cases where the subject is sufficiently indicated by the context. There are moreover several clear examples of the masculine construction of this very noun (עָרֶץ) besides those in which earth or land is put for its inhabitants. See e. g. Gen. xiii. 6. Isai. ix. 18. The allusion in the last clause to Gen. vii. 19, 20, is too plain to be mistaken.

7. At thy rebuke they flee, at the voice of thy thunder they hasten away. The same power that produced the deluge put an end to it. The verbs agree with waters in v. 6. The divine command that they should cease or disappear is poetically spoken of as a rebuke. See above, on Ps. xviii. 16 (15.) lxxvi. 7 (6), and compare Isai. l. 2. The Hebrew particle means from, denoting both the time and cause of the effect described. The last verb is a passive meaning strictly to be panic-struck, or to flee in consequence of being panic-struck. See above, on Ps. xxxi. 23 (22.) xlvi. 6 (5.) The voice of thy thunder may be literally understood to mean the sound of thunder, or, according to a well-known Hebrew idiom, thy voice of thunder, or thy thundering voice.

8. They go up mountains, they go down valleys, to this place thou hast founded for them. The first clause is a beautiful description of the fluctuations which attend the subsidence of swollen waters, not only in the case of Noah's flood (Gen. viii. 4—5) to which the words relate in the first instance, but in all other cases, where the same rule still holds good, so that the verse, by an insensible transition, founds the statement of a general truth on that of a particular event. The use of the demonstrative (this) is highly idiomatic. The original construction is, to a place, this (which) thou hast founded for them. This form of expression is equivalent to pointing with the hand, and therefore adds not a little to the graphic vividness of the description.

9. A bound thou didst set, they shall not pass over, they shall not return to cover the earth. This grand exception to the law which governs the relations between land and water is the only one to be permitted or expected. The limits broken were renewed with an assurance that henceforth they should be inviolable. See Gen. ix. 15. Besides the immediate reference to the flood, the verse contains the statement of a general fact in the economy of nature, and thus furnishes a natural transition to the similar statements of the next verse.

10. Sending springs into the valleys; between hills they go. The participial construction, interrupted by the parenthetical account of the flood, is here resumed, the participle, like the others, agreeing directly with Jehovah understood, as the (one) sending, which is the precise form of the original. See above, on Ps. ciii. 3—6. Springs or fountains, not in the restricted sense, but comprehending both the source and stream, as in Joel iv. 18 (iii. 18.) The word translated valleys is restricted in usage to such as have streams flowing through them. The last word is the one translated walketh by the English Bible in v. 3 above, but here run, although walk is given in the margin, as a more precise and literal translation, while Jerome inserts it in his text, ut inter medios montes ambulent.

11. They water every beast of the field ; (at them) wild asses quench their thirst. The subject of the first verb is still the waters. The verb itself means to water, in the sense of giving drink to animals, though sometimes metaphorically applied to irrigation. See Gen. ii. 10. The form of the parallelism in this verse is peculiar, although not uncommon in Hebrew poetry, the last clause containing a specification of the general statement in the first. What is first said of animals, or wild ones in the general, is then said of the wild ass in particular. Quench, literally, break, i. e. subdue, assuage. A derivative noun is applied in Hebrew to corn or grain, as that which breaks or assuages hunger, although most interpreters and lexicographers suppose a reference to the literal breaking or grinding of the corn itself.

12. Above them the birds of heaven dwell, from between the branches they give voice. The poetical character of the composition is in nothing more obvious than in these minute strokes of exquisite painting, superadded to the more essential parts of the description. At the same time, these are not to be regarded as mere lavish or gratuitous embellishments, since the Psalmist's purpose is to celebrate God's wonderful and bountiful provision for his living creatures, and the running brooks would fail to answer one of their most valuable ends, if there were no birds to give voice or sing among the branches of the overhanging trees. The word translated birds is a collective answering to the old English fowl, not as used in the version of this psalm, where it is plural, but in that of Gen. i. 20, 22, 26, 28. That passage furnishes an explanation of the phrase fowl (or birds) of heaven, in the fuller description (Gen. i. 20), fowl that may fly above the earth in the open firmament of heaven, i. e. through the air, across the face of the expanse or visible heaven.

13. Watering mountains from his upper rooms—from the fruit of thy works is the earth filled. He still returns to God as the author of these merciful provisions, and represents him, by a beautiful figure, as pouring this abundant supply of water from his upper rooms, the same word that was rendered halls in v. 3; but here the connection seems to require that its precise etymological import should be prominent. The fruit of thy works, the result or product of thy creative energy. Filled, not in the sense of being occupied, which would require a different Hebrew verb, but in that of being abundantly supplied or saturated. See above, on Ps. ciii. 5. The sudden apostrophe to God himself enhances the poetical effect.

14. Causing grass to grow for the cattle and herb for the culture of man, (so as) to bring forth bread from the earth. In this verse there is a transition from God's care of the inferior animals to his care of man. The word translated herb denotes any green plant or vegetable, and is here applied to such as constitute or furnish human food. The common version of the next words, for the service of man, can only mean for his benefit or use, a sense not belonging to the Hebrew word, which, as well as its verbal root, is applied to man's servitude or bondage as a tiller of the ground (Gen. iii. 17—19), and has here the sense of husbandry or cultivation, as in Ex. i. 14. Lev. xxv. 39, it has that of compulsory or servile labour. The infinitive in the last clause indicates the object for which labour is imposed on man.

15. And wine gladdens the heart of man—(so as) to make his face shine more than oil—and bread the heart of man sustains. The general expression at the end of v. 14 is now rendered more specific by distinctly mentioning the great staples of production and subsistence in the Holy Land. The only doubt is whether two or three are mentioned. The text of the English Bible makes oil a distinct item in the catalogue, and oil to make his face to shine. But this is an impossible construction of the Hebrew, in which the infinitive (to make shine) bears the same relation to what goes before as the infinitive (to bring forth) in the verse preceding, and is therefore expressive not of a distinct cause and effect, but of a consequence resulting from the one just mentioned. The true construction is given in the margin of the English Bible, to make his face shine with oil, or more than oil. To the first of these alternative translations it may be objected that wine cannot make men's faces shine with oil, unless there is allusion to the festive unctions of the ancients, which however were restricted to the head. The other, therefore, seems to be the true sense, in which oil is merely mentioned as a shining substance. The description of food as sustaining the heart is very ancient. See Gen. xviii. 5. Judg. xix. 8.

16. Full are the trees of Jehovah; the cedars of Lebanon which he planted. Full, i. e. abundantly supplied, saturated as in v. 13. The English versions supply sap; but the idea suggested by the context is the more general one of moisture, irrigation. The mutual relation of the clauses is the same as in v. 11. What is first said of trees, or of the noblest trees, in general, is then said of the cedars in particular. The trees of Jehovah, like the cedars of God in Ps. lxxx. 11 (10), are those which he has planted (Num. xxiv. 6), those which, by their loftiness or fruitfulness or beauty, bear the strongest impress of their Maker's hand. The cedars of Lebanon are often mentioned as the noblest and most famous of their kind. See above, on Ps. xxix. 5. xcii. 13 (12.)

17. Where the (small) birds nestle; (as to) the stork, the cypresses (are) her house. He again recurs to the provision made for birds, which is here connected with the trees, as it is in v. 12. The word translated birds is not the one there used, but the same with that in Ps. lxxxiv. 4 (3.) cii. 7, where it is commonly translated sparrow, though supposed to be a general term for small birds, so called from their chirping, twittering noise. Here it may represent the smaller and the stork the larger class of birds. The Hebrew name of the stork means merciful or pious, and is supposed to have reference to the natural kindness of that bird, both to its parents and its young. Nestle or build their nests. The choice between the old translation, fir-trees, and the new one, cypresses, is exegetically unimportant.

18. Mountains, the high (ones), are for the wild-goats—rocks (are) a refuge for the conies. The idea seems to be, that even the wildest situations, and the most inaccessible to man, afford shelter and subsistence to some form of life, and are therefore proofs of the divine benevolence and wisdom. Of the names of animals here mentioned, the first occurs also in the book of Job (xxxix. 1); the second in the lists of unclean beasts, Lev. xi. 5. Deut. xiv. 7; and both in the writings of Solomon, Prov. v. 19. xxx. 26. Of the second, various explanations have been given, but none of them more probable than that derived from the rabbinical tradition. Nor is the question of the slightest exegetical importance, since the only peculiarities involved are those suggested by the text itself, to wit, that the animals intended must be such as inhabit rocks and mountains. Some supply a refuge in the first clause from the second; but a better sense is yielded by the simpler construction, they belong to (or are intended for) the wild goats, which agrees exactly with the drift of the whole psalm to show that all parts of the inanimate creation contribute something to the comfort of the living sentient creature.

19. He made the moon for seasons; the sun knows his setting
 Even the heavenly bodies have a reference to man's advantage. The moon is a measure of time, and the sun defines the period of active labor. The word translated seasons is the plural of the one translated set time in Ps. lxxv. 3 (2.) cii. 14, and the same that means assemblies in Ps. lxxiv. 4, 8. It is here put for all divisions of time, including the succession of day and night, to which there is perhaps a special reference, as in the other clause, where the meaning seems to be, that the sun knows when and where to set, and does not make the day, with its attendant toils, perpetual. This is a strong poetical description of an obvious and familiar fact, and no more presupposes a particular theory or system of astronomy than the similar language of uninspired poets among ourselves.

20. Thou makest darkness and it is night; in it begins to move every beast of the forest. The first verb in Hebrew means to set or place, but is used precisely as a word of the same meaning is in v. 3. Its abbreviated form does not indicate an optative meaning, but is substituted for the full form by poetic license. It is night, or night is, night begins to be. The same inceptive meaning is expressed in the translation of the third verb, which denotes animal motion, but is specially applied to that of reptiles. The idea of a secret, stealthy motion, as suggested by the common version (do creep forth), can hardly be intended, as the context shows the main idea of the passage to be this, that as the day affords a time for active motion to mankind and to domestic animals, the night affords a like time for the wilder beasts, or beasts of the forest, an expression which occurs above, in Ps. l. 10

21. The young lions roaring for the prey, and to seek from God their food. By translating the participle and infinitive both as presents, the common version makes this a distinct proposition. But in Hebrew it forms part of the preceding sentence, and contains a specification of the general statement there made. When night comes on, all the beasts of the forest are aroused, and among the rest the lion, roaring for his prey, (is roused) to seek his food from God. This last expression implies no such purpose on the lion's part, but merely that he seeks what can only be bestowed by an almighty being, which idea is suggested by the name of God here used.

22. The sun rises—they are gathered—and in their dens lie down. The first clause may also be translated, let the sun rise, they are gathered, or paraphrased in more accordance with our idiom, when the sun rises they are gathered; but neither of these constructions is so striking and poetical as the exact version first above given. Gathered, i. e. called in from their wanderings and dispersions. The word translated dens means abodes or homes, and is a cognate form to that in Ps. xc. 1; but the form here used is specially applied to the lairs or resting places of wild beasts, not only here but in Am. iii. 4. The last verb is also one appropriated to the lying down of animals. See above, on Ps. xxiii. 2. The construction is a pregnant one: they lie down to (or into) their dens, i. e. go into them and lie down.

23. Forth goes man to his work, and to his labour until evening This verse presents the day-scene corresponding to the night-scene of the two preceding verses. When night comes on, the beasts of the forest are in motion; when the sun appears, they gather to their lairs, and man comes forth to labour until evening, when the scene is shifted as before. Leaving out of view all higher claims to admiration and respect, the poetical merit of this whole description is of the highest order. The word translated labour is the same that was translated culture in v. 14.

24. How manifold are thy works, Jehovah; all of them in wisdom hast thou wrought; full is the earth of thy riches. The first verb in Hebrew strictly means are many, but as the context has respect to the variety, and not to the mere number, of God's works, the sense is well conveyed by the term used in the English versions (manifold.) Works and wrought represent a cognate verb and noun in Hebrew, a combination which adds point and animation to the sentence. The last word in the verse is derived from a verb which means to acquire, either by creation or by purchase. While the noun, therefore, strictly denotes acquisitions or possessions, its etymological affinities would instantly suggest to every Hebrew reader the idea of creation, as the ultimate source of these possessions, a modification of the thought which cannot be conveyed by any mere translation.

25. Here is the sea, great and wide on all hands; there are moving things, and without number, small animals with great. The exclamation or reflection in the preceding verse affords a transition to the survey of other parts of the creation, not included in the catalogue before recited, yet no less striking in themselves, and as proofs or illustrations of the Maker's wisdom. Such is the sea, or here for instance is the sea, are the phrases which would probably be used in our idiom, to introduce the first example. The same thing was probably intended by the Hebrew phrase, this (is) the sea, as if the speaker at the same time pointed to it. See above, on v. 8. Wide of both hands is another idiomatic phrase used also by Moses (Gen. xxxiv. 21) and Isaiah (xxxiii. 21.) It obviously means stretching out in all directions. The sense of hand, as thus used, is the same as in the English phrase on all hands, and is probably derived from the use of the right and left hand to distinguish position or direction. Moving things is here used to translate a single Hebrew word (רָמַשׁ), the cognate noun of the verb employed in v. 20 to denote animal motion. It is applied to marine animals, as here, in Gen. i. 9. Ps. lxix. 35 (34.) The use of the word beasts, in the common version of the last clause, is not consistent with its modern usage, which restricts it to terrestrial quadrupeds.

26. There the ships go—Leviathan—this (that) thou hast formed to play therein. While the ships connect the sea with man's activity and interests, Leviathan, the standing representative of aquatic monsters, may be here put for the population of the sea itself. To play therein, as in his native element. Compare Job xl. 20. The idiomatic use of this is like that in v. 25. The word translated go, in the common version of the first clause, is the same that was rendered walk in v. 3, and run in v. 10.

27. All of them on thee rely, to give their food in its season. The all of them obviously relates to all the living creatures previously mentioned, and not to any one or more exclusively, the proposition being no less true of men than brutes, or of brutes than men. On thee rely is not an exact translation of the Hebrew, which indeed does not admit of one, because it combines a verb and preposition which cannot be combined in English. The form of the original is, to thee wait, expect, or hope, the verb expressing confidence, the particle the act of looking towards the object thus confided in. The description of the animals as thus expecting their supplies from God, is merely the poetical costume in which the Psalmist clothes the fact, that they are really, although unconsciously, dependent on him. In precisely the same manner, other poets represent the earth, in time of drought, as parched with thirst and longing for the rain, which expressions no sane man would either charge with falsehood, or consider as implying a belief in the conscious personality of Earth Compare my note on Isai. xlii. 4 In its season, i. e. when they need it.

28. Thou givest to them, they gather; thou openest thy hand, they are filled (with) food. The point of the significant antithesis is this, that God as easily bestows as they receive. He has only to give, they have only to gather. He has but to open his hand, and they are instantly provided, even to satiety. Filled, satisfied, abundantly supplied, as in v. 13. The verb rendered gather means to pick up or collect from the ground. It is used in the history of the manna (Ex. xvi. 1, 5, 16), to which there is obvious allusion. The act of gathering from the ground seems to presuppose a previous throwing down from heaven. The common version, that (meaning what) thou givest them they gather, weakens the sentence, if it does not render it unmeaning

29. Thou hidest thy face, they are confounded; thou withdrawest their breath, they expire, and to their dust return. The hiding of God's face is the opposite of looking with a favourable aspect. See above, on Ps. xiii. 2 (1.) It here means the suspension or withdrawing of the various benefits before described. They are troubled is, in every case, a feeble version of one of the strongest words in the language, which has been already more than once explained. Even confounded, though much stronger, does not perfectly convey the idea, which is that of being agitated, terror-stricken, or convulsed. See above, on Ps. ii. 5. lxxviii. 33. xc. 7 Their breath, the vital principle imparted by the Spirit of God (Gen. ii. 7), who is the God of the spirits of all flesh, i. e. the author of all life whatever. See Num. xvi. 22. xxvii. 16, and compare Heb. xii. 9. The verb expire is used in the account of the destruction of all living creatures by the flood, Gen. vii. 21, 22, to which there is no doubt allusion, as there is in the next clause to Gen. iii. 19. Compare Ps. xc. 3 ciii. 14. Ecc. xii. 7

Their dust, their own, their native dust, to which they belong, and from which they sprang.

30. Thou sendest thy breath, they are created, and thou renewest the face of the earth. The absolute power of God over the life of his creatures is expressed by representing him as annihilating and creating the whole race at pleasure, by a breath. With equal correctness we might read thy spirit, but thy breath is more poetical, and therefore better suited to the context as the primary meaning, though the spirit be really intended. They are created refers the effect more directly to God's power than they live or they revive would do. In the last clause there is evident allusion to the renovation of the earth desolated by the flood, and the joyous change of its face or aspect when re-peopled.

31. Let the glory of Jehovah be forever ; let Jehovah rejoice in his works. The optative form of the first verb here determines the meaning of the other. It would also be grammatical, though much less natural in this connection, to regard the abbreviated form of the first verb as a mere poetic license, and explain both as futures proper. The glory of Jehovah shall be to eternity ; Jehovah shall rejoice in his works. The grammatical question is of less importance, because one of these senses really implies the other. The wish is not for something doubtful but infallibly certain, and the prediction is in strict accordance with the wish of him who utters it. In this verse some interpreters suppose an allusion to God's satisfaction in his own work of creation when he rested from it on the seventh day. See Gen. ii. 1, 2.

32. He that looks at the earth and it quakes, touches the hills and they smoke. There is something in the form of this verse similar to that of v. 28. God has only to look at the earth to make it quake. He has only to touch the mountains and they smoke. His controlling and terrifying acts are as prompt and easy as his acts of grace. There seems to be a reference to the words of Moses in describing the effects of the theophany at Sinai, when its summit smoked, and its very roots or bases were on fire. See Ex. xix. 18. Deut. xxxii. 22. To those familiar with the constant use of mountains as a symbol of great monarchies, this verse would necessarily suggest the thought, that God's power over states is no less absolute than that which he exercises over individuals, or over the inanimate creation.

33. I will sing to Jehovah while I live, I will make music to my God while I still (exist.) This is the Psalmist's conclusion from the view which he has taken, with respect to his own interest and duty. If the Lord be such a God to all his creatures, then I can do no better than expend the remainder of my life in praising him. The two verbs are those continually joined to denote vocal and instrumental praise. The closing words of each clause, and especially the second, have a highly idiomatic character. The phrase translated while I live means literally in my life or lives. The corresponding one can scarcely be translated, as it is composed of the preposition in, the adverb yet or still, and the pronoun of the first person, in my yet, i. e. in my (being) yet, while I still am, or continue to exist.

34. Sweet shall be of him my meditation; I will rejoice in Jehovah. The ancient versions and the Prayer Book, with some of the best interpreters, put an optative sense upon the first clause, may my thought (or speech) be acceptable to him. In favour of this interpretation is the fact that a synonymous verb, followed by the same preposition (לְ), means to be pleasing to a person, in I s. xvi. 6. In favour of the other is the want of anything to indicate a wish, and the parallelism of the second clause, which relates to the expression of his own feelings towards Jehovah, not to the dispositions of Jehovah towards himself. Thus understood, the whole verse completes the Psalmist's practical conclusion from the view which he has taken of God's power, wisdom, and goodness, namely, that the knowledge and possession of this God is happiness.

35. Consumed are sinners from the earth, and (as for) wicked men, they are no more. Bless, oh my soul, Jehovah. Hallelujah! This verse has no perceptible connexion, either with the verse immediately before it, or with the general drift of the whole psalm, except upon the supposition, that the whole psalm was intended to derive, from the view of God's authoritative care over his works, an encouraging assurance that his people must be safe; that he who feeds and shelters the inferior animals, and makes provision for the physical necessities of men in general, cannot fail to provide for the security and happiness of those whom he has set apart for himself, or to free them from the malice of those sinners who are equally the enemies of God and of his people. The psalm, like the one before it, closes with the same words which began it. The last word, Hallelujah (praise ye Jah), occurs here for the first time, and is supposed by some to form no part of the original composition, but to have been added for the purpose of adapting it to some public service at a later date

PSALM CV.

THIS, like the Seventy-Eighth, is a historical psalm, recounting God's ancient dealings with his people, especially in Egypt. The practical design of the commemoration is not to bring the people to repentance, as in the case referred to, but to excite their hopes of an analogous deliverance. According to a theory already mentioned, this is the second member of a trilogy, added to one of older date (Ps. ci—ciii) during the time of the captivity. It differs from the psalm before it in deriving from history the same consolation which is there derived from nature. After the introduction, vs. 1—7, the arrangement is simply chronological, beginning with the promise to Abraham, and ending with the conquest of Canaan, vs. 8—44. The first fifteen verses of this psalm are found in 1 Chron. xvi, combined with Ps. xevi and three verses of Ps. cvi. See above, on Ps. xevi. 1.

1. Give thanks unto Jehovah, call upon his name, make known among the nations his exploits. The original meaning of the second phrase is, call (him) by his name, i. e. give him the descriptive title most expressive of his divine perfections; or more specifically, call him by his name Jehovah, i. e. ascribe to him the attributes which it denotes, to wit, eternity and self-existence, together with that covenant relation to his people, which though not denoted by the name was constantly associated with it, and therefore necessarily suggested by it. The meaning of the next phrase is obscured, if not entirely concealed, in the common version, among the people. The plural form and sense of the original expression are essential to the writer's purpose, which is to glorify the God of Israel among all nations. See above, on Ps. xviii. 50 (49.) lvii. 10 (9.) For the meaning of the last word, see above, on Ps. ciii. 7.

2. Sing to him, play to him, muse on all his wondrous deeds. The exhortation seems to be addressed to the Gentiles, who are called upon to join in the praises and to share the blessings of the chosen people. For the meaning of the last verb, see above, on Ps. civ. 34.

3. Glory in his holy name! Glad shall be the heart of those who seek Jehovah. Congratulate yourselves that you possess a right and interest in the favour of so glorious a Being. The last clause presents as an inducement, that to seek the favour of this God is a source, and by implication the only source, of joy and happiness. Compare Ps. xxxiv. 3 (2.) xl. 17 (16.) lxix. 7 (6.)

4 Seek Jehovah and his strength, seek his face evermore. The Hebrew verbs, although synonymous, are not identical. And his strength, the protection secured by his almighty power. Seek him, not as a finite being, but as the omnipotent Jehovah, the source, as well as the possessor, of all strength. Seek his face, not merely his presence, but his countenance, his favourable look or aspect. With the several expressions of this verse compare Ps. ix. 11 (10.) x. 4. xiv. 2. xxiv. 6. xxxiv. 5 (4) lxi. 4 (3.) lxii. 8 (7.) lxiii. 3 (2.) lxviii. 35 (34) xevi. 7.

5. Remember his wondrous deeds which he did, his miracles and the judgments of his mouth. They are exhorted not to forget them, as Israel is charged with doing, Ps. lxxviii. 11. Miracles, prodigies or wonders, proofs of divine power. There is no need of identifying these with the judgments of his mouth, which include his laws and the sentences pronounced upon his enemies. The latter is probably the prominent idea as best suited to this context.

6. Ye seed of Abraham his servant, ye sons of Jacob, his chosen (ones.) Descendants of the patriarchs, and therefore heirs of the patriarchal promises. The common version of the last phrase (his chosen), though exact, conveys a wrong idea, as it seems to make chosen an epithet of Jacob, which would also seem to be required by the parallelism; but the Hebrew word is plural and describes the object of address as the church or chosen people. Compare Isai. lxxv. 9. Abraham is called the Servant of God, in an emphatic sense, as being his chosen instrument and confidential agent. See above, on Ps. xviii. 1, and compare Ps. xc. 1 The parallel passage (1 Chr. xvi. 13) has Israel his servant.

7. He is Jehovah our God; in all the earth (are) his judgments. His covenant relations are with us the seed of Abraham; but the proofs of his existence and vindicatory justice are common to all nations. This whole introduction seems intended to dispose both Jews and Gentiles to the praise of God.

8. He remembered forever his covenant, the word he commanded for a thousand generations. There is here a kind of antithetical allusion to the exhortation in v. 5. They should remember what he did, since he remembers what he promised. What he has done involves a pledge of what he will do. He has remembered (and will remember) his covenant to eternity. The word is the word of promise. He is said to have commanded it, partly because his promise is conditional and annexed to his commandment, and for that reason called a covenant; partly because all that God says must of necessity be said with authority, so that even his promises partake of the nature of commands. The last phrase, a thousand generations, is Mosaic. See Deut. vii. 9, and compare Ex. xx. 6.

9. Which he ratified with Abraham, and his oath to Isaac. The sentence is continued from the foregoing verse. Ratified, literally cut; see above, on Ps. i. 5. His oath (which he swore) to Isaac, or, his oath for (the benefit of) Isaac. The distinction, if any be intended, is that the covenant was formally made only with Abraham, and merely sanctioned or confirmed by oath to his successors. See Gen. xv. 18. xxvi. 3. xxviii. 13. His oath is governed by remembered in v. 8. Compare Ps. lxxxix. 28, 34 (27, 33.)

10. And confirmed it to Jacob for a statute, to Israel (for) an everlasting covenant. Confirmed it, literally, made (or let) it stand, instead of suffering it to expire with the person to whom it was originally given. A statute, in the wide sense of a permanent arrangement, a perpetual constitution, or, as it is called in the last clause, a compact of eternity, an everlasting covenant. See Gen. xxviii. 13. xxxv. 12.

11 Saying, To thee will I give the land of Canaan, as the portion of your heritage. The subject or substance of the promise is now more distinctly stated. The word translated portion primarily means a line, especially a measuring line, and then what is measured by it, to wit, a piece of land, a lot of ground. This was not to be given to the patriarchs in person, but to their descendants, as the portion of their heritage or their hereditary portion. The plural your may refer, however, to the patriarchs themselves, as the promise was repeated to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.

12. When as yet they could be numbered—very few, and strangers in it. The first clause involves an antithetical allusion to the promise, afterwards fulfilled, that they should be innumerable as the stars, or as the sand upon the shore, Gen. xxii. 17. The form of the original is highly idiomatic, in their being ven of number, like a little, or like littleness itself. See above, on Ps. lxxiii. 2, and compare Isai. i. 9. Strangers, sojourners, living on the lands of others, at their will, or by their sufferance. See above, on Ps. xxxix. 13 (12.) In it, the land of Canaan, mentioned in the preceding verse. The whole verse qualifies the previous account of the patriarchal covenant, which was not made with Israel when already a great nation, but with their ancestors when few in number and without a settled home. The parallel passage (1 Chron. xvi. 19) has when ye wer. See Gen. xxxiv. 30, and compare Deut. xxxiii. 6 Isai. x. 1§

13. And they went about from nation to nation, from kingdom to another people. This may be regarded as in contrast with v. 12, and (yet) they went about, notwithstanding their small number and their being strangers. Or vs. 12, 13, may be the protasis of the sentence, and v. 14 its apodosis. 'When they were few and strangers, and went from nation to nation, he let no man, etc.' This verse describes the characteristic feature in the condition of the chosen people, during the patriarchal period of their history, namely, their migratory intercourse with various nations. These are mentioned in the first clause as distinct races, in the last as distinct states or bodies politic. Where we might have expected from kingdom to kingdom, the ear is somewhat disappointed by the phrase from kingdom to another people, which may have been intended to distinguish the Egyptian and other monarchies from the more democratical or patriarchal institutions of the Arabians and other nations. They went about seems to be the force of the reflexive or frequentative verb, as distinguished from that of the primitive, they went. See above, on Ps. xxvi. 3. xxxv. 14. ci. 2, and compare Gen. v. 22. xvii. 1. xxiv. 6, 9, 40. xlviii. 15.

14. He suffered no man to oppress them, and reproved, for their sake, kings. The precise sense of the first clause is, he suffered not man (or men in general) to oppress them. The protection of the patriarchs is certainly one of the most striking facts in sacred history. The kings mentioned in the last clause are the kings of Egypt and Gerar (Gen. xii. 17. xx. 3), not without reference perhaps to those mentioned in Gen. xiv. 1.

15. Touch not mine anointed (ones), and to my prophets do no harm. These are the words of God himself, and are designated as such, in the English Bible, by supplying the word saying, which is expressed in the analogous case, v. 11. Touch not, as in Gen. xxvi. 11, 29. In the Old Testament, unction is the symbol of spiritual gifts, and especially of those imparted to the great theocratical offices. See above, on Ps. ii. 2. From the case of Elisha (1 Kings xix. 16) it would seem that prophets were anointed when inducted into office. The patriarchs are here called prophets in the proper sense of the term, as denoting men inspired of God, and admitted to confidential intercourse with him. The allusion here is to Gen. xx. 7, where God says to Abimelech of Abraham, "Restore the man his wife, for he is a prophet, and he will pray for thee, and thou shalt live."

16. And he called (for) a famine on the land; every staff of bread he brake. The psalmist now passes from the Patriarchal to the Egyptian period of the history, by stating the occasion of Israel's migration into Egypt. The meaning of the first clause seems to be, that he summoned famine, as his instrument or servant, to come down upon the land, as sent from above, that is to say, from himself. The meaning of the last clause is, that the people were deprived of every customary means and source of subsistence. The figure of a staff or stay is a Mosaic one. See Lev. xxvi. 26, and compare Isai. iii. 1. It is near akin to the description of food as staying or sustaining the heart. See above, on Ps. civ. 15. The historical reference in the verse before us is to Gen. xli. 54.

17. He sent before them a man; sold for a slave was Joseph. The same providential purpose is assigned to Joseph's bondage by himself, Gen. xlv. 5. With the last clause compare Gen. xxxvii. 36. Some interpreters, assuming, as we have already seen, that this psalm was composed in the time of the captivity, suppose a parallel, in this verse, between Joseph and Daniel, both of whom, in addition to their personal qualities, were sent into captivity before the body of their brethren; both gained the royal favour and were exalted to high station in the land of their captivity; and both employed the influence thus gained for the advantage of their countrymen. To the Jews in exile, such a parallel must have been not only interesting, in a historical or poetical point of view, but consolatory and encouraging as a token for good, a sign that God was about to renew the exodus from Egypt in an exodus from Babylon.

18. They hurt, with the fetter, his feet; into iron came his soul. That Joseph was actually chained or fettered, is included in the true sense of the word bound, applied to him in the history. See Gen. xl. 3, and compare Gen. xxxix. 20, 22. They, the Egyptians, or his gaolers; or the verb may be indefinitely construed, as if it had been said, his feet were hurt. The verb means elsewhere to humble or mortify, but is here used in its strict sense of afflicting, causing to suffer. The Prayer Book version of the last clause, the iron entered into his soul, is ungrammatical, the word for iron being masculine, while that for soul is, like the verb, feminine. The general sense is given in the text of the English Bible, and the exact form in the margin. The mention of the soul, as in many other cases, is of course not meant to be exclusive of the body, but to suggest the idea of intimate and heartfelt suffering. See above, on Ps. iii. 3 (2.) xi. 1, etc.

19. Until the time that his word came (to pass), the saying of Jehovah tried him. The last verb properly denotes the assaying of metals, but is figuratively applied to moral trial and purgation. See above, on Ps. xii. 7 (6.) xvii. 3. xviii. 31 (30.) xxvi. 2. The most probable meaning of the verse is, that during the two years which intervened between his explanation of the prisoners' dreams and the favourable issue to which it ultimately led, his faith in the divine promise, both to himself and to his people, was severely but favourably tried. Compare the history in Gen. xl, xli

20. The king sent and loosed him—the ruler of nations, and set him free. Both verbs strictly apply to the removal of his fetters, the first meaning properly to knock off (Isai. lviii. 6), the other to open for the purpose of removing. See above, on Ps. xxx 12 (11.) The king of Egypt is called a ruler of peoples, either in reference to the tribes or nomes of Egypt itself, or because there were other nations tributary to him.

21. He made him lord of his house and ruler of all his wealth. The literal meaning of the first clause is, he placed him lord to his house. See Gen. xli. 40, 41, 43. xlv. 8. For the meaning of the last word in the sentence, see above, on Ps. civ. 24. It is one of the points of resemblance which are thought to identify the two psalms as the work of the same author.

22. To bind his chiefs at his pleasure, and his elders to make wise. The words translated chiefs and elders are those commonly applied to the heads of tribes and families, the hereditary magistrates under the patriarchal system. The application of the second word to Egypt is found also in the history, Gen. l. 7. At his pleasure, literally, with his soul, which some explain as a bold metaphor, describing Joseph's mind or soul as the cord or chain with which he bound the Egyptians, i. e. forced them to perform his will. But see Ps. xvii. 9. xxvii. 12. xli. 3 (2.)

23. And (so) Israel entered Egypt, and Jacob sojourned in the land of Ham. This was the main event, to which those just recited were preparatory. Israel and Jacob are the names both of the individual patriarch and of his descendants as a nation. In this case both the applications are admissible, or rather requisite in order to exhaust the writer's meaning. The patriarch himself came into Egypt, but his sons literally came with him, and all his descendants figuratively in him. The land of Ham, from whom Mizraim was descended. See above, on Ps. lxxviii. 51.

24. And he increased his people greatly, and made them stronger than their enemies. Increased, literally, rendered fruitful. The same verb is used in the promise to Abraham and Jacob (Gen xvii. 6. xxviii. 2), and in the history of Israel in Egypt, Ex. i. 7. The word here used for enemies is one implying persecution and oppression. The singular pronouns in the Hebrew, made him stronger than his enemies, are in strict grammatical agreement with the collective noun people.

25. He turned their heart to hate his people, to deal craftily with his servants. The first clause asserts God's sovereign control even of the free acts of his sinful creatures, a truth repeatedly affirmed in the history which this psalm recapitulates. See Ex. iv. 21. vii. 3, and compare 1 Sam. xxvi. 9. 2 Sam. xvi. 10. xxiv. 1. The last verb occurs only in the history of Joseph, Gen xxxvii. 18. The corresponding term in Exodus (i. 10) is let us deal wisely, or more exactly, let us make ourselves wise, as the verb in this case may be rendered, let us make ourselves subtle or crafty, both being reflexive forms. The historical allusion is of course to the murderous policy, which preceded the violent oppression of the Hebrews.

26. He sent Moses his servant (and) Aaron whom he chose. The meaning is not Moses (who was) his servant, or (because he was) his servant, but (to be) his servant, his instrument in the great work of delivering his people. See above, on v. 6, and on Ps. xviii. 1. xxxvi. 1. lxxviii. 70.

27. They placed among them the words of his signs and wonders in the land of Ham. The first phrase seems to mean nothing more than set before them or exhibited to them. Words of signs is by some understood to mean matters (or affairs) of signs, and to be either a pleonastic phrase for signs alone, or an emphatic phrase denoting all the signs. See above, on Ps. lxxv. 4 (3.) The first is a gratuitous assumption, the last a forced interpretation. Better than either is the explanation which gives to words its proper meaning, and supposes stress to be intentionally laid on the divine word of Jehovah, and the prophetic word of Moses and Aaron, in the way of threatening and command, as well as on the physical effects which followed these denunciations. Compare the use of words in Ps. vii. 1, and the explanation there given. Signs, i. e. tokens of God's presence and activity, and indications of his will. Wonders, prodigies, miracles, the same word that occurs above in v. 5.

28. He sent darkness and made it dark, and they did not resist his words, or according to the marginal reading, his word. This is by some understood to mean the plague of darkness, which immediately preceded the slaughter of the first born, Ex. x. 22. But to this explanation there are two objections; first, that it entirely disturbs the order of the plagues, which is otherwise observed with great exactness, the only deviation being very trivial compared with this; secondly, because it would then be necessary to apply the last clause to Moses and Aaron, or to Israel in general, thereby making it unmeaning, or else to admit a contradiction of the history, which expressly says that the Egyptians did resist the word of God even after the plague of darkness, Ex. x. 27. The only remaining explanation is, that darkness, in the verse before us, as in many other cases, is a figure for calamity in general, and applied not to one plague in particular, but to the whole series, of which a more detailed account is then subjoined.

29. He turned their waters to blood and killed their fish. Here begins the more particular enumeration of the plagues of Egypt. Compare Ps. lxxviii. 44, where the inconvenience specified is that they could not drink the water, whereas here it is the loss of their accustomed food. This last word is used as a collective in both languages.

30. Their land teemed with frogs—in the chambers of their kings. That even these were not safe from the hateful intruders, is an aggravating circumstance, particularly mentioned in the original threatening, and implied in the narrative of its execution. See Ex. viii. 3, 9. The first verb means to bring forth in abundance, and is so used in the history of the creation, with particular reference to the genesis of animals, Gen. i. 20.

31. He said, and the fly came and gnats (or lice) in all their border. See above, on Ps. lxxviii. 45, where the gnats or lice are omitted, and the flies precede the frogs. So here, the flies precede the lice, a slight departure from the order of the history. See Ex. viii. 5, 16. He said, i. e. he said so, which is tantamount to saying, he commanded. In all their border, i. e. every where within it, throughout the land. This expression is borrowed from the history. See Ex. viii. 2 (vii. 27.)

32. He gave them hail for rain (and) flaming fire in their land. This, which is the common version, represents the sense correctly, but with a deviation from the form of the original, which is highly idiomatic. A bald translation is, he gave their rains hail, fire of flames in their land. The terms are chosen for the sake of an allusion to the promise in Lev. xxvi. 4, I will give your rains in their season. Instead of these he gave the Egyptians a destructive hail-storm. Compare Ps. lxxviii. 48.

33. And smote their vine and their fig-tree, and shattered the trees of their border. Compare Ps. lxxviii. 47, where sycamores are particularly mentioned. The history says nothing of the vines, but speaks of the breaking of the trees, using the same intensive verb as here. See Ex. ix. 25. Their border, as before, means their land or territory in its whole extent, just as the ends of the earth is put for all its parts. See above, on Ps. ii. 8.

34. He said, and the arbeh came, and the yelek, and (that) without number. The two Hebrew words, here retained, denote varieties of the locust, and have no equivalents in English. See above, on Ps. lxxviii. 46, where the first word here stands second and the place of the other is supplied by hasil, another distinctive term of the same kind. Without number, literally, there is no number. See the same expression, Ps. civ. 25.

35. And devoured every herb in their land, and devoured the fruit of their ground. The verb, though varied in the common version, is the same in both clauses of the Hebrew. See above, on Ps. xlvi. 46, and compare the original narrative, Ex. x. 5, 15.

36. And he smote all the firstborn in their land, the first-fruits of all their strength. For the meaning of the last clause, see above, on Ps. lxxviii. 51, and compare Ex. xii. 29, 30.

37. And he brought them out with silver and with gold, and there was not in his tribes a totterer (or stumbler.) The first clause relates to the spoiling of the Egyptians, Ex. xii. 35, 36. The last word denotes a person unfit for military service. Compare Isai. v. 27.

38. Glad was Egypt at their going forth, for their fear had fallen upon them. This panic terror, which followed the last plague and facilitated the escape of Israel (Ex. xi. 1. xii. 31—33), accounts for the readiness with which the Egyptians gave whatever was demanded, and completely vindicates the children of Israel from the charge of borrowing what they never meant to pay. The terms used in the history denote the acts of asking and giving, not those of borrowing and lending. The terms of the last clause are derived from Ex. xv. 16. Deut. xi. 25.

39 He spread a cloud for a covering, and fire to give light by night See above, on Ps. lxxviii. 14. The poetical description of the cloud as covering the host is derived from the statement that "the cloud of Jehovah was over (or above) them by day," Num. x. 34. Compare Num. ix. 16. Neh. ix. 12. Isai. iv. 5, 6.

40. (The people) asked and he made quails come—and bread of heaven satisfied them. See above, on Ps. lxxviii. 25—27, and compare Ex. xvi. 4—13. Num. xi. 31. As to the alternation of the singular and plural forms, see above, on v. 24. Bread may either be the subject of the verb, as given above, or a qualifying term, (with) bread.

41. He opened a rock and forth gushed waters; they ran in the wastes, a river. See above, on Ps. lxxviii. 16, 20. The word translated wastes means, according to its etymology, dry places.

42. Because he remembered his holy word with Abraham his servant. This brings us back to the statement in vs. 8, 9, in proof of which this long array of facts has been presented. Nothing of all this would have taken place if God had been forgetful of his covenant. This covenant is here meant by his holy word, which is therefore followed by the preposition with, as in Ex. ix. 24, where the covenant is expressly mentioned.

43. And brought out his people in joy, in triumph his chosen (ones.) He remembered his promise and in execution of it brought out his people, etc. The parallelism of people and chosen throws light upon the latter term, as used in v. 6.

44. And gave to them nations' lands, and peoples labour they inherit The prominent idea is not that of gentiles or heathen, in the religious sense, but that of other nations, and whole nations, to whose place and possessions they succeeded. Labour is put for its result or product, as a synonymous Hebrew word is in Ps. lxxviii. 46

45. To the end that they might keep his statutes and his laws observe. Hallelujah! The emphatic phrase at the beginning, corresponding to our phrases, to the end, for the purpose, or in order that, points this out as the qualification or condition of the promise which had been so gloriously verified. The same condition is expressed or implied elsewhere. See above, on Ps lxxviii. 7, and compare Gen. xviii. 19. Deut. iv. 40. xxvi. 17 Hallelujah (praise ye Jah) as above, in Ps. civ. 35.

PSALM CVI.

AFTER an introduction, praising the divine goodness, and expressing the hope of a participation in it, vs. 1—5, this psalm contains a solemn confession of the sins of Israel through all the periods of his history; in Egypt, v. 6—12; in the wilderness, v. 13—33; in Canaan, vs. 34—43; and a prayer, founded on encouraging tokens of the Lord's compassion, that he will save his people from the punishment incurred by their unfaithfulness, vs. 44—48. According to Hengstenberg's hypothesis already mentioned, this is the third psalm of the trilogy added to Ps. ci—ciii, in the times of the captivity, and a direct continuation of the series, since the moral condition of God's covenant, propounded at the close of Ps. cv, is here acknowledged to have been violated by his people, who are also represented as actually suffering the punishment of this violation, but encouraged by returning tokens of a favourable change, to hope and pray for the forgiveness of their sins and the removal of the judgments which they have so well deserved. The first verse and the two last form a part of the mixed composition in First Chronicles, which has been already mentioned. See above, on Ps. xvi. 1. But a still more interesting parallel to this psalm is the prayer or confession in the ninth chapter of Daniel, which resembles it so much in subject, tone, and diction, that although not otherwise demonstrable, it would not be absurd to regard the psalm before us as a lyrical paraphrase of that confession, prepared for permanent and public use by Daniel himself or some contemporary writer.

1. Hallelujah! Give thanks unto Jehovah, for (he is) good, for unto eternity (is) his mercy. The Hallelujah (praise ye Jah!) which concludes the two preceding psalms, stands both at the beginning and the close of this. The exhortation to give thanks unto Jehovah is also found at the beginning of Ps. cv. The reason here assigned, that he is good, and his mercy endures forever, is expressed in the same words, Ps. c. 5.

2. Who shall tell the mighty deeds of Jehovah? (Who) shall utter all his praise? The potential meaning (who can tell?) is here included in the simple future. Mighty deeds answers to a single word in Hebrew meaning strengths or powers. The expression is borrowed from Deut. iii. 24, where the English Bible has the singular form might. The verb translated utter is a causative, who shall cause to hear or to be heard? See above, on Ps. xxvi. 7. The interrogation involves a negative assertion, namely, that they cannot be fully expressed or duly celebrated.

3. Happy the keepers of judgment, the doer of righteousness at every time. The form of expression at the beginning is the same as in Ps. i. 1. The keepers of judgment are those who observe justice as the rule of their conduct, the same idea that is afterwards expressed in other words, the doer (or practiser) of righteousness, not occasionally merely but at all times. The change from the plural to the singular is common, where the latter denotes an ideal individual, the representative of a whole class

The condition here propounded is identical with that in Ps cv. 45. ciii. 18. Dan. ix. 4.

4. Remember me, Jehovah, with the favour of thy people; visit me with thy salvation. The speaker is the Church or chosen people, and therefore prays to be remembered with the kindness due to her as such. Visit me, manifest thy favourable presence. See above, on Ps. viii 5 (4.) Such a prayer, uttered by the church itself, implies that the tokens of God's favourable presence had been interrupted or withdrawn.

5. To witness the welfare of thy chosen (ones), to rejoice in the joy of thy nation, to glory with thy heritage. Our idiom requires the subject of the verb to be more distinctly indicated. The meaning evidently is, that I may witness, that I may rejoice, that I may glory. The phrase translated witness the welfare literally means to see in the good, i. e. to look on, to be a spectator, when thy chosen ones are in possession or enjoyment of good. Thy nation is here used instead of the customary phrase thy people, perhaps because the meaning is, the nation which is thy chosen people. The general meaning of the whole verse is, that I may once more be recognised and treated as thy people.

6. We have sinned with our fathers, we have done perversely, we have done wickedly. The connection with the foregoing context may be made clear by supplying a few intermediate thoughts. 'True, we have no right to expect this, much less to demand it. We have not performed the condition of thy covenant; we have not kept thy statutes or observed thy laws; we have not kept judgment or done righteousness.' The national confession here begun is nearly co-extensive with the psalm itself. The terms of this verse are borrowed, here as well as in Dan. ix. 5, from that great model of ecclesiastical and national devotion furnished by Solomon, in his prayer at the dedication of the temple, 1 Kings viii. 47. Compare Isai. lix. 12. With our fathers, not merely like them, but as sharing their responsibility and guilt. Of the three verbs used in this confession, the first denotes failure to discharge one's obligations, the second wilful perversion or distortion, the third disorderly or turbulent transgression. See above, on Ps. i. 1.

7. Our fathers in Egypt did not understand thy wondrous works, they did not remember the abundance of thy mercies, and rebelled upon the sea, at the Red Sea. The general confession in v. 6 is now followed by a more detailed acknowledgment, beginning with the exodus from Egypt. The wondrous works of God, the things done wonderfully by him, then and there, for the deliverance of his people, the great body of them did not understand. Even those who referred them to their true source and author, did not fully appreciate the end for which they were performed, or enter into the majestic plan, in executing which they were permitted to be God's co-workers. The truth of this charge is abundantly established by the narrow, grovelling, selfish views and feelings so repeatedly betrayed by the generation which came out of Egypt, showing clearly that they did not practically understand God's dealings with them. This is probably the idea meant to be conveyed by the Hebrew verb, which usually means to act wisely, but is here modified by governing a noun directly. See above, on Ps. ii. 10. xiv. 2. The two-fold local designation, on the sea, at the Red Sea, was probably suggested by the parallelism in Ex. xv. 4. The variation of the particle seems merely a poetical embellishment; the difference in meaning is no greater than in our on and at. The Sea of Sea-weed was the name given by the Hebrews and Egyptians to that bay or gulf of the Indian Ocean, which was called the Red Sea by the Greek geographers.

8. And he saved them for his name's sake, to make known his might. This is an answer to a tacit objection, namely, that their conduct had been sanctioned by God's saving them. True, he did save them, because they were necessary to his purpose. He saved them not for their sake but his own, to accomplish his own ends, and exhibit his own power.

9. And he rebuked the Red Sea and it dried up, and he made them go through the deeps like the desert. This is merely a specification of the general statement in the preceding verse. The divine intervention here commemorated was the more remarkable because it took place on the very spot where they first rebelled, as mentioned in v. 7. Though they disobeyed him at the Red Sea, he nevertheless dried the Red Sea, i. e. as much of it as was required to furnish them a passage. Rebuked, as in Ps. civ. 7. Like the desert, as in the desert, i. e. in a level and extensive plain, without obstruction or unevenness. See my note on Isai. lxiii. 13, where the same comparison is used.

10. And he saved them from the hand of the hater, and redeemed them from the hand of the enemy. Both epithets are intended to apply to Pharaoh, not only as a personal oppressor of the Israelites, but as the representative of Egypt, all of which now feared and hated the occasion of its multiplied and aggravated sufferings.

11. And the waters covered their adversaries ; not one of them was left. The Psalmist dwells upon the completeness of the overthrow and destruction experienced by Pharaoh and his host, in order to aggravate the previous and subsequent ingratitude of Israel, as well as to enhance the free grace of Jehovah, and the fidelity with which he executed his engagements, even to the faithless.

12. And they believe his words, they sing his praise. Then (and not till then) do they believe. This is not an encomium on their faith, but a confession of their unbelief. It was not till the promise was fulfilled that they believed it. With the first clause compare Ex. xiv. 31; with the second, Ex. xv. 1

13 They made haste, they forgot his deeds, they did not wait for his counsel. Their propensity to evil was so strong, that they are said to have hastened to forget what God had done for them, which means much more than that they soon forgot it. They did not even wait for the promise to be verified by the event. The expression in the first clause is borrowed from Ex. xxxii. 8. The works or deeds of God are not in this case, as in Ps. ciii. 22. civ. 24, the works of nature, but the plagues of Egypt. See Deut. xi. 3, and compare Dan. ix. 4

14. And they lusted a lust in the wilderness and tempted God in the desert. The confession now passes from their sins in Egypt to their sins in the wilderness. The strong expression in the first clause relates to their wanton craving of animal food. See Num. xi. 4, 34. With the last clause compare Ps. lxxviii. 18. The two words for wilderness and desert are the same as those in Ps. lxxviii. 40. See also Ps. lxviii. 8 (7.)

15. And he gave them their request and sent (them) leanness in their soul. The last phrase is by some translated against, by others into their soul; but it is really a qualifying phrase, designed to show that the emaciation or decay which was sent upon them was not bodily but spiritual. See Num. xi. 18, and compare Ps. lxxviii. 10, 18.

16. And they were envious at Moses in the camp, at Aaron, the Holy One of Jehovah. This is another of their wilderness sins. See Num. chap. xvi. Aaron is not called the Saint of the Lord in reference to his personal holiness, which does not seem to have been eminent, but his Holy (or Consecrated) One, in reference to his sacerdotal dignity.

17. (Then) opens the earth and swallows Dathan, and covers over the company of Abiram. This relates to the destruction of those followers of Korah who were not Levites. See Num. xvi. 32, 33, and compare Deut. xi. 6. From the first of these passages some interpreters supply her mouth after opens; but the absolute use of the verb is perfectly consistent with our idiom.

18. And a fire devours their company, a flame consumes (those) wicked (men.) This relates to the destruction of Korah himself and his Levitical followers. See Num. xvi. 35. xxvi. 10.

19. They make a calf in Horeb, and bow down to a molten image. This was a third sin committed in the wilderness. See Ex. xxxii. 1—6, and compare Ex. xxxiv. 4. The golden calf appears to have been an imperfect and diminutive copy of the bull Apis, worshipped in Egypt.

20. And exchange their glory for the likeness of an ox eating grass. This must be read in the closest connection with v. 19, in order to complete it. Their folly consisted in exchanging the true God, whose worship and whose favour was their highest honour, for the mere likeness of an irrational brute. Eating grass, not in the act, but in the habit, of so doing. Although the golden calf at Horeb, and the golden calves at Dan and Beer-sheba, were all regarded as representatives of Jehovah himself, their worship was uniformly treated as idolatry, and as a virtual though not a formal or avowed renunciation of his service. Compare Jer. ii. 10—13.

21. They forgot God that saved them, that did great (things) in Egypt. That saved, that did; literally, saving, doing.

22. Wonderful (things) in the land of Ham, terrible (things) on the Red Sea. Wonderful, literally, (things) made wonderful or strangely done Terrible, literally, to be dreaded. Compare Ps. cv. 23, 27.

23. And he said he would destroy them—unless Moses his elect had stood in the breach before him, to turn back his wrath from destroying. The first and last verbs are different in Hebrew, but have only one exact equivalent in English. The second clause is not a part of what God said, but a historical statement of what really prevented the execution of his threatening. He said he would destroy them, and he would have done so, had not Moses, etc. Moses is called the Elect or Chosen of Jehovah, as having been selected and set apart to be God's instrument in the great work of deliverance and legislation. The plural is elsewhere applied to the whole nation as the chosen people. See above, v. 5, and Ps. cv. 43. Stood in the breach is a military figure, drawn from the desperate defence of a besieged town or fortress. Compare Jer. xv. i. Ez. xiii. 5. xxii. 30. The historical reference is to Ex. xxxii. 11—14. Deut. ix. 18, 19. To turn back his wrath is to prevent its accomplishing its object. See above, on Ps. lxxviii. 38, and compare Num. xxv. 11.

24. And they rejected the pleasant land, they did not believe his word. This refers to the refusal of the people to invade the land of Canaan in the first year of their exodus from Egypt, and to their believing the report of the ten spies in preference to God himself. See above, on Ps. lxxviii. 22, 32, and compare Num. xiv. 31. The land of desire, the desired or desirable land, is a name also found in Jer. iii. 19.

25. And they murmured in their tents; they did not hearken to the voice of Jehovah. The form of expression in the first clause is borrowed from Deut. i. 27; in the second from Num. xiv. 22.

26. And he lifted his hand to them, to make them fall in the wil derness. The first phrase does not mean, he raised his hand against them, or to strike them, but as the ancient gesture of swearing. See Num. xiv. 28, 30. Deut. i. 34. ii. 14. The last clause contains the oath itself, or what he swore, to wit, that he would make them fall, slay them, in the wilderness. See Num. xiv. 29, 32.

27. And to make their seed fall in the nations, and to scatter them in the lands. As the appointed punishment of the older generation was to die in the wilderness, so that of their descendants was to die in dispersion and captivity among the Gentiles. See Lev. xxvi. 33, 38, and compare Deut. xxviii. 32, 36, 64, 68. The recollection of this threatening must have been peculiarly affecting to the Jews in Babylon.

28. And they joined themselves to Baal Peor, and ate the sacrifices of the dead. He now adds a sin committed near the end of the long error, and on the very borders of the Promised Land. The first verb is properly passive, they were joined, but this of course does not mean by others but themselves, and thus the simple passive comes to have a reflexive meaning. Baal Peor is the name given to Baal, or the supreme God of the Tyrians and Moabites, as he was worshipped, with licentious rites, at Peor, a mountain in the land of Moab. See Num. xxv. 1—3. The dead, not dead men, in allusion to necromantic superstitions, but the dumb or lifeless gods whom they worshipped. See below, on Ps. cxv. 4—7, and compare 1 Cor. xii. 2.

29. And they provoked him by their crimes, and the plague broke out among them. The first verb means to excite both grief and indignation. Compare the use of the cognate noun in Ps. vi. 8 (7), and of the verb itself in Ps. lxxviii. 58. The word translated plague, like its English equivalent, has both a generic and specific meaning; that of a divine stroke or infliction in general and that of a pestilential disease in particular. See Num. xxv. 18, 19.

30. Then stood up Phinehas and judged, and (so) was stayed the plague. He stood (or rose) up from among the rest, presented himself before the people. He judged i. e. assumed the office and discharged the duty, from which the regular official judges seemed to shrink. The verb includes the act both of pronouncing and of executing judgment. See the narrative in Num. ch. xxv. The form of expression in the last clause is borrowed from Num. xvii. 13 (xvi. 48.)

31. And it was reckoned to him for righteousness, to generation and generation, even to eternity. The form of expression is borrowed from Gen. xv. 6; but what is here meant is evidently not a justifying act by which Phinehas was saved, but a praiseworthy act for which he, a justified or righteous man already, received the divine commendation and a perpetual memorial of his faithfulness. Compare Deut. vi. 25. xxiv. 13. The particular reward promised (Num. xxv. 13), that of a perpetual priesthood, is not here mentioned, but was familiar to the mind of every Hebrew reader.

32. And they angered (him) at the waters of Strife, and it went ill with Moses, on their account. See above, on Ps. lxxxix. 8 (7) xciv. 8. xcix. 8. The Hebrew word for strife is the name given to the place, Meribah. The object of the first verb is Jehovah, as in v. 29. It went ill with Moses, or, more literally, it was bad for Moses.

33. For they resisted his spirit, and he spake unadvisedly with his lips. His spirit may grammatically signify either that of God or that of Moses. The latest writers are in favour of the first construction. which is not without analogies in other parts of Scripture (Isai. lxiii. 10. Eph. iv. 30), but the other seems entitled to the preference in this connection, because the first clause then contains the ground or reason of the other. It was because the mind of Moses was excited by their opposition, that he spake unadvisedly with his lips. The last verb is one used in the law to denote a precipitate inconsiderate engagement, Lev. v. 4.

34. They did not destroy the nations which the Lord said to them. The confession now passes from the sins of the wilderness to those of Canaan. The neglect to destroy the Canaanites completely was not only a direct violation of God's precept, but the source of nearly all the public evils that ensued. There is no need of giving to the last verb a rare and dubious sense (commanded.) The meaning of the clause is, which Jehovah said to them (must be destroyed.)

35. And they mixed themselves with the nations and learned their doings. The reflexive verb at the beginning indicates an active and deliberate amalgamation, as distinguished from a passive and involuntary one. The nations of the Canaanites, and those which inhabited surrounding countries. The primary idea is not that of gentiles or heathen, in the religious sense. Learned their doings or practices, learned to do as they did. With the first clause compare Jos. xxiii. 12, 13. Judg. iii. 6; with the second, Deut. xviii. 9. xx. 18.

36. And served their idols, and they were to them for a snare. The word translated idols, by its etymological affinities, suggests the idea of vexations, pains. See above, on Ps. xvi. 4. A snare, i. e. a temptation to idolatry. Compare Deut. vii. 16.

37. And they sacrificed their sons and their daughters to the demons. This last is the Septuagint version and, if not directly sanctioned, is at least referred to in the New Testament (1 Cor

x. 20.) That the worship of idols was connected with that of fallen spirits, is neither improbable in itself nor contradictory to Scripture. According to the modern etymologists, the Hebrew word means lords or masters, and is a poetical equivalent to Baalim, which means the same thing. Compare Deut. xxxii. 17, and the εἰδωλοί of 1 Cor. viii. 5. The word translated devils in Lev. 17. 7 is entirely different.

38. And they shed innocent blood, the blood of their sons and daughters, which they sacrificed to the idols of Canaan; and defiled was the land with bloods. The first verb means to pour out and here implies a copious or abundant bloodshed, corresponding to the next verb, which is an intensive form of that used in v. 37. Blood, in the singular, is used in a physical sense; the plural bloods in a moral one, always implying guilt, and especially the guilt of murder. See above, on Ps. v. 7 (6.) xxvi. 9. li. 16 (14.) lv. 24 (23.) The first three members of the sentence have respect to the prohibitions in Deut. xii. 31. xviii. 10. xix. 10. With the last clause compare Num. xxxv. 33.

39. And they were polluted by their own doings, and went a whoring by their own crimes. They defiled not only the land of promise but themselves. Or rather, this verse is explanatory of the last clause of v. 38, and shows that the pollution of the land was nothing more nor less than that of its inhabitants. The figure of spiritual whoredom or adultery is often used to signify the violation, by the chosen people, of their covenant with God, which is constantly described as a conjugal relation. See above, on Ps. xlv and compare Ps. lxxiii. 27. This is not stated as an additional offence but as an aggravating circumstance attending the iniquities already mentioned.

40. And the anger of Jehovah was kindled at his people, and he abhorred his heritage. This is the strongest form in which his detestation of their sins could be expressed, but does not necessarily imply the abrogation of his covenant with them. The feeling described is like that of a parent towards his wicked children, or of husbands and wives, who do not cease to love each other, though grieved and indignant at each other's sins. The word heritage adds great point to the sentence. He abhorred the very people whom he had chosen to be his, not merely for a single generation, but for many. See above, on Ps. lxxviii. 59, 62.

41. And he gave them into the hand of nations, and over them ruled their haters. The same nations whom they had rebelliously spared, with others of like spirit—the same nations who had led them into sin—were used as instruments of punishment. Compare Lev. xxvi. 17. Judges ii. 14.

42. And their enemies oppressed them, and they were bowed down under their hand. They not only governed them, but governed them tyrannically, so that they were not only under coercion and constraint, but humbled and degraded from the rank of an independent state to that of tributaries and bondsmen. With the terms of this verse compare Judg. i. 34. iii. 30. iv. 3. viii. 28.

43. Many times he frees them, and they resist (him) by their counsel, and are brought low by their guilt. Having given in the preceding verses a brief but lively summary of the Book of Judges, the Psalmist now passes, by an almost insensible transition, to the later periods of the history, and indeed to its catastrophe; for the meaning of the last clause seems to be, that after all their fluctuations, they at length sink or fall into a ruinous condition, as the ultimate fruit of their rebellions. The meaning of the first clause is, that by their self-willed plans and projects they continually come into collision with the will of God, and with that great providential purpose, in promoting which it was their duty, and would have been their happiness, to co-operate With the last clause compare Lev. xxvi. 39. Ezek. xxxiii. 10.

44. And he has looked at their distress when he heard them cry
The idiomatic form of the original may thus be represented by a bald translation, and he saw in the distress to them in his hearing their cry. As this follows the brief statement of their downfall, there is much probability in the opinion, that it relates to the “tokens for good,” which were granted to the exiled Jews in Babylon long before their actual restoration. With the first clause compare Ex. ii. 25. iv. 31. Deut. iv. 30. Ps. xviii. 7. cii. 3.

45. And he has remembered for them his covenant, and repented according to the abundance of his mercy. For them, i. e. in their favour, for their benefit. It does not qualify covenant, but re- membered. With the first clause compare Lev. xxvi. 42, 45. Ps.
cv. 8, 42; with the second, Num. xiv. 19. Ps. v. 8 (7.) lxix. 14 (13.) Neh. xiii. 22. The common version of the last word (mercies) rests upon the marginal or masoretic reading; the more ancient text is mercy.

46. And has given them favour before all their captors. The literal translation of the first clause is, and has given them for mercies or compassions. This remarkable expression is borrowed from 1 Kings viii. 50 (compare 2 Chr. xxx. 9), not only here but in the history of Daniel and his fellow-captives (Dan. i. 9), which makes it not at all improbable, that what is there recorded is among the indications of returning divine favour here referred to by the Psalmist.

47. Save us, Jehovah, our God, and gather us from the nations, to give thanks unto thy holy name, to glory in thy praise. Encouraged by these tokens of returning favour, the church prays that the hopes thus raised may not be disappointed, but abundantly fulfilled in the restoration of the exiles to their own land, in return for which she indirectly engages to render praise and thanksgiving to Jehovah as her liberator. We are thus brought back to the beginning of the psalm, and the voice of confession is again lost in that of anticipated praise. Instead of our God, the parallel passage (1 Chr. xvi. 36) has God of our Salvation. The word translated glory occurs only in that passage and the one before us. It is synonymous, however, with the one used in Ps. cv. 3, and often elsewhere, both meaning properly to praise one's self. With the second clause compare Ps. xxx. 5 (4.)

48. Blessed (be) Jehovah, God of Israel, from eternity even to eternity. And all the people says Amen. Hallelujah! Some interpreters regard the psalm as closing with the preceding verse, and the one before us as a doxology added to mark the conclusion of the Fourth Book. But here, as in Ps. lxxii. 19, it is far more probable that this doxology was the occasion of the psalm's being reckoned as the last of a Book, notwithstanding its intimate connection with the one that follows. This probability is strengthened, in the case before us, by the addition of the words, and all the people says Amen, which would be unmeaning, unless the doxology formed part of the psalm itself. The additional words are borrowed from Deut. xxvii. 15—26. The parallel passage (1 Chr. xvi. 36) has, And all the people said Amen and give praise (or gave praise) to Jehovah, which last words are represented, in the verse before us, by the Hallelujah (Praise ye Jah!)

P S A L M C V I I .

AFTER propounding as his theme the goodness of God in delivering his people, and especially in bringing them back from their dispersions, vs. 1—3, the Psalmist celebrates this great event, under the various figures of safe conduct through a desert and arrival in a populous city, vs. 4—9; emancipation from imprisonment, vs. 10—16; recovery from deadly sickness, vs. 17—22; deliverance from the dangers of the sea, vs. 23—32; then describes, in more direct terms, the fall of the oppressor, the restoration of Israel, and his happy prospects, vs. 33—42; ending, as he began, with an earnest exhortation to remember and commemorate Jehovah's goodness, v. 43. The psalm is so constructed as to admit of being readily applied, either literally or figuratively, to various emergencies; but its primary reference to the return from exile seems to be determined by vs. 2, 3. According to Hengstenberg's hypothesis, this psalm was added to the double trilogy by which it is preceded (Ps. 101—106), immediately after the return from exile, when the holy city was re-peopled, and the first harvest had been gathered, but the rebuilding of the temple had not yet begun. The whole seven then compose one series or system, intended to be used together in the public worship of the ancient church.

1 Give thanks unto Jehovah, for he (is) good, for unto eternity (is) his mercy. The repetition of the first words of the foregoing psalm, as the beginning of the one before us, strongly favours the opinion, that the latter was designed to be a kind of supplement or appendix to the former.

2. (So) say the Redeemed of Jehovah, whom he has redeemed from the hand of distress (or of the enemy.) What they are to say is not the exhortation in the first clause, but the reason for it in the last clause, of the foregoing verse. Let them acknowledge his unceasing mercy, who have just experienced so remarkable a proof of it. The ambiguous word (צַר) should probably be taken in the same sense which it elsewhere has throughout this psalm. See below, vs. 6, 13, 19, 28, and compare Ps. cvi. 44. Indeed the two senses may be reconciled by simply supposing the distress to be personified. Compare the unambiguous expression in Ps. cvi. 10. The Redeemed of the Lord is a favourite expression of Isaiah (xxxv. 9, 10. lxii. 12. lxiii. 3.)

3. And from the lands has gathered them, from the east and from the west, from the north and from the sea. The Babylonish exile is continually spoken of as a dispersion, either because it is considered as including other minor deportations, or because the migration of the great mass of the people into Babylonia was unavoidably accompanied, followed, or preceded, by a less extensive and more scattering migration of many individuals and families to other quarters. On the false assumption of a perfect parallelism as indispensable, some have supposed that sea is here put for the south. But this is not the only case in which the enumeration of the cardinal points is complete only in number. See Isai. xlix. 12, and compare Isai. xliii. 5, 6. lvi. 8. The mention of the sea instead of the south may perhaps have reference to the prophecy in Deut. xxviii. 68. The verse before us records the answer to the prayer in Ps. cvi. 47 and thus affords another indication, that the writer of the later composition had the earlier in his eye, and wrote with some intention to illustrate or complete it.

4. They wandered in the wilderness, in a desert way; a city of habitation found they not. Here begins the first metaphorical account of the Captivity and Restoration, in which the exiles are described as wanderers in a desert way, i. e. as some suppose a pathless desert, which sense, however, can scarcely be extracted from the Hebrew words. Others understand the phrase to mean a way, i. e. a course, a region to be traversed, which is desert; but this supposes way to be the subject and desert the qualifying term, as they would be in English, but in Hebrew the precise sense is a desert of way, or a way-desert, which some interpreters explain to mean a desert in reference to its ways or paths, thus arriving, by a different course, at the meaning first suggested, namely, that of a pathless wilderness. City of habitation may mean a habitable or inhabited city in general, or a city for them to inhabit in particular. The latter is more probable, because the word translated habitation is not an abstract but a local noun, meaning the place where men sit or dwell, according to the primary and secondary meaning of the verbal root. See above, on Ps. i. 1. It may here be either governed by city, as above, or in apposition with it, a city, a dwelling-place, i. e. a city in which they might dwell. There is obvious allusion to Jerusalem, as well as to the great Arabian wilderness, although the contrast of the city and the desert suggests the idea of suffering and relief, by a natural as well as a historical association. See Ez. xxix. 5, and compare Job xii. 24.

5. Hungry—also thirsty—their soul in them shrouds itself. This verse continues the description of the wanderers in the desert. To avoid the ambiguity of an exact version, in which hungry and thirsty might seem to agree with soul, the substantive verb may be supplied in the first clause, (they are) hungry, also thirsty. The primary sense of the reflexive verb at the end of the sentence seems to be that of covering one's self with darkness, or sinking overwhelmed beneath some great calamity. See above, on Ps. lxxvii. 4 (3), and compare the cognate forms in Ps. lxi. 3 (2.) lxv. 14 (13.) cii. i. Isai. lvii. 16.

6. And they cried to Jehovah in their distress ; from their straits he frees them. Both the nouns, according to their etymology, convey the idea of pressure, compression, painful restraint. In their distress, literally, in the distress to them, that which they had or suffered. See above, on Ps. cvi 44, and compare Deut. iv. 30. The change from the past tense to the future seems intended merely to describe the act denoted by the second as more recent

7. And he led them in a straight course, to go to a city of habitation. No exact version can preserve or imitate the paronomasia arising from the etymological affinity of the first verb and noun, analogous to that between the English walk and to walk, though the Hebrew forms are only similar and not identical. The idea of physical rectitude or straightness necessarily suggests that of moral rectitude or honesty, commonly denoted by the Hebrew word.

8. Let (such) give thanks to Jehovah (for) his mercy, and his wonderful works to the sons of man. Some interpreters make this the close of a long sentence, beginning with v. 4, and adopt, in all the intervening verses, a relative construction, as if he had said, let such as wandered in the wilderness, whose soul fainted in them, who cried unto the Lord, whom he led etc. let such give thanks unto his name. But although this is certainly the logical connection of the passage, its involution and complexity of form are as far as possible removed from the simplicity of Hebrew syntax, which prefers a distinct enunciation of particulars to all such artificial combinations. This verse constitutes the burden or chorus of the psalm.

9. For he has satisfied the craving soul, and the hungry sou.

has filled with good. This is merely the conclusion of the first scene or picture, with a change of figure but a very slight one, as the want of food is one of the most painful and familiar hardships of a journey through a desert, and as such would necessarily occur to every Israelite who knew the story of the error in the wilderness. The first verb has the same sense as in Ps. civ. 13; the last noun the same sense as in Ps. ciii. 4. civ. 28. The unusual word translated craving is borrowed from Isai. xxix. 8.

10. Dwelling in darkness and deathshade, bound in affliction and iron. Here begins the second picture which exhibits the same sufferers, no longer as wanderers in the desert, but as closely confined prisoners. The darkness primarily meant is that of the dungeon, but not without reference to the frequent use of darkness in general as an emblem of misery. See above, on Ps. lxxviii. 7 (6.) The idea of darkness is then expressed in a still stronger form by the striking compound deathshade or shadow of death, a bold but beautiful description of the most profound obscurity. See above, on Ps. xxiii. 4. The leading words of the two clauses might, in one respect, be more exactly rendered, inhabitants of darkness, prisoners of affliction. See above, on Ps. lxxviii. 61. There is no mixture of literal and figurative terms in the last clause, but only the addition of a specific to a general term. The affliction particularly meant is that produced by iron, i. e. chains or fetters. See above, on Ps. cv. 18, and with the verse before us compare Isai. xlii. 7. xlix. 9. Job xxxvi. 8. Luke xiii. 16.

11. Because they resisted the words of the Mightiest, and the counsel of the Highest contemned. This verse introduces what was wanting in the first scene, the fact that these were not innocent sufferers. However cruel or unjust their sufferings at the hands of men, they were but condign punishments as sent by God. This is a point of contact and resemblance with the preceding psalm, which is not without importance. Resisted, rebelled against, a favourite expression in these psalms. See above, on Ps. cv. 28 cvi. 7, 33, 43. Words or sayings, commonly applied to promises, and even here combining that idea with the sense of command, because the command which they resisted or rebelled against had reference to the plan or counsel of the Lord for the deliverance of his people. The word translated mightiest is (יְהוָה) one of the divine names, here represented by an English superlative, in order to preserve the antithesis with Most High in the other clause.

12. And he brought down, with trouble, their heart; they stumbled and there was no helper. The remedial design and effect of their punishment are beautifully set forth in the first clause. The word translated trouble means originally work or labour, then the pain attending it or flowing from it. Stumbled may here be put for fell, or have the milder sense of tottering or stumbling, as distinguished from a total fall. No helper; or none helping, except God, as intimated in the next verse; or against God, when he chose to punish them.

13. And they cried to Jehovah in their distress; out of their straits he saves them. An exact repetition of v. 6, except that the first verb is exchanged for a cognate one, differing only in a single letter, and the last verb for a synonyme still more familiar. As to the consecution of the tenses, see above, on v. 6.

14. He brings them out from darkness and deathshade, and their bonds he severs. The terms used in describing the deliverance are studiously made to correspond with the account of the captivity in v. 10. It is more remarkable, though possibly fortuitous, that the words of the second clause are the same which David puts into the mouth of the revolted nations, Ps. ii. 3. The English word severs is here used instead of breaks, in order to represent the more uncommon and poetical term used in Hebrew

15, 16. Let (such) give thanks unto Jehovah (for) his mercy, and his wonderful works to the sons of man, because he has broken doors of brass, and bars of iron has cut asunder. The burden in v. 15 is in all respects identical with v. 8, but the supplementary verse differs, according to the prominent figures in the two scenes or pictures. As the idea of famine was selected, in v. 9, from among the hardships of the wilderness, so here the fastenings of the prison are presented in precisely the same manner. In this striking regularity of form, combined with vividness and beauty of conception, there is evidence of art and skill as well as genius. The verb in the first clause of v. 16 is an intensive form of the verb to break, and might here be rendered shattered, shivered, or the like. The corresponding verb in the last clause is a similar intensive of the verb to cut. The whole verse is copied from Isai xlv. 2, where we find the promise, of which this is the fulfilment

17. Fools by their course of transgression, and by their crimes, afflict themselves. Here begins the third scene or picture, at the very opening of which the charge of folly is added to the previous one of guilt. The reflexive meaning of the verb is essential and cannot be diluted into a mere passive, without weakening the whole sentence, the very point of which consists in making them the guilty authors of their own distresses. The word for transgression is the one that originally means revolt from God, apostasy. See above, on Ps. xxxvi. 2 (1.) Course, literally, way or path. By, literally, from, as when we speak of an effect as arising or proceeding from a cause.

18. All food their soul abhors, and they draw near to the very gates of death. This verse abruptly brings before us the same persons whom we lately beheld wandering in the desert, and then chained in a dark dungeon, now suffering from disease, such as not only mars their pleasures, but threatens to abbreviate their lives. Compare Ps. cii. 3. Job xxxiii. 20. The expression veri gates, in the translation of the last clause, is intended to convey the full force of the Hebrew preposition (גַּם) which is stronger than (אֲף) to. See above, on Ps. lvii. 11 (10.) With the last clause compare Ps. ix. 14. lxxxviii. 4 (3.) Job. xxxiii. 22. Isai. xxxviii. 9

19 And they cry to Jehovah in their distress; out of their straits he saves them. See above on vs. 6, 13, with the last of which this agrees exactly.

20. He sends his word and heals them, and makes them escape from their destructions, i. e. those which threatened them, and from which escape appeared impossible. He sends his word, he issues his command, exerts his sovereign power and authority. The last word in the Hebrew occurs only here and once in Lamentations (iv. 20.) The modern interpreters have pits or graves; but such a derivation from the verbal root is without example or analogy. See above, on Ps. xvi. 10. With the first clause compare Ps. xxx. 3 (2.) xxxiii. 9. Isai. lvii. 18; with the last Ps. ciii. 4.

21, 22. Let (such) give thanks unto Jehovah (for) his mercy and his wonderful works to the sons of man; and let them sacrifice sacrifices of thanksgiving, and recount his deeds with (joyful) singing. The freedom from technical and artificial rules of rhetoric or versification, even in those parts of the composition which exhibit most of art and skill, is peculiarly observable in this verse, where, instead of adding to the uniform chorus or refrain some particular image from the scene just closing, as in vs. 9, 16, the Psalmist continues and completes the sentence by repeating the exhortation to give thanks, in another but still figurative form, derived from the musical and sacrificial customs of the temple worship. They must not only utter thanks but offer them in sacrifice. They must not only offer them in sacrifice but sing them. With the first clause compare Ps. l. 14.

23. Going down the sea in ships, doing business in the many waters. Here again the scene is shifted, and the exiles pass before us, not as wanderers in the desert, or as captives in the dungeon, or as suffering from sickness, but as mariners engaged in an adventurous voyage. Descending, going down, seems to be an idiomatic phrase, borrowed from Isai. xlii. 10, and equivalent to going out to sea in English. The expression may have reference to the general elevation of the land above the water (see above, on Ps. xxiv. 2), but is directly opposite to our phrase, the high seas, and to the classical usage of ascending ships, i. e. embarking, and descending, i. e. landing. Doing business has its ordinary sense, as applied to trade or traffic. The last words may also be translated great or mighty waters; but the usage of the Psalms is in favour of the version many waters, which moreover forms a beautiful poetical equivalent to sea or ocean. This image could not fail to suggest, however indirectly, the idea of the world with its commotions, of which the constant emblem is the sea. See above, on Ps. xlvi. 4 (3.) lxxv. 8 (7.) lxxxix. 10 (9.) xciii. 3, 4, and compare Matt. viii. 23—26. Mark iv. 36—41. Luke viii. 22—25.

24. THEY saw the works of Jehovah, and his wonders in the deep. The pronoun at the beginning is emphatic, (it is) they (that) see (or saw) the works of the Lord, as if others could lay claim to no such privilege or honour. Both the senses of the phrase God's works are appropriate in this connection, his works of creation and his works of providence. The last word is another poetical equivalent to sea or ocean. See above, on Ps. lxxix. 3 (2.)

25. And he said—and there arose a stormy wind, and it lifted up his waves. He now parenthetically specifies some of the divine works which he had just mentioned in the general. The form of expression at the beginning, as in all like cases, involves an allusion to the history of the creation, where each creative act is preceded by God's saying, let it be. So here, the full sense is, and God said (let a stormy wind arise) and a stormy wind arose. See above, on Ps. xxxiii. 9. Arose, literally, stood, stood up, as in Ps. cvi. 30. A stormy wind, literally, a wind of storm or tempest. Instead of his waves we may read its waves, and refer the pronoun to the remoter antecedent (sea) in v. 23. Deep, in v. 24, is of a different gender. It is equally correct, however, and more natural, to refer it to Jehovah, as the maker of the sea and the ruler of its waves. Compare the expression thy waves and thy billows in Ps. xlii. 8. See also Isai. li. 15. Jer. xxxi. 35.

26. They rise (to) the heavens ; they sink (to) the depths ; their soul with evil dissolves itself. That the verbs in the first clause relate not to the waves but to the mariners, is evident from the last clause. The words rise and sink are used instead of ascend, descend, or go up, go down, because the Hebrew verbs have no etymological affinity, nor even a single letter common to their roots. The ellipsis of the preposition to is frequent, or rather verbs of motion in Hebrew may be construed directly with a noun, where our idiom requires the intervention of a particle. Evil in the last clause may denote their evil state or painful situation, with all the circumstances comprehended in it ; or more specifically, their distress and painful feelings. Compare Gen. xli. 29. The reflexive form of the last verb is not essential to the meaning of the sentence, as in v. 17, and may therefore be explained as an intensive or emphatic passive, it is melted. See above, on Ps. xxii. 15 (14.) With the whole verse compare Ps. civ. 8.

27. They reel and stagger like a drunken (man), and all their wisdom is confounded. By wisdom we are here to understand reason, common sense, that which makes men rational and raises them above the brutes. This is plain from the comparison with drunkenness, the only point of which must be the loss of reason. The reeling and staggering may relate to the irregular and violent motion of a vessel in a storm, or, as the last clause does, to the mariners themselves. The last verb literally means is swallowed up, or retaining the reflexive form, still more strongly, swallows itself up. But see above, on the last word of v. 26.

28. And they cried to Jehovah in their distress, and out of their straits he brings them forth. The consecution of the tenses corresponds to the relation of the acts which they denote, as viewed by a spectator. 'Now they have cried to the Lord, and now he is bringing them forth.' The verse differs from vs. 13, 19, in the first verb, which agrees with v. 6, and in the last verb which is unlike both.

29. He stills the storm to a calm, and silent are their waves. This is an amplification of the last phrase in v. 28, and shows how it is that he brings them forth. The first verb strictly means he makes it stand, but in a sense directly opposite to that of a synonymous though different verb in v. 25. Calm, literally, silence, stillness. Their waves, the waves from which they suffer, by which they are buffeted. Compare his waves in v. 25.

30. And they are glad that they are quiet, and he guides them to their desired haven. The connection might be rendered clearer by translating with the English Bible, then are they glad, etc. The last word in the verse occurs only here, and is by some translated shore, by others goal; but it is safer to retain the old interpretation, which affords a perfectly good sense, and rests upon the joint authority of the Rabbinical tradition and the Septuagint version

31, 32. Let (such) give thanks to Jehovah (for) his mercy, and his wonderful works to the sons of man; and let them exalt him in the congregation of the people, and in the session of the elders praise him. Here again we have a striking instance of variety combined with uniformity. The burden or chorus, as in v. 22, is followed by a solemn exhortation to connect the required thanksgiving with the forms of public worship. But instead of the temple with its sacrifices and its chants, the reference in this case, it should seem, is to the spiritual worship of the synagogue. The word translated congregation is one constantly applied to Israel, as actually gathered at the place of worship. See above, on Ps. xxii. 23 (22.) The word session is employed in the translation of the last clause, not for the sake of a verbal coincidence with Presbyterian institutions, a coincidence however which is not to be denied, but because it adequately represents the Hebrew (מוֹעֵד) in its double acceptation, as denoting both the act and the place of sitting, and especially of sitting together. See above, on v. 4. The elders, here as elsewhere, are the heads of tribes and families, the hereditary chiefs and representatives of Israel.

33. He turns streams into a wilderness, and springs of water to a thirsty place. As the shifting of the scene is not renewed in the remainder of the psalm, which, on the other hand, if viewed as a distinct and independent portion of the poem, mars its symmetry of structure, it seems best to regard these verses as an episode belonging to the last scene and containing the praises of the people and their elders. The figures in this verse are often used, particularly by Isaiah, to denote an entire revolution, whether physical or moral, social or political. Compare Isai xliv. 26, 27. l. 2. Jer. l. 38. li. 36. It thus prepares the way for the subsequent rejoicings in the downfall of Babylon and the restoration of the exiled Jews

34. A fruitful land to saltness, for the wickedness of those dwelling in it. The sentence is continued from the foregoing verse, the nouns being governed by the verb he turns. The first phrase literally means a land of fruit. The next noun may be taken either in the abstract sense of saltness or the concrete one of a saline soil or region, and by implication barren. For, literally from, as in v. 17 above. Compare the threatening in Isai. xiii. 19, and the great historical type of all such judgments, the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah.

35. He turns a desert to a pool of water, and a dry land into springs of water. This is the reverse of the description in v. 33, to which the terms are studiously conformed. In both cases the first verb literally means he sets or puts, and the noun translated springs means issues or places where the waters issue. Compare Isai. xxxv. 7. xli. 18. xliii. 20.

36. And has settled there famished (men), and they have established a city to dwell in. There is no need of assuming, that the desert thus transformed is Palestine or Canaan. It is better to adhere to the general import of the figures, which is change for the better. Settled, literally, caused to dwell. The primary meaning of the last clause is that those once homeless have a home; but there is of course a reference to the repossession and rebuilding of Jerusalem. The last phrase in Hebrew is the same with that translated city of habitation in v. 4.

37. And have sowed fields, and planted vineyards, and made fruits of increase. The form of all these verbs requires them to be understood, like those of v. 36, as referring to time actually past, from which some have inferred that the date of the psalm itself lay between the first ingathering of the fruits by the returned Jews and the founding of the temple, to which there is here no allusion. The word translated increase is applied elsewhere to the annual productions of the earth. See Lev. xxv. 16. To make these is to gain or acquire them by cultivation, as we speak of making money, but of raising corn. See above, on Ps. lx. 14 (12.)

38. And he has blessed them, and they have increased greatly, and (even) their cattle he does not diminish. Increased, not in numbers merely, but in wealth, strength, and prosperity. See Deut. xxx. 16. The verb to diminish is borrowed from Lev. xxvi. 22. The negation may be understood as a mciosis, meaning to increase or multiply. The whole of this description agrees well with the encouraging appearances, by which the Restoration was attended and immediately followed, before the colony experienced reverses or had lost the fresh impression of their recent sufferings and privations, which are mentioned in the next verse.

39. And they were diminished and brought low, from oppression, suffering, and grief. The only grammatical construction of the verbs is that which refers them to a former time, i. e. to the condition of the people under Babylonian oppression. The sense is therefore quite mistaken in the English, though correctly given in the ancient versions. The contrast is intended to enhance the joy and thankfulness of the restored exiles. These, now so prosperous, are the very men who lately were in abject misery.

40. Pouring contempt on princes—and he has made them wander in a waste (where there is) no way. From the exiles he reverts to their Deliverer, and describes him as spurning the most lordly of their persecutors—nay as making them take the place of those whom they oppressed, which idea is conveyed by the figure before used of wanderers in a pathless desert. See above, on v. 4, and compare Job. xii. 21, 24. The word for waste or void is one of those used in Gen. i. 2, to describe the original condition of the earth.

41. And has raised the poor from affliction, and made like a flock families. The first verb suggests the two-fold idea of elevation from a wretched state, and security from future danger. For its ordinary sense, see above, on Ps. xx. 2 (1.) xci. 14. The last clause simply means, he has increased the people who were so reduced in strength and numbers.

42. The righteous shall see and rejoice, and all iniquity stop her mouth. The righteous are the true Israel, as in Ps. xxxiii. 1. Num. xxiii. 10. Dan. xi. 17. With the last clause compare Job v. 16. Isai lii. 15.

43. Who (is) wise and will observe these things, and attentively consider the mercies of Jehovah? The change of number in the Hebrew does not affect the meaning. Whoever is wise will observe these things, and all who are wise will consider them. With this conclusion compare Hos. xiv. 10. Isai. xlii. 23. Jer. ix. 11.

PSALM CVIII.

1. A Song. A Psalm. By David. This is not an original or independent composition, but a compilation from two other psalms, which have already been explained. The introduction, vs. 2—6 (1—5) is substantially identical with Ps. lvii. 8—12 (7—11); the body of the psalm, vs. 7—13 (6—12), with Ps. lx. 7—14 (5—12.) The supposition of erroneous copies, or of later corruptions, is still more improbable in this case than in those of Ps. xviii, liii, lxx. The best solution which has been proposed is, that David himself combined these passages to be the basis of a trilogy (Ps. cviii—cx), adapted to the use of the church at a period posterior to the date of Ps. lvii. and lx. The comments here will be confined to the variations, as in Ps. liii and lxx.

2 (1.) Fixed is my heart, oh God, fixed is my heart; I will sing and play—also my glory. See above, on Ps. lvii. 8 (7.) The words here added, also my glory, correspond to the first clause of the next verse in that psalm, awake my glory!

3 (2.) Awake lute and harp! I will awaken the dawn (or morning.) See above, on Ps. lvii. 9 (8.) The only variation is the one already mentioned, the omission here of the words awake my glory, for which the last clause of v. 2 (1) is a substitute.

4 (3.) I will thank thee among the nations, oh Jehovah, I will praise thee among the peoples. See above, on Ps. lvii. 10 (9.) The only variation is the substitution of the name Jehovah for Adhonai, a change scarcely perceptible in the English versions.

5 (4.) For great from above the heavens (is) thy mercy, and unto the clouds thy truth. See above, on Ps. lvii. 11 (10.) The only variation is the change of (רַעַ) unto into (לְמַעַן) from above, apparently intended to suggest the idea of God's mercy as descending upon man.

6 (5.) Be thou high above the heavens, oh God, and above all the earth thy glory. See above, on Ps. lvii. 12 (11.) The only variation is the introduction of the copulative and at the beginning of the second clause.

7 (6.) In order that thy beloved (ones) may be delivered, save with thy right hand, and hear (or answer) us. See above, on

Ps. lx. 7 (5), with which this verse agrees in all points, not excepting the keri or various reading in the last word (me for us.)

8 (7.) God hath spoken in his holiness (and therefore) I will triumph, I will divide Shechem, and the valley of Succoth I will measure. See above, on Ps. lx. 8 (6), with which this verse agrees exactly.

9 (8.) To me (belongs) Gilead, to me Manasseh, and Ephraim the strength of my head, Judah my lawgiver. See above, on Ps. lx. 9 (7.) The only variation is the omission, in the verse before us, of the and after Gilead.

10 (9.) Moab (is) my wash-pot; at Edom will I throw my shoe; over Philistia will I shout aloud. See above, on Ps. lx.

10 (8.) At the end of this verse is the most material variation in the whole psalm, which, however, is evidently not fortuitous or by a later hand, but intentional and made by the original writer. I will shout aloud, as an expression of triumph over a conquered enemy.

11 (10.) Who will bring me (to) the fortified city? Who leads (or has led) me up to Edom? See above on Ps. lx. 11 (9.) The only variation is the change of one synonymous word for another, to express the idea of a fortified city.

12 (11.) (Is it) not God, who hast cast us off, and wilt not go forth with our hosts? See above on Ps. lx. 12 (10.) The only variation consists in the omission of the emphatic pronoun thou, which is expressed in the parallel passage, and only implied in the one before us. Some interpreters suppose a sudden change of construction from the third to the second person. Is it not God—(even thou who) didst cast us off, etc.

13 (12.) Give us help from the enemy (or from distress); ana

(the rather because) vain is the salvation of man, meaning that which he affords. See above, on Ps. lx. 13 (11), which agrees with this exactly.

14 (13.) In God we will make (i. e. gain or gather) strength, and he will tread down (or trample on) our adversaries (persecutors or oppressors.) See above, on Ps. lx. 14 (12), between which and the verse before us there is not the slightest difference.

PSALM CIX.

THIS psalm consists of three parts; a complaint of slanderous and malignant enemies, vs. 1—5; a prayer for the punishment of such, vs. 6—20; and a prayer for the sufferer's own deliverance, with a promise of thanksgiving, vs. 21—31. According to the theory repeatedly referred to, this is the second psalm of a Davidic trilogy. See above, on Ps. cviii. This psalm is remarkable on two accounts; first, as containing the most striking instances of what are called the imprecations of the psalms; and then, as having been applied in the most explicit manner to the sufferings of our Saviour from the treachery of Judas, and to the miserable fate of the latter. These two peculiarities are perhaps more closely connected than they may at first sight seem. Perhaps the best solution of the first is that afforded by the second, or at least by the hypothesis, that the Psalmist, under the direction of the Spirit, viewed the sufferings of Israel, which furnished the occasion of the psalm, as a historical type of the Messiah's sufferings from the treachery of Judas, representing that of Judah, and that with this view he expresses his abhorrence of the crime, and acquiesces in the justice of its punishment, in stronger terms than would have been, or are elsewhere, employed in reference to ordinary criminals.

1. To the Chief Musician. By David. A Psalm. God of my praise, be not silent. The first inscription was particularly necessary here because the psalm might otherwise have seemed to be a mere expression of strong personal feeling. See above, on Ps. li. 1. God of my praise, i. e. the object of it, whom I delight, or am accustomed, or have cause, to praise. Be not silent means not merely do not refuse to answer, but amidst the threats and railings of my enemies, let thy voice be heard also. See above, on Ps. xxviii. 1. xxxv. 22. xxxix. 13. (12.)

2. For a wicked mouth and a mouth of deceit they have opened; they have spoken against me with a tongue of falsehood. Compare Ps. xxxv. 11. lv. 4 (3.) The subject of the first verb is his enemies, and not the nouns preceding, as the verb translated open is elsewhere always active. Against me, literally, with me, implying that they charged him falsely to his face, a circumstance remarkably fulfilled in Christ. See Matth. xxvi. 59.

3. And with words of hatred they have compassed me, and have fought against me without cause. See above, on Ps. xxxv. 20. xxxvi. 4 (3.) .

4. In return for my love they are my adversaries—and I (am) prayer. The first word in Hebrew strictly means instead or in lieu of. The unusual expression at the end can only mean, I am all prayer, I do nothing but pray, which some understand to signify, I bear their persecution meekly and continue my devotions undisturbed by their calumnies and insults. But as the whole context is descriptive, not of the sufferer's behaviour but of his enemies', a more probable sense is, I am forced to be continually praying for protection against them and deliverance from them.

5. They lay upon me evil instead of good and hatred instead of love. The first verb literally means they set or place. Instead of the good and the love which they owed me, or in return for my kindness and love to them, as in v. 4.

6. Appoint thou over him a wicked one, and let an adversary stand upon his right hand. The first verb in Hebrew means to place one in authority or charge over another. See Gen. xxxix. 5. xli. 34. Num. i. 50 and compare Lev. xxvi. 16. Jer. xv. 3. Wicked one and adversary (Satan), although here used as appellatives or common nouns, are the very terms applied, in the later scriptures, to the Evil Spirit or the Devil. See Job i. 6. ii. 1. 1 Chr. xxi. 1. Zech. iii. 1, 2. In the place last cited he stands too at the right hand of the sinner to accuse him. The change of number in the verse before us might, in conformity with usage, be explained as a mere difference of form, the ideal person denoted by the singular being really the type and representative of the whole class denoted by the plural. But the constancy with which the change, in this case, is adhered to, rather favours the conclusion, that a real individual is meant, to whom the Psalmist turns from the promiscuous crowd of his oppressors. For a similar transition, see above, on Ps. lv. 13 (12.)

7. When he is tried he shall go forth guilty, and his prayer shall be for sin. The future meaning of the second verb is determined by the form of the third, which is not apocopated, as in vs. 12, 13. When he is tried, literally, in his being tried. The next phrase simply means that he shall be condemned; the last clause, that his very prayer for mercy shall be reckoned as a new offence, a strong description of extreme judicial rigour and inexorable justice.

8. Let his days be few—his office let another take The word translated office is a collateral derivative of the verb at the beginning of v. 6, and means commission, charge. This expression makes it still more probable that a real individual is referred to, as the possession of a charge or office could not be common to the whole class of malignant enemies. The Septuagint version is ἐπισκοπήν, oversight or supervision, corresponding exactly to the meaning of the Hebrew verb in v. 6. This translation is retained in Acts i. 20, where the verse before us is expressly quoted by Peter, as “written in the book of Psalms,” and applied to the case of Judas Iscariot.

9. Let his sons be orphans and his wife a widow. He here passes from the person of the criminal to the sufferings of those dependent on him. See Ex. xx. 5.

10. And wander—wander—let his sons and beg, and seek (their food) from (among) their ruins. The emphatic repetition of the first verb is expressed, in the English Bible, by a paraphrase, let his children be continually vagabonds. The last clause is extremely graphic, representing them as creeping forth in search of food from amidst the ruins of their habitations.

11. Let a creditor entrap all he has, and strangers plunder (the fruit of) his labour. The first noun originally means a lender, but in usage has the accessory sense of a hard creditor, an extortioner. The verb means to lay a snare for, as in Ps. xxxviii. 13 (12.) Strangers, not his natural heirs, not members of his family. See Deut. xxv. 5.

12. Let there be no one to him extending mercy, and let there be no one showing favour to his orphans. The verb translated extend literally means draw out, prolong, and is applied to the continued indulgence both of hostile and amicable feelings. See above, on Ps. xxviii. 3. xxxvi. 11 (10.) lxxxv. 6 (5.) Showing favour, exercising mercy, as in Ps. xxxvii. 21.

13. Let his posterity be cut off; in the next generation, blotted out be their name. The word for posterity strictly means futurity, after part, or latter end. See above, Ps. xxxvii. 37, 38. Cut off, literally, for cutting off. The next or after generation, as in Ps. xlviii. 14 (13.) The plural pronoun their refers to the collective noun posterity.

14. Let the guilt of his fathers be remembered by Jehovah, and his mother's sin not blotted out. This is perhaps the most fearful imprecation in the psalm, as it extends the consequences of transgression, not merely to the children, who might naturally be expected to partake of them, but to the parents. It is not to be forgotten, however, that in all such cases, the personal guilt of the implicated parties is presupposed, and not inferred from their connection with the principals. Remembered by (literally to) Jehovah, which may possibly mean brought to his remembrance, recalled to mind by another, perhaps by the accuser before mentioned.

15. Let them be before Jehovah always, and let him cut off from the earth their memory. The subject of the first clause is the guilt and sin mentioned in the verse preceding. Before Jehovah, in his sight, an object of attention to him. See above, Ps. xc. 8 With the last clause compare Ps. ix. 7 (6.) xxxiv. 17 (16.)

16. Because that he did not remember to do mercy, and persecuted an afflicted and poor man, and one smitten in heart, to kill (him.) There is an antithesis between the remember of this verse and the remembered of v.14. Though he did not remember mercy God remembers guilt. The last phrase, to kill, denotes both the design and the extent of the malignant persecution, which was deadly or to death. The object of the persecution is the psalmist himself, or the ideal person whom he represents. See v. 22.

17. And he loved a curse, and it has come (upon) him; and he delighted not in blessing, and it has removed far from him. This verse contemplates the event as actually past. The optative meaning, given to the verbs in the English Bible, is as inconsistent with the form of the original as the future meaning given in the Prayer Book and the ancient versions.

18. And he has put on cursing as his garment, and it has come like water into his inside, and like oil into his bones. There is an obvious climax in this verse. That which is first described as the man's exterior covering, is then said to be within him, first as water, then as oil or fat, first in the vessels of his body, then in his very bones. The general idea is that the curse, which he denounced and endeavoured to inflict on others, has taken possession of himself, both within and without. Compare Num. v. 23, 24, 27. The first clause admits of a different construction, which would make it descriptive of the crime and not the punishment. He put on cursing as his garment, and (now) it has come, etc. This construction introduces an antithesis, and thereby adds to the point of the sentence, and is also recommended by the analogy of v. 17.

19. Let it be to him as a garment (that) he wears, and for a belt let him always gird it. This is not a mere reiteration of the figure in the first clause of v. 18, but conveys the additional idea of a habitual and constant presence. The word belt is used in the translation of the last clause, because the Hebrew word to which it corresponds is not the usual derivative of the verb that follows, but etymologically unconnected with it.

20. (Be) this the wages of my adversaries from Jehovah, and of those speaking evil against my soul. The pronoun this in the first clause refers to the whole preceding series of denunciations. The word translated wages means originally work, and secondarily the price or recompense of work or labour, and is so used in the law of Moses. See Lev. xix. 13. It is here peculiarly appropriate because it represents the misfortunes of his enemies as the direct fruit of their own misconduct. No single word in English can express this double meaning of the Hebrew. Such is their work and such their wages. The word translated adversaries is a cognate form to that used in v. 6, and might suggest the idea of my Satans; but this would probably convey too much. From Jehovah, their reward or recompense to be expected from him, or already bestowed by him. The description in the last clause includes insult, slander, and malicious plotting.

21. And thou, Jehovah, Lord, do with me for thy name's sake, because good is thy mercy, set me free. The emphatic thou at the beginning indicates a contrast between God and his oppressors. Do with me is a common English phrase meaning deal with me, dispose of me; but no such idiom exists in Hebrew, and the best authorities regard the construction as elliptical and make it mean, do kindness (or shew mercy) to me. With the last clause compare Ps. lxxiii. 4 (3.) lxxix. 17 (16.)

22. For afflicted and poor (am) I, and my heart is wounded within me. This, though indefinite in form, is equivalent to saying, I am the afflicted and poor man whom the malignant adversary persecuted, as was said in v. 16. The word translated wounded strictly means pierced or perforated, a stronger expression than the one in v. 16. With the first clause compare Ps. xi. 18 (17.) lxxix. 30 (29.)

23. Like a shadow at its turning I am gone; I am driven away like the locust. The first comparison is the same with that in Ps. cii. 12. Our idiom enables us to imitate the phrase I am gone, a passive which in Hebrew occurs only here. The other verb is rare, but its meaning is sufficiently determined by usage. The allusion here is to the violence with which a cloud of locusts in the east is scattered by the wind. Compare Ex. x. 19. Joel ii. 20 Nah. iii. 17.

24. My knees totter from fasting, and my flesh fails from fatness. The last phrase is obscure but seems to mean from being fat, so that it is not fat; the privative usage of the preposition being very common. The sense thus put upon the verb is justified by the analogy of Isai. lviii. 11, where an equivalent expression is applied to failing waters. Some interpreters, however, insist upon retaining the strict sense both of verb and noun, and understand the clause to mean, my flesh lies or deceives the eye, by no longer appearing as it once did, or by seeming to exist when it is gone, from oil, i. e. from want of oil, because no longer taken care of and anointed. But no construction could well be more forced and far-fetched. It may also be objected that the external use of oil was to anoint the head on festive occasions, not to fatten the person or preserve the flesh.

25. And I have been a reproach to them, they see me, they shake their head. A reproach, an object of contempt, as in Ps. xxii. 7 (6.) xxxi. 12 (11.) As to the meaning of the gesture mentioned in the last clause, see above, on Ps. xxii. 8 (7.)

26. Help me, Jehovah, my God, save me, according to thy mercy. The renewed description of his sufferings, in vs. 22—25, is followed by a renewed petition for deliverance, corresponding to that in v. 21. According to thy mercy, i. e. in proportion to its greatness and the freeness with which it is exercised.

27. And they shall know that this (is) thy hand; thou, Jehovah hast done it. The optative construction, let them know, and the subjunctive one, that they may know, are really involved in the more exact translation, they shall know. The subject of the verb may be men in general, or the persecuting adversaries in particular, more probably the latter, because they are referred to, both before and after. This is thy hand, i. e. this deliverance is the product of thy power. Compare Ps. lix. 14 (13.)

28 They will curse, and thou wilt bless; they have risen up, and shall be shamed, and thy servant shall be glad. The first clause, expressed in our idiom, would be, they may curse but thou wilt bless. Risen up, i. e. against me, a favourite expression in the Psalms. Shamed, in the pregnant sense of being disappointed, defeated, confounded. Thy servant, i. e. I as such, in that capacity or character.

29. Clothed shall my adversaries be with confusion, and dressed, as a robe, in their shame This is not the mere expression of a wish, like that in v. 18, which would here be out of place, but a confident anticipation, with which he concludes the psalm. Compare Ps. lxxi. 13. The word translated robe denotes a garment reaching to the feet, and expresses therefore still more strongly the idea that his foes shall be completely covered with confusion.

30. I will thank Jehovah greatly with my mouth, and in the midst of many will I praise him. He vows that his thanksgiving shall not be merely mental or domestic, but audible and public. With the last clause compare Ps. xxii. 23 (22.)

31. For he will stand at the right hand of a poor (man), to save (him) from the judges of his soul. This assigns the special reason of his promised praise. The verse is in strong contrast to v. 6 above, especially if Satan be there taken as a proper name. The right hand here is not the place of honour but of protection

A poor man, as in v. 16, means this poor man, i. e. me a poor man. Compare Ps. xxxiv. 7 (6) The last clause is correctly paraphrased in the common version, those that condemn his soul.

P S A L M C X .

THIS is the counterpart of the Second Psalm, completing the prophetic picture of the conquering Messiah. The progressive development of the Messianic doctrine lies in this, that the Kingship of Messiah, there alleged and confirmed by a divine decree, is here assumed at the beginning, and then shown to be connected with his Priesthood, which is also solemnly proclaimed, and its perpetuity ensured by a divine oath. This constitutes the centre of the psalm, v. 4, to which all the rest is either introductory, vs. 1—3, or supplementary, v. 5—7. The repeated, explicit, and emphatic application of this psalm, in the New Testament, to Jesus Christ, is so far from being arbitrary or at variance with the obvious import of the psalm itself, that any other application is ridiculous. The chief peculiarity of form is a frequent change of person, not unlike that in Ps. xci.

1. By David. A Psalm. Thus saith Jehovah to my Lord, Sit thou at my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool. The ascription of the psalm to David is not only uncontradicted by external evidence, but corroborated by the internal character of the composition, its laconic energy, its martial tone, its triumphant confidence, and its resemblance to other undisputed psalms of David. In addition to all this, we have the authority of Christ himself, who not only speaks of it as David's, but founds an argument upon it, the whole force of which depends upon its having been composed by him. See Matt. xxii. 43

Mark xii. 36. Luke xx. 42, and compare Acts ii. 34. As a further confirmation of the truth of this inscription, some allege the obvious relation of this psalm to those before it, as forming with them a Davidic trilogy. See above, on Ps. cviii. 1. Thus saith Jehovah, or more exactly, a dictum (or saying) of Jehovah. For the origin and usage of this formula, used only in prophetic declarations, see above on Ps. xxxvi. 2 (1.) My Lord, i. e. David's, as our Saviour explicitly declares in the passages already cited, yet not of David merely as a private person, nor even as an individual king, but as representing his own royal race and the house of Israel over which it reigned. The person thus described as the superior and sovereign of David and his house and of all Israel, could not possibly be David himself, nor any of his sons and successors except one, who, by virtue of his twofold nature, was at once his sovereign and his son. See Rom. i. 3, 4. That the Lord here meant was universally identified with the Messiah by the ancient Jews, is clear, not only from their own traditions, but from Christ's assuming this interpretation as the basis of his argument to prove the Messiah's superhuman nature, and from the fact that his opponents, far from questioning this fact, were unable to answer him a word, and afraid to interrogate him further (Matt. xxii. 46.) The original form of expression, in the phrase Sit at my right hand, is the same as in Ps. cix. 31. A seat at the right hand of a king is mentioned in the Scriptures as a place of honour, not arbitrarily, but as implying a participation in his power, of which the right hand is a constant symbol. See above, on Ps. xlv. 10 (9), and compare Matt. xix. 28. The sitting posture is appropriate to kings who are frequently described as sitting on their thrones. See above, on Ps. xxix. 10. In this case, however, the posture is of less moment than the position. Hence Stephen sees Christ standing at the right hand of God (Acts vii. 55, 56), and Paul simply says he is there (Rom. viii. 34.) The participation in the divine power, thus ascribed to the Messiah, is a special and extraordinary one, having reference to the total subjugation of his enemies. This idea is expressed by the figure of their being made his footstool, perhaps with allusion to the ancient practice spoken of in Josh. x. 24. This figure itself, however, presupposes the act of sitting on a throne. It does not imply inactivity, as some suppose, or mean that Jehovah would conquer his foes for him, without any intervention of his own. The idea running through the whole psalm is, that it is in and through him that Jehovah acts for the destruction of his enemies, and that for this very end he is invested with almighty power, as denoted by his session at the right hand of God. This session is to last until the total subjugation of his enemies, that is to say, this special and extraordinary power of the Messiah is then to terminate, a representation which agrees exactly with that of Paul in 1 Cor. xv. 24—28, where the verse before us is distinctly referred to, although not expressly quoted. It is therefore needless, though grammatical, to give the until an inclusive meaning, namely, until then and afterwards, as in Ps. exii. 8 below. This verse, it has been said, is more frequently quoted or referred to, in the New Testament, than any other in the Hebrew Bible. Besides the passages already cited, it lies at the foundation of all those which represent Christ as sitting at the right hand of the Father. See Matt. xxvi. 64. 1 Cor. xv. 25. Eph. i. 20—22. Phil. ii. 9—11. Heb. i. 3, 14. viii. 1. x. 12, 13. 1 Pet. iii. 22, and compare Rev. iii. 21.

2. The rod of thy strength will Jehovah send forth from Zion, rule thou in the midst of thine enemies. The Psalmist now addresses the Messiah directly. The idea latent in the figures of the first verse, namely that of power, is here expressed. The word (מִצֵּד) translated rod never means a sceptre, as the synonymous term (מִצֵּד) sometimes does, from which it is distinguished by Ezekiel (xix. 11), but a rod of correction and of chastisement. See Jer. xlvi. 12, and compare Isai. ix. 3 (4.) x. 5, 15, xiv. 4, 5 Ez. vii. 10, 11. It is here named as the instrument with which the foes are to be subdued. Compare Ps. ii. 9. There may be an allusion to the rod of Moses. See Ex. xiv. 16, 21, and compare Isai. x. 24, 26. The rod of thy strength, or thy rod of strength, thy strong rod, or rather the rod by means of which thine own strength is to be exerted. As this strength is not human but divine, it is said to be sent forth by Jehovah out of Zion, considered as his earthly residence, the seat of the theocracy. See above, on Ps. xx. 3 (2.) The verb translated rule is not applied in usage to a peaceful reign, but to coercive or compulsory dominion over conquered enemies. See above, on Ps. xlix. 15 (14), and compare Num. xxiv. 19. The imperative here involves prediction in its strongest form. As if he had said: All is ready for the conquest; there is no resistance; there can be no doubt of the result; rule, therefore, in the midst thine enemies, i. e. over the very enemies by whom thou art surrounded, and who threatened to dethrone thee.

3. Thy people (are) free-will-offerings in the day of thy power, in holy decorations, from the womb of the dawn, to thee (is) the dew of thy youth. Every member of this very obscure verse has been a subject of dispute and of conflicting explanations. The common version of the first words (thy people shall be willing) is entirely inadmissible as an exact translation, since the word translated willing is a plural substantive of the feminine gender, and not an adjective agreeing with the masculine singular noun people. The idea, however, is the same, but expressed with far more strength and beauty. The plural noun just mentioned is the one used to denote spontaneous gifts, or freewill-offerings, under the law of Moses. See above, on Ps. liv. 8 (7), and compare Ex. xxv. 2. xxxv. 29. xxxvi. 3. Lev. xxii. 23. By supplying the correlative verb, which may be considered as latent in the noun, we obtain the sense, thy people (offer) voluntary gifts. But by supplying the substantive verb, which is far more natural and common, we obtain the still more striking sense, thy people are themselves such gifts, i. e. they freely consecrate themselves to God. In this sense of voluntary self-dedication the reflexive form of the verbal root is used even in historical prose (1 Chr. xxix. 14, 17), especially in reference to military service (Judg. v. 2, 9. 2 Chr. xvii. 16.) The day of thy power, the day in which it is exerted and displayed in the subjugation of thine enemies. The next phrase literally means, in beauties (or ornaments) of holiness, which may either have its obvious spiritual sense, as in Ps. xxix. 2, or that of holy decorations, with allusion to the sacerdotal dress, which is expressly called garments of holiness, Lev. xvi. 4. The last is the sense put by the modern interpreters upon the phrase, which then means that the people, when they make this solemn offering of themselves to God, appear clothed in sacerdotal vestments, as the servants of a priestly king (v. 4 below), and themselves a "kingdom of priests" (Ex. xix. 6.) The womb of the dawn (or day-break) is a very strong poetical description of the origin or source of the dew which immediately follows, and the sense of which must determine that of the whole clause. The most probable opinions as to this point are the following. Some suppose the clause to be descriptive of the multitude of warriors who devote themselves to the Messiah, and who are then described as no less numerous than the drops of dew born from the womb of morning. The objection to this is, that it lays too much stress upon mere numbers, and expresses that idea by a figure neither common nor altogether natural. Another explanation makes the point of the comparison with dew, not numbers, but beauty, brilliancy thus corresponding to the holy decorations of the other clause. Here again the comparison selected is by no means obvious, much less familiar. Lovely or beautiful as dew is not a combination likely to occur to the mind of any writer. In the two interpretations which have now been given, youth must be taken in the sense of young men, like the Latin pubes and juventus, when applied to a youthful soldiery, or made to qualify the noun before outhful dew, still meaning the young warriors. But of such a figure there is not a trace in Hebrew usage, and in the only other place where the word (יָלֵךְ) occurs, it evidently means youth, as a period of human life (Ecc. xi. 9, 10.) Free from all these objections is the supposition, that the clause relates not to the numbers or the beauty of Messiah's people, but to their perpetual succession, expressed by a fine poetical comparison with dew, engendered afresh daily from the womb of the morning. Youth will then have its proper sense, as denoting the perpetual youth of the Messiah, whose body is thus constantly renewed by the successive generations of his people. This construction also enables us to divide the clause more equally than in the masoretic interpunction, which, at all events, is either incorrect or rather musical than logical.

4. Sworn hath Jehovah, and will not repent, Thou (shalt be) a priest forever, after the order of Melchizedek. The declaration in the last clause of v. 3 is here repeated in another form, and with a statement of the ground or reason upon which it rests. What was there poetically represented as the perpetual youth of the Messiah is here more solemnly described as a perpetual priesthood, indissolubly blended with a perpetual kingship, both secured by the oath of God himself. He will not repent, there is no fear or even possibility of his breaking or retracting this engagement, for such it is, and not a mere declaratory attestation of the present fact or general truth, as it might seem to be from the common version, not only here but in Heb. v. 6. vii. 17, 21, in every one of which places the Greek conforms exactly to the Septuagint version and the Hebrew text, the art being constantly supplied by the translators. That the clause is a promise, and as such relates directly to the future, is clear from the whole tenor of the psalm as a prophetic one, as well as from the oath, which is not used in Scripture to attest mere matters of fact, but to confirm the divine promise and threatenings. The indefinite expression, a priest, is intended to describe the office in itself considered, without reference to temporary distinctions and gradations. It therefore comprehends whatever appertained to the office of the High Priest, as the head and representative of all the rest. After the order, i. e. according to the manner, character, or institution. It is remarkable that this phrase (like תָּרַדְךָ in v. 3) is almost peculiar to this psalm and the book of Ecclesiastes, being found besides in only one place (Job v. 8.) In all the direct quotations of the verse in Hebrews, the Septuagint version of this word (τάξις) is retained. But in one of the more indirect citations (Heb. vii. 15) another word (ὁμοιότητα) is substituted, showing that the essential idea is that of likeness or resemblance. This likeness consists primarily in the union of the regal and sacerdotal offices. See Gen. xiv. 18. The meaning of the verse in its original connection is, that this royal conqueror is also a priest, who makes atonement for the sins of his people, and thus enables and disposes them to make the dedication of themselves described in the preceding verse. The perpetuity of this relation, and its confirmation by the oath of God, are attendant circumstances but essential, and as such insisted on by the apostle, Heb. vii. 20—24. The coincidences founded on the meaning of the names Melchizedek and Salem (Heb. vii. 2), and on the want of hierarchal succession in both cases (Heb. vii. 3), are perfectly legitimate but not essential to the understanding of the verse in its original connection. The inspired commentary on this sentence, which occupies the whole seventh chapter of Hebrews, is not intended merely to explain its meaning, but also to make use of its terms, and the associations coupled with them, as a vehicle of other kindred truths, belonging to the Christian revelation, and not necessarily suggested by the Psalm to its original readers.

5. The Lord on thy right hand has smitten, in the day of his anger, kings. Some suppose this to be addressed to Jehovah, and the Lord to mean Messiah, on the ground that they could not each be on the right hand of the other. See above, v. 1. That they could be so, however, only shows that the whole description is a figurative one, and that the principal figure has a two-fold meaning. On the right hand has precisely the same meaning here as in Ps. cix. 31, where it denotes the place of protection or assistance, the figure being probably derived from the usages of war, in which one who succours or protects another may be said to strengthen his right hand, as the member which he uses in his own defence. In one sense, therefore, the Lord is at the right hand of Jehovah; in another sense, Jehovah is at his. This assistance, far from excluding, presupposes his own action, or rather, what Jehovah is described as doing for him he does through him. See above, on v. 1. The word translated sm te is very strong and has repeatedly occurred before. See above, on Ps xviii. 39 (38.) lxviii. 22, 24 (21, 23.) The day of Jehovah's wrath is coincident with that of the Lord's strength in v. 3. The strength of the Messiah, as a conqueror, is to be exerted in giving effect to Jehovah's wrath against his enemies. The position of the word kings at the end of the sentence, although harsh and almost ungrammatical in English, is retained in the translation for the sake of its effect upon the emphasis and point of the description. The objects of Jehovah's wrath and the Messiah's strokes are not to be mere ordinary men, but kings, if they continue to oppose themselves. See above, on Ps. ii. 2, 10. The tense of the verb may be regarded as an instance of praeteritum propheticum, describing what is certainly to happen as already past.

6. He will judge among the nations—he has fill'd (them) with corpses—he has smitten the head over much land (or over the wide earth.) By another sudden change of form, the Messiah is again spoken of as a third person. The judgment here ascribed to him is only another name and figure for the conquest just described. The form of expression in the last clause is unusual and obscure. The common version makes both head and land collectives, the heads over many countries. Some interpreters explain the second word in this way, but the first more strictly, as denoting a single ruler over many countries. Others invert the terms and understand by head the various chiefs of nations, but by earth the whole earth with its qualifying epithet of great or wide. Amidst these questions of construction or minute interpretation, the general idea is clear enough, to wit, that of universal conquest on the part of the Messiah, and extending to all earthly principalities and powers.

7. From the brook in the way he will drink, therefore will he raise the head. According to the masoretic interpunction, in the way does not qualify the brook but he will drink, a distinction of little exegetical importance. Unlike the foregoing verse, the one before us is perfectly clear in its particular expressions, but obscure in its general import and relation to the context. The most probable meaning of the first clause is, that he shall not be exhausted like those wandering in the desert (Ps. cii. 24. cvii. 4, 5) but refreshed and strengthened, with a reference, as some suppose, to the relief experienced by Samson (Judg. xv. 18, 19.) The raising of the head, in the last clause, is an obvious and intelligible figure for exhilaration, or relief from dejection and depression, which is naturally indicated by the hanging of the head. The only question is whether this effect is here supposed to be produced in the conqueror himself or in others. In favour of the former explanation is the parallel clause, which represents him as assuaging his own thirst. In favour of the other is the analogy of Ps. iii. 4 (3) xxvii. 6, where God is said to raise the head of man. As in other doubtful cases, where the senses are not incompatible or exclusive of each other, it is safe, if not entirely satisfactory, to leave them side by side, the rather as the words could probably not fail to suggest both ideas to the Hebrew reader.

P S A L M C X I

THIS is an alphabetical psalm, in which the Hebrew letters mark the beginning not of verses but of clauses. The first eight verses contain each two clauses; the last two consist of three. The psalm begins with an invitation to the public praise of God, v. 1, then assigns, as the ground and object of this praise, his dealings with his people, vs. 2—9, and ends with the conclusion, that the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom, v. 10. There is nothing in the psalm itself to determine its date or its historical occasion. According to Hengstenberg, it is the first psalm of a trilogy, added to the ancient one preceding (Ps. cviii—cx.) after the return from exile.

1. Hallelujah! I will thank Jehovah with a whole heart, in the company of the upright and in the congregation. The Hallelujah (praise ye Jah) marks the designation of the latter psalms for permanent use in public worship, as the inscription to the chief musician does that of the older ones. With a whole heart, or with all (my) heart, as it is fully expressed in Ps. lxxxvi. 12. Compare Ps. cxix. 2. The word translated company means properly a circle of confidential friends. See above, on Ps. xxv. 14. lv. 15 (14.) lxiv. 3 (2.) lxxxiii. 4 (3.) It is here applied to the church or chosen people, as constituting such a company or circle, in opposition to the world without. It is not therefore really distinct from the congregation mentioned in the last clause, but another name for it. The upright (or straightforward) is a title given to the true Israel, from the days of Balaam downwards. See Num. xxiv 10.

2 Great are the works of Jehovah, sought (according) to all their desires. The common version of the last phrase, all them that have pleasure therein, supposes the text to be differently pointed, as in Ps. xl. 15 (14,) lxx. 3 (2.) The received text can only mean to (for or according to) all their wishes. The antecedent of the pronoun (their) seems to be the upright in v. 1. For a similar construction of the same pronoun, see below, on v. 10. The clause, thus construed, is obscure, but may be understood to mean, that when the works of God are sought out, investigated, or explored, their greatness fully satisfies the hopes and wishes of his people. Another possible sense is, that they are sought for, i. e. the experience or knowledge of them eagerly desired, with (literally as to) all their wishes, i. e. with avidity, or, as it is expressed in the preceding verse, with all the heart.

3. Honour and majesty (is) his work—and his righteousness standing forever. In the first clause, work is the subject of the proposition, honour and majesty the predicate. His work is honour and majesty, i. e. all that he does is noble and majestic, worthy of the great King, to whom these epithets are often applied elsewhere. See above, on Ps. civ. 1. His work means specifically here what he does for the protection and deliverance of his people. In the last clause, as in many other places, this work is referred to his righteousness, not his justice, in the technical and strict sense, but his rectitude, including his fidelity to his engagements, and securing the exercise of his covenanted mercy. This seems more natural than to explain it as meaning the practical justification of his people by his providential care of them. Standing to eternity (or perpetuity), not fitful or capricious, not confined or temporary, but perpetual and constant.

4. A memory has he made for his wonderful works; gracious and compassionate (is) Jehovah. The first clause, though not exactly rendered, is correctly paraphrased in the English Bible, he hath made his wonderful works to be remembered, and still more freely in the Prayer Book version. The last clause shows that the wonderful works of the first are not the wonders of creation, nor those of providence in general, but those wrought for the benefit of Israel. The terms of this clause are borrowed from Ex. xxxiv. 6. See above, on Ps. ciii. 8.

5. Prey hath he given to those fearing him ; he will remember to eternity his covenant. The first word properly denotes the food of wild beasts, and may here be either a poetical equivalent to food, provision, as in Prov. xxxi. 15. Mal. iii. 10, or intended to suggest the additional idea of food obtained at the expense of enemies. In either case there seems to be no reason for restricting the clause to the supply of Israel in the desert, although that would necessarily occur to every reader, as the great historical example of the general fact alleged, and in the last clause represented as a proof of God's fidelity to covenant engagements.

6. The power of his works he has declared to his people, (so as) to give to them a heritage of nations. He has shown them what powerful things he can do, by favouring them so far as to drive out nations from their seats, and make his people their successors and, as it were, their heirs. This refers to the conquest of Canaan, as the first in a long series of such dispossessions, including all the territories gained in war from the surrounding nations, till the death of David. The construction of to give as a gerund (by giving) is not a Hebrew idiom, and restricts the meaning of the clause unduly. See above, on Ps. lxxviii. 18.

7. The works of his hands are truth and judgment ; sure (are) all his precepts. The second clause is not an iteration of the first, but an inference from it. If what God does himself is always done in faithfulness and justice to his people, then what he requires them to do must certainly be right and best, and his requisitions therefore may be trusted and confided in, the true sense of the adjective or participle here employed.

8. Settled for ever and ever, done in truth and right. The subjects are the same as in v. 7, but presented in an inverse order, the first clause relating to the precepts, the last to the works, of God. The former are settled, firmly supported, founded, or established, not capricious and precarious. The latter, by which they are recommended and attested (see above, on v. 9), are works of faithfulness and rectitude. The last word in Hebrew is an adjective used as a neuter or abstract noun, in which respect the English right resembles it.

9. Redemption he has sent to his people ; he has ordained to eternity his covenant ; holy and fearful is his name. That this verse was intended to consist of three clauses, is clear from the fact that it contains three letters of the alphabet in regular succession. The same thing is true of the remaining verse. The first clause relates mainly, not exclusively, to the deliverance from Egypt. As in v. 5, the second clause affirms a general truth, attested and exemplified by the particular fact mentioned in the first. Fearful, not merely to his foes but to his people, who can never cease to worship him with holy awe.

10. The beginning of wisdom is the fear of Jehovah ; a good understanding (is) to all (those) doing them ; his praise endureth forever. This is the conclusion drawn from all that goes before. Since all God's dealings with his people are in faithfulness and truth, and his commands not only are but must be right, then the first step in wisdom, its first principle or element, is reverence for such a Being, proved by obedience to his will. The same sentiment occurs in Prov. i. 7. ix. 10. Job. xxviii. 28. The intimate connection of the verse, notwithstanding its proverbial or aphoristic form, with the foregoing context, is apparent from the reference of the pronoun them to the plural nouns of the preceding verses. Endureth forever, literally, (is) standing to eternity. This is equivalent to saying that he will and must be praised forever, corresponding to the Hallelujah, at the beginning of the psalm.

PSALM CXII.

ANOTHER alphabetical psalm of precisely the same character, coinciding with the one before it, even in the number of verses, and the number of clauses in each verse. This formal agreement shows the intimate connection of the two compositions, and makes it highly probable that they belong not only to the same age but to the same author, and were meant to form parts of one continued series or system. This psalm begins precisely where the one before it ends, i. e. with the happiness arising from the fear of God, v. 1, the blessed effects of which are then recounted under several particulars, vs. 2—9, and finally contrasted with the fate of the ungodly, v. 10.

1. Happy the man fearing Jehovah, in his commandment: delighting greatly. There is here not only an obvious connection with the close of the preceding psalm, but an obvious advance upon it or progression of ideas. As the fear of the Lord is there declared to be the principle of all true wisdom, so here it is declared to be the source of all true happiness. The second clause defines the meaning of the first by showing, that the fear there mentioned is a fear consistent with, or rather necessarily involving, a complacent acquiescence in God's will, thus entirely exclud ing a mere slavish dread, which is incompatible with such a disposition.

2. Mighty in the earth shall be his seed; the race of the upright shall be blessed. The first phrase is borrowed from Gen. x. 8, and would at once suggest to every Hebrew reader the idea of a mighty man like Nimrod and the other ancient heroes. Now a promise of personal heroism is perhaps without analogy, especially as given to the son, to the exclusion of the father. This anomaly can be avoided only by assuming, what is probable enough in itself, that the ideal person here described represents the chosen people, the upright of the other clause, each successive generation of whom might be expected to excel its predecessors in heroic eminence.

3. Wealth and riches (are) in his house, and his righteousness endureth forever. Not only in his dwelling but in his family, so that his wealth or prosperity might have been said to endure forever as well as his righteousness, i. e. his recognition and reception as a righteous person, his justification. Endureth, literally, (is) standing, the same expression that is used in Ps. cxi. 3 of God himself. There is also an analogy, at least in form, between the majesty and honour of the righteous God and the wealth and riches of the righteous man.

4. There arises in the darkness light to the upright—kind and compassionate and righteous. The figure in the first clause is a natural and common one, denoting relief from deep distress. See above, on Ps. xcvii. 11. In the last clause we have another instance of the singular way in which terms applied to God in the preceding psalm are copied and applied to man in this. The first two epithets in this clause are employed above in Ps. cxi. 4. The principle involved may be the same as in Luke vi. 36, "be ye therefore merciful as your Father also is merciful." Compare

Matt. v. 48. To these two epithets is added that of righteous, in the wide sense including both the others. The construction of the sentence is unusual and doubtful; but most probably the second clause sustains the same relation to the other as in v. 1; that is to say, it limits and defines the general description upright, by confining it to such as have the qualities expressed by the three adjectives that follow. The alternation of the numbers is familiar where the singular denotes an ideal individual including many real ones.

5. Happy the man showing favour and lending; he shall sustain his affairs by justice. The first word in Hebrew, which means good, is here descriptive not of character but of condition, and denotes good fortune. It is used in the same sense by Isaiah (iii. 10) and Jeremiah (xliv. 17.) The common version (a good man) is forbidden by the Hebrew collocation. Lending, not as a financial or commercial operation, but as an act of charity, lending to the poor. The verb in the last clause strictly means to provide for or sustain, especially with food. See above, on Ps. lv. 23 (22.) It is here applied to the control and management of all one's interests. Affairs, literally, words, but in the wider sense of that which words denote, namely, things, affairs, in which sense it is sometimes applied to causes or suits at law. The last word is commonly translated judgment, not in the sense of discretion, given in the English versions, but in that of practical justice, righteous conduct. He shall best secure his own interests by treating those of others justly and generously.

6. For to eternity he shall not be moved; to the memory of eternity he shall be righteous. The for assigns the reason for his being pronounced happy. Moved, i. e. from his prosperous condition, or from his position as a righteous man. The construction of the last clause in the English versions (the righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance) is grammatical, and yields a good sense ; but the latest interpreters prefer another, which makes to everlasting remembrance mean the same as to eternity. As long as he shall be remembered, he shall be remembered as a righteous man. This construction has the advantage of making the parallelism more exact.

7. From evil tidings he shall not fear ; fixed is his heart, trusting in Jehovah. The first Hebrew noun is in the singular number, and is properly a participle passive meaning heard, used absolutely as a noun denoting what is heard, a rumour or report, news or tidings. The common version (he shall not be afraid of evil tidings) seems to confine the negation to the mere apprehension or anticipation of bad news, whereas the original expression comprehends, and indeed more properly denotes, being frightened when the evil tidings are heard. A fixed heart is the negation both of fickleness and cowardice. See above, on Ps. li. 12 (10.) lvii. 8 (7.) cviii. 1. Instead of the active participle trusting, the Hebrew has the passive trusted, analogous to that in Ps. ciii. 14.

8. Settled (is) his heart, he shall not fear, until he look upon his foes (with triumph.) The first word is another expression borrowed from the foregoing psalm, but applied in a manner altogether different. See Ps. cxi. 8, where the plural of the same participle is applied to God's commandments. The construction in the last clause is the idiomatic one of the verb see with the preposition in, which usually means to see with strong emotion, and especially with joy or triumph. See above, on Ps. l. 23. liv. 9 (7.) Until does not imply that he shall then fear, but that there will then be no occasion so to do. See above, on Ps. cx. 1.

9. He has scattered, he has given to the poor, his righteousness endureth forever, his horns shall be high with honour. The first verb denotes profuse munificence, as in Prov. xi. 34. This is alleged not as the cause but the effect, and therefore as the evidence of his being righteous. The next clause is the same as the last of v. 3. With the last clause compare Ps. lxxv. 5 (4.) lxxxix. 18 (17.)

10. The wicked shall see and fret ; his teeth he shall gnash, and shall melt away ; the desire of the wicked shall perish. He shall see, but not with triumph or delight, like the righteous in v. 8. The word translated fret means both to grieve and be angry, and has no exact equivalent in English. See above, on Ps. vi. 8 (7.) x. 14, xxxi. 10 (9.) Gnash with his teeth, a strong expression of impotent malignity. See above, on Ps. xxxv. 16, xxxvii. 12. Melt away, literally, be melted, i. e. waste or decay. See above, on Ps. xxii. 15 (14.) lxviii. 3 (2.) The desire of the wicked is his wish to see the righteous perish. Compare Prov. x. 24, 28. Job viii. 13, and the contrary promise to the humble, Ps. ix. 19 (18.)

PSALM CXIII

THE Psalmist celebrates the majesty of God, vs. 1—5, in contrast with his gracious condescension to his suffering creatures, vs. 6—9. According to a Jewish usage, which appears to have existed even in the time of Christ, the six psalms beginning with this one constitute the Greater Hallel, sung at the annual festivals, especially the Passover and the Feast of Tabernacles. According to Hengstenberg's arrangement, this psalm closes a second trilogy, added to the Davidic one (Ps. cviii—cx) after the return from Babylon.

1. Hallelujah! Praise, oh ye servants of Jehovah, praise the name of Jehovah! As the title, Servant of Jehovah, is applied to eminent leaders of the chosen people (Ps. xviii. 1. xxxvi. 1. xc. 1. cv. 6), so the plural, Servants of Jehovah, designates the chosen people itself. See above, Ps. xxxiv. 23 (22.) lxix. 37 (36), and below, Ps. cxxxvi. 22, and compare Ezra v. 11. Neh. i. 10, from which last places it appears, that this was a familiar form of speech with the returned exiles.

2. Be the name of Jehovah blessed, from now and even to eternity. In this as well as the preceding verse, the name of Jehovah involves the usual allusion to the manifestation of his nature in his former acts. See above, on Ps. v. 12 (11.) The wish expressed in this verse implies a perpetual continuation or renewal of the evidence already furnished.

3. From the rising of the sun even to its setting, (to be) praised (is the) name of Jehovah. With the first clause compare Ps. l. 1. The last clause might be grammatically construed as a wish, like that in the preceding verse, praised (be the) name of Jehovah. It is more probable, however, that the passive participle (laudatus) was meant to have the force of a gerundive (laudandus.) See above, on Ps. xviii. 4 (3.)

4. High above all nations (is) Jehovah; above the heavens (is) his (glory.) The two clauses are declaratory of his infinite superiority, both to the animate and inanimate creation, each being represented by its noblest part; the former by mankind, and that considered not as individuals but nations; the latter by the heavens. This is certainly more natural, and yields a better sense, than to give the preposition (על) a different meaning in the two clauses, in the first that of above, in the second that of on, in which case it is necessary to explain on heaven as meaning in heaven, just as on the earth and in the earth are convertible expressions. See above, on Ps. lvii. 6 (5.)

5 Who is like Jehovah, our God, the (one) dwelling high? The verb denotes not merely dwelling, but sitting enthroned, sitting as a king. The original construction of the last clause is peculiar, the (one) making high to sit (or dwell.)

6. The one seeing deep—in heaven and in earth. The construction of the first clause is precisely the same with that of the last clause in v. 5, and must be explained in the same manner. As making high to dwell means dwelling high, so making low (or deep) to see must mean seeing deep, i. e. far below. It also follows from the exact correspondence of these clauses, that the remaining words of v. 6 are to be connected with the first words of v. 5. Who is like Jehovah, our God.....in heaven and in earth? The rest will then be read as a parenthesis. This construction is confirmed by the analogy of Deut. iii. 24.

7. Raising from the dust the poor—from the dunghill he will lift the needy. The mention of God's seeing far below him suggests the idea of his condescension to the humblest objects which he thus beholds. The word translated poor is one of wide signification, meaning sometimes poor in flesh and sometimes poor in purse. See above, on Ps. xli. 2 (1.) The parallel term means poor in the strict sense, i. e. needy, destitute. Dust and dunghill, common figures in all languages for a degraded social state. The terms are borrowed from the prayer of Hannah, 1 Sam. ii. 8. Compare Ps. xliv. 26 (25.)

8. To make him sit with nobles, with the nobles of his people Not merely to dwell, which is too vague, but to sit with them, as their equal and associate. There is also a climax in the last clause

He not only raises the poor to an equality with nobles in general, but with the nobles of his people, i. e. with the noblest of mankind. See again, 1 Sam. ii. 8.

9. Making the barren (one) of the house to sit a joyful mother of children. Hallelujah! The common version (to keep house) is founded upon Ps. lxxviii. 7 (6), but is here at variance both with Hebrew usage and the masoretic accents, which require (עֲקָרָה) barren and (בֵּיתָהּ) the house to be closely united in construction, as above. The form of expression is like one in Ps. lxxviii. 13 (12.) To sit might be rendered to dwell without any material change of sense; but the former keeps up the uniformity with vs. 5, 8, where the same Hebrew word is used. The historical allusion is to Hannab who, with other long childless mothers mentioned in the sacred history, was a type of the Church in its low estate, and more especially in exile. Compare Isai iv. 1.

P S A L M C X I V .

As the preceding psalm encouraged the people of God, in a time of trial, by reminding them that, although infinitely exalted, he condescends to notice and relieve the sufferings of his creatures, so the one before us is intended to produce the same effect, by bringing to their recollection what he actually did for Israel in the period of the exodus from Egypt. By that deliverance he acknowledged Israel as his chosen people, vs. 1, 2, and attested the acknowledgment by miracle, vs. 3, 4. Nature hea self, whose course was interrupted, is appealed to as a witness, vs. 5, 6, that she is subject to the God of Israel, vs. 7, 8. There is no improbability in the opinion that this psalm, with those which immediately follow, was intended to continue the series begun in the two preceding trilogies (Ps. cviii—cx, cxi—cxiii), and intended to sustain the hopes of the Jewish Church after its return from Babylon.

1. In the coming forth of Israel from Egypt, of the house of Jacob from a people of strange language. The first phrase is not to be restricted to the very act or moment of the exodus, but comprehends the whole Mosaic period, of which this was the characteristic and critical event. The house of Jacob is a phrase peculiarly appropriate to those who entered Egypt as a family, and left it as a nation. Of strange language is a paraphrase of one Hebrew word, apparently a participle and occurring only here; but according to its obvious etymological affinities, it probably means stammering, and then, by an association common in antiquity, speaking barbarously, i. e. in a foreign language. All such expressions may perhaps involve an allusion to the pre-eminence of Hebrew, as the primitive and sacred language. It was no small part of the humiliation to which Israel was subjected in Egypt, that the people of God should sustain for ages a relation of dependence to a nation who did not even speak the sacred language, much less profess the true religion, so inseparably blended with it. See above, on Ps. lxxxix. 6 (5), and compare my note on Isai. xxxiii. 19.

2. Judah became his sanctuary, Israel his dominion. Judah is put as an equivalent to Israel, not only because it had really become so when the psalm was written, but because it was destined to become so from the first. See Gen. xlix. 10. Became, literally, was for, which might mean nothing more than served as or was treated as; but this construction of the verb to be with to or for is the only representative in Hebrew of our word become. The sense thus obtained is entirely consistent with the calling of Abraham, because what is here meant is that Israel, as a nation, was now publicly declared to be the chosen or peculiar people, an idea expressed by the phrase his sanctuary or holy thing, i. e. something set apart exclusively to his use and service. The parallel word in the original is plural, dominions or domains, in reference, as some suppose, to the plurality of tribes, but according to others, in contrast with the lordships and dominions of the world, to all which Israel is described as more than equipollent, just as the infinite superiority of the true God to all false gods is expressed or suggested by the plural name Elohim. Here, as in Ps. lxxxvii. 1, the pronouns are without an antecedent in the sentence. The reference to God is so self-evident, that the only question has respect to the unusual form, which some explain by supposing that the psalm was originally part of the preceding one, or at least designed to be always read or sung directly after it. The latest interpreters prefer the explanation, that the name of God was designedly suppressed, in order that the questions in vs. 5, 6, might appear more natural and yet more striking.

3. The sea saw and fled—the Jordan turns back. By supposing the conversive prefix to affect both verbs, we may render the last also as a preterite, turned back. The historical allusion is to Ex. xiv. 21. Josh. iii. 14—17. At the same time, as seas and rivers are familiar emblems of the world and its nations, the reminiscence is adapted to suggest the hope, that other seas and other rivers may be yet controlled by the same power. See above, on Ps. lxxvii. 17 (16.) xciii. 3. cvii. 23.

4. The mountains skipped like rams, (the) hills like the young of sheep. As the Psalmist is reciting actual events, to be used as symbols and pledges of others, this cannot be explained as a poetical figure, but must be understood as referring to the concussion of Sinai, with its various peaks and neighbouring mountains See Ex. xix. 18. Judg. v. 4. Ps. lxxviii. 9 (8.) xcvii. 4, 5. Hab. iii. 6. Here again, the familiar use of mountains to denote states and empires is suggestive of the same consolation as in v. 3.

5. What aileth thee, oh sea, that thou fleest—oh Jordan (that) thou turnest back? By a fine poetical apostrophe, the Psalmist, instead of simply stating the cause of these effects, puts the question to the natural objects which thus witnessed and attested the divine presence. The first phrase literally means, what (is) to thee, the nearest approach that the Semitic dialects can make to our expression, what have you, which in some languages, the French for instance, is the usual equivalent to what ails you?

6. Ye mountains, (that) ye skip like rams—ye hills, like the young of sheep? The sentence is continued from the foregoing verse, being still dependent on the question there asked. In this interrogation the terms of vs. 3, 4, are studiously repeated. The young of sheep, literally, sons of the flock.

7. From before the Lord tremble, oh earth, from before the Goa of Jacob. As in other cases of rhetorical interrogation, the writer or speaker answers his own question. The imperative mood is here peculiarly significant, including both a recollection and prediction; as if he had said, the earth might well tremble at the presence of the Lord, and may well tremble at it still. From before is better than at the presence of, because the very form of the expression necessarily suggests the ideas of recoil and flight. Before is itself a compound term in Hebrew, meaning to the face of. The word translated Lord is the simple or primitive form of Adhonai, and is applied both to God and man, in the sense of lord or master. See Ex. xxiii. 17. Mal. iii. 1 of water. This refers to the miraculous supply of water in the desert. See above, on Ps. cvii. 35, and compare Ex. xvii. 6 Num. xx. 11. Deut. viii. 15. xxxii. 13. Isai. xli. 18 The connection with the preceding verse is still more marked in the original, the first words of which strictly mean the (one) turning, etc. The reader is left to draw for himself the natural and obvious conclusion, that the God, who thus drew water from a flinty rock for the supply of Israel, can still educe the richest blessings from what seem to be the hardest and most inauspicious situations. When this thought is supplied, the psalm no longer seems unfinished or abrupt in its conclusion.

8 Turning the rock (into) a pool of water, the flint to springs

PSALM CXV.

God is entreated by his people to vindicate not their honour but his own, vs. 1, 2, which is contrasted with the impotence of idols and their worshippers, vs. 3—8, and urged as a reason why his people should trust in him, for a large increase, vs. 9—15, and a fulfilment of his purpose to glorify himself by the praises of the living not the dead, vs. 16—17, in the promotion of which end the church declares her resolution to co-operate forever, v. 18. The general tenor of the psalm, thus stated, and its particular contents, make it perfectly well suited to the state of things in which the series is supposed to have been written, namely, that succeeding the return from exile, but before the actual rebuilding of the temple.

1. Not unto us, Jehovah, not unto us, but to thy name give glory, for thy mercy, for thy truth. The glory meant is not that of former but of future deeds. The implied petition is, that God would interpose for the deliverance of his people, not to do them honour but to glorify himself, and especially to vindicate his mercy and fidelity, which seemed to be dishonoured by his desertion of the chosen people. See above, on Ps. lxxix. 9, and compare Num. xiv. 15. Isai. xliii. 7, 25. xlvi. 9, 11. Dan. ix. 18. The favour sought is the completion of the work of restoration, still imperfect, though auspiciously begun.

2. Why should the nations say, Where now is their God? Why should they have occasion so to ask? The form of expression is borrowed from Ps. lxxix. 10, with the addition of (אָנֹכִי) now, which is not a particle of time, but of entreaty, or, in this connection, of triumphant demand. Where, pray, is their God? This verse is explanatory of the one before it, by showing that there really was need of something to silence the reproaches of the heathen, a description exactly corresponding to the state of the Jews at the Restoration.

3. And our God (is) in heaven; all that he pleased he has done. The and, though foreign from our idiom, adds sensibly to the force of the expression. They ask thus, as if our God were absent or had no existence; and yet all the while our God is in heaven, in his glorious and exalted dwelling-place. Compare Ps. ii. 4. xi. 4. ciii. 19. The same phrase, but in the future tense, is used by Solomon (Ecc. viii. 3.) The same idea is expressed in other words, Gen. xviii. 14. Job. xxiii. 13.

4. Their idols (are) silver and gold, the work of the hands of man. Here begins the contrast between the true God and all others. Their idols, those of the Gentiles, who reproach us with the absence or indifference of our God. For the associations coupled with the word for idols, see above, on Ps. cvi. 38

Hands of man, not of a man, but of mankind, i. e. human hands
 With this whole passage compare Isai. xl. 18—20. xli. 7. xlv.
 9—20. xlvi. 5—7. Jer. ii. 28. x. 3—15.

5. They have a mouth and speak not ; they have eyes and see not
 As the verb to have is wanting in the Hebrew and its cognate languages (see above, on Ps. cxiv. 5), it is not a literal translation of the original expression, (there is) a mouth to them, (there are) eyes to them. The futures include not only a simple affirmation, they speak not, they see not, but the future and potential sense, they never will or can speak or see.

6. They have ears and hear not, they have a nose and smell not.
 The antithesis is that expressed in Ps. xciv. 9, that God is the former of the eye and the planter of the ear in man ; much more then can he see and hear himself.

7. They have hands and feel not ; they have feet and walk not ; they do not mutter in their throat. The sameness of this long enumeration, the force of which is logical and not poetical, is partially relieved by a change in the form of the original, which cannot well be imitated in translation. Their hands, and they feel not ; their feet, and they walk not. Some make the first words in each clause nominatives absolute ; their hands—they feel not ; their feet—they walk not. But in the preceding parts of the description, the verbs relate not to the particular members, but to the whole person. It is better, therefore, to supply a verb—their hands (are there) and (yet) they feel not—their feet (are there) and (yet) they go not. The English feel is to be taken in its physical and outward sense, corresponding to the Latin palpo, here used by the Vulgate and Jerome. A less equivocal translation would be touch. The other verb denotes all progressive movements of the body, comprehended in the English go. See above, on Ps. civ. 3. The meaning of the last clause is, that they cannot even make the faintest and most inarticulate guttural noise, like the lower animals; much less speak as men do. See above, on Ps. xxxv. 28. lxxi. 24.

8. Like them shall be those who make them, every one who trusts in them. The last clause forbids the application of the first to the mere artificers, as such, and fastens it on those who trust in idols, whether made by them or by others for them. However formidable now, they shall hereafter be as powerless and senseless as the gods they worship. The translation are is contrary to Hebrew usage, which requires the present tense of the substantive verb to be suppressed.

9. Oh Israel, trust thou in Jehovah; their help and their shield (is) He. This is the practical application of the contrast just presented. Since idols are impotent and God almighty, it is folly to fear them or their servants; it is worse than folly not to trust in Him. The last clause is borrowed from Ps. xxxiii. 20. After addressing Israel directly in the first clause, he resumes the third person in the second, and, as if speaking to himself, assigns the reason for the exhortation. The first clause is, as it were, uttered in a loud voice, and the second in a low one.

10. Oh house of Aaron, trust ye in Jehovah; their help and their shield (is) He. Before the exile this particular address to the priests would have been surprising. It is perfectly natural, however, after the return from Babylon, when the priests bore so large a proportion, not only to the other levites, but to the whole nation, and naturally exercised a paramount influence in its affairs.

11. Fearers of Jehovah, trust ye in Jehovah; their help and their shield (is) He. He turns again to the people at large, who are here described as fearers of Jehovah, not in reference to the actual character of all the individual members, but to the high vocation of the body. See above, Ps. xxii. 24 (23.) cxi. 5.

12. Jehovah hath remembered us; he will bless, he will bless the house of Israel; he will bless the house of Aaron. The exhortation to confide in God does not imply that he has yet done nothing. He has already shown his gracious recollection of us by beginning to bless us, and he will still go on to bless us; an idea simply but beautifully expressed by the repetition of the verb, the effect of which is spoiled in the common version by needlessly supplying us

13. He will bless the fearers of Jehovah, the small with the great. There is no need of explaining the great to be the priests and the small the laity. It is much more natural to understand this as an instance of a common Hebrew idiom, which combines small and great in the sense of all, just as neither good nor evil means neither one thing nor another, i. e. nothing. Compare 2 Kings xviii. 24. Jer. xvi. 6. Rev. xiii. 16. xix. 6.

14. May Jehovah add to you, to you and to your children! This implies a previous diminution of the people, such as really took place in the Babylonish exile. The optative meaning of the verb, both here and in Gen. xxx. 24, is clear from Deut. i. 11. 2. Sam. xxiv. 3. The Hebrew preposition strictly means upon you, and conveys the idea of accumulation much more strongly. See above, on Ps. lxxi. 14, where we have an example of the same construction.

15. Blessed are ye of Jehovah, Maker of heaven and earth. Ye are the people blessed of old in the person of your father Abraham, by Melchizedek, priest of the Most High God, saying, "Blessed be Abraham of the Most High God, creator of heaven and earth," Gen. xiv. 19. Of Jehovah, literally, to Jehovah, as an object of benediction to him. Or the Hebrew preposition, as in many other cases, may be simply equivalent to our by. The creative character of God is mentioned, as ensuring his ability, no less than his willingness, to bless his people.

16. The heavens (are) heavens for Jehovah, and the earth he has given to the sons of man. This verse suggests another reason why God would increase them, namely, that although he reserved heaven for himself, he designed the earth to be filled and occupied by man, and hence in the primeval blessing on mankind, as originally uttered, and as repeated after the flood (Gen i. 28 ix. 1), the command to increase is coupled with that to fill the earth. Now if it is not God's will that the race should be diminished and reduced to nothing, much less can such be his intention with respect to his own people. The form of expression in the first clause is unusual. The construction given in the English Bible (the heaven, even the heavens, are the Lord's) is entirely gratuitous, the distinction of numbers (heaven, heavens), and the emphatic even, being both supplied by the translators. The Hebrew word is plural in both cases, and is indeed used only in that number.

17. (It is) not the dead (that) are to praise Jah, and not all (those) going down to silence. This may be regarded as a further reason for expecting the divine protection. God has chosen a people, from among the nations of the earth, to praise him, not when dead but living, not in the silence of the grave, but with their voices in the present life. Thus understood, the verse teaches nothing as to the employments of the disembodied spirit, or of soul and body in the future state. All that is affirmed here (and perhaps in other places like it) is that the praises of the chosen people, as such, must be limited to this life. See above, on Ps. vi. 6 (5.) xxx. 10 (9.) lxxxviii. 11—13 (10—12), and compare Isai. xxxviii. 18. Silence, a poetical description of the grave or the unseen world, as in Ps. xciv. 17

18. And (therefore) we will bless Jah from now even to eternity. Hallelujah! As it is not the dead who are to do it, and as we are still preserved alive, let us answer our vocation and the very end of our existence. The insensible transition from temporal to eternal praise is altogether natural. The hallelujah refers back to the expression praise Jah (yehallelujah) in v. 17. As if he had said: let us do what the dead can not, shout Hallelujah!

P S A L M C X V I .

THE Church declares her resolution to praise Jehovah for the deliverance which she has experienced, vs. 1, 2, and which is then described with some particularity, vs. 3—10, followed by a declaration of the way in which the Church means to express her gratitude, vs. 11—19. The Septuagint and Vulgate, which combine the two preceding psalms as one, divide the one before us into two, with as little reason in the one case as the other. The state of things referred to in this psalm, as one of mingled joy and grief, and its peculiarities of language, all combine to fix its date immediately after the return from Babylon.

1. I love—because Jehovah hears my voice, my supplications. The common version gives the sense correctly, but by a transposition of Jehovah, avoids the singular peculiarity of form in the original. The object of the verb I love is easily supplied from the remainder of the sentence. Compare Ps. xviii. 2 (1.) Deut. vi. 5. Both verbs may be translated in the present, though of different tenses in the Hebrew. The preterite form of the first

(I have loved) implies that the occasion had already been afforded the future form of the second (he will hear), that it was continued and would be continued. The last word, according to its etymology, means prayers for grace or favour.

2. For he has inclined his ear to me, and in my days I will call (upon him.) The original idea of the figure in the first clause seems to be that of leaning forward to catch a sound otherwise too faint to be distinctly audible. See above, on Ps. xxxi. 3 (2), and compare Ps. xvii. 6. lxxi. 2. lxxviii. 1. cii. 3. In my days is commonly understood to mean through all the days of my life, or as long as I live. Compare Isai. xxxix. 8, and see above, on Ps. civ. 33. I will call might be understood to mean, I will still pray to him who has hitherto answered my petitions. But to call upon God is applied not only to prayer but to thanksgiving, as appears from v. 13 below, where indeed we have the execution of the purpose here avowed.

3. The bands of death enclosed me, and the pangs of hell found me; distress and grief I find. Here begins the description of the sufferings from which God had delivered him. The expressions are borrowed from Ps. xviii. 5, 6, (4, 5.) The twofold use of the verb find in this verse is analogous to that of the synonymous verbs catch and seize in English, when a man is said to catch a disease, and the disease is said to seize the man. Compare Ps. cxix. 143 with Prov. vi. 33. Hell, in the wide sense corresponding to sheol, the grave, death, or the state of the dead. See above, on Ps. vi. 6 (5.)

4. And on the name of Jehovah I call: ah now, Jehovah, deliver my soul! The future in the first clause may be strictly translated (I will call) as expressing the determination which he formed in the midst of his distress. See above, on Ps. xviii. 5, 7 (4, 6.) Ah now corresponds exactly, both in origin and mean-mg, to the intensive particle of entreaty (פָּנֵנִי for אֲפָנֵנִי from פָּנֵן and אֲפָנֵן), which the common version paraphrases, I beseech thee. One of the elements of which it is compounded occurs above, Ps. cxv. 2.

5. Gracious (is) Jehovah and righteous, and our God shows pity. With the first clause compare Ps. cxi. 4. cxii. 4. The last word in Hebrew is the active participle of the verb to pity, to compassionate, and is here used to denote a habit as distinguished from a momentary feeling.

6. A preserver of the simple (is) Jehovah; I was brought low, and to me he brought salvation. Here again the first word is an active participle, keeping the simple, i. e. habitually watching over them. For the meaning of the simple, see above, on Ps. xix. 8 (7.) The word brought, twice used in translating this verse, has nothing distinctly corresponding to it in the Hebrew, but by a fortuitous coincidence, enters into two English phrases, by which the original verbs may best be represented. The verb translated brought low means to be reduced, in person, strength, or circumstances. See above, on Ps. lxxix. 8, and compare the cognate adjective in Ps. xli. 2 (1.) The other is the common Hebrew verb to save, here expressed by a circumlocution, for the purpose of retaining the original construction with the preposition to, which also occurs above, Ps. lxxii. 4. lxxxvi. 16.

7. Return, oh my soul, unto thy rest, for Jehovah hath bestowed upon thee (favour.) By calling on his soul, which had been agitated and alarmed, to return to its repose, he implies the cessation of the danger. Rest, literally, rests or resting-places, implying fulness or completeness of repose. See above, on Ps. xxiii. 2 For the sense and usage of (שָׁבַת) the last verb, see above, on Ps. xiii. 6 (5), and compare Ps. vii. 5 (4.) ciii. 10. The unusual grammatical forms in this verse are similar to those in Ps. ciii. 2, 5.

8. For thou hast deliv'ered my soul from death, my eye from weeping, my foot from falling. By a sudden apostrophe, God is now addressed directly. The first and last members of the sentence are borrowed from Ps. lvi. 14 (13.) The second bears some resemblance to Ps. lvi. 9 (8) and Jer. xxxi. 16.

9. I will walk before Jehovah in the land of life (or of the living.) This is also borrowed from Ps. lvi. 14 (13), with the substitution of land (literally lands) for light. Compare Ps. xxvii. 13. The hope here expressed is in contrast with Ps. cxv. 17.

10. I believed, for (thus) I speak; I was afflicted greatly. I must have exercised faith, or I could not thus have spoken. The Septuagint version, retained in the New Testament (2 Cor. iv. 13), clothes the same essential meaning in a different form, I believed, therefore have I spoken. It was because his faith enabled him to speak, so that his speaking was a proof of faith.

11. I said in my terror, All mankind (are) false. The form of expression in the first clause is borrowed from Ps. xxxi. 23 (22.) But instead of being a confession of error it is here rather a profession of faith. Even in the midst of his excitement, terror, panic, he could turn away from all human aid and trust in God alone. The proposition, all mankind are false, i. e. not to be trusted or relied upon, implies as its complement or converse, therefore God alone is to be trusted. See the same contrast stated more explicitly in Ps. cxviii. 8, and compare Ps. lxii. 9, 10 (8, 9.) cviii. 13 (12.) cxlvi. 3, 4.

12. How shall I requite to Jehovah all his bestowments upon me. Between this verse and that before it, we must supply the thought that his faith was rewarded and justified by the event. This is indeed implied in the interrogation now before us. How, liter ally what, i. e. (in what (way)), or (by what (means))? See Gen. xlv. 16. The unusual word bestowments is here used to represent a Hebrew one occurring only here, but evidently formed from the verb (מָנַן) to confer or bestow upon, employed in v. 7 above. The peculiar form both of the noun and pronoun (מַנְמָנִי) is regarded by the highest philological authorities as fixing the date of the composition after the Captivity.

13. The cup of salvations I will take up, and on the name of Jehovah will call. This is commonly explained by a reference to the Jewish tradition of a cup of thanksgiving which accompanied or followed the thank-offerings. But we read of no such cup in Scripture, and its origin may probably be traced to the rabbinical interpretation of this very passage. Interpreted by Scriptural analogies it simply means, I will accept the portion God allots me. For this figurative use of cup, see above, on Ps. xi. 6. xvi. 5. The plural form, salvations, denotes fulness or completeness, as in Ps. xviii. 52 (51.) liii. 7 (6.) Take up, as if from the table where the hand of God has placed it; or lift up, towards heaven, as a gesture of acknowledgment.

14. My vows to Jehovah will I pay—in the presence of all his people. The word now, in the common version, misleads the English reader, who can scarcely fail to understand it as an adverb of time, meaning at present, immediately, without delay, whereas it is the particle of entreaty (אֲנִי) used in Ps. cxv. 2, and here employed to modify the bold avowal of a purpose, by making it dependent on divine permission. As if he had said: my vows to Jehovah I will pay—let me do it in the presence (I entreat) of all his people. The same meaning is attached by some to the augmented or paragogic form of the word translated presence, and which strictly means the front or forepart. Both these peculiarities are reckoned among the indications of a later age of Hebrew composition.

15. Precious in the eyes of Jehovah (is) the death of his gracious ones (or saints.) The idea and expression are borrowed from Ps. lxxii. 14, where the same thing is said of their blood. The word for death has the same peculiarity of form as that for presence in v. 14, and is construed in the same way with the preposition to, the death to his saints, i. e. the death belonging to them, which they die. These are regarded by the critics as additional tokens of the age in which the psalm was written. The verse assigns the reason for the preceding vow, to wit, that God counts the death of his people too costly to be lightly or gratuitously suffered.

16. Ah now Jehovah—for I (am) thy servant, I (am) thy servant, the son of thy handmaid; thou hast loosed my bonds. The expression of entreaty at the beginning has reference to some thing not expressed, though easily supplied, namely permission thus to testify his gratitude. Ah now Lord (suffer me thus to do) for I am thy servant, etc. The additional phrase, son of thy handmaid, is much stronger than thy servant, and describes him as a home-born slave. See above, on Ps. lxxxvi. 16. In the last clause we have another instance of a preposition (ב) interposed between the active verb and its object, in a way unknown to the older Hebrew. It is possible, however, to translate the words, thou hast freed (me) as to (i. e. from) my bonds.

17. To thee will I sacrifice a sacrifice of thanks, and on the name of Jehovah will I call. The sense is not, I will offer thanks instead of an oblation; but an oblation really expressive of thanksgiving and appointed for that purpose.

18. My vows to Jehovah will I pay in the presence (I entreat) of all his people. An exact repetition of v. 14, with all its singularities of form.

19. In the courts of the house of Jehovah, in the midst of thee, Jerusalem. Hallel jah! This verse completes the one before it, and explains the phrase, before all his people. Some regard it as a proof that the psalm was composed after the actual rebuilding of the temple. But in Ezr. ii. 68. iii. 8, we find the designation house of God applied to the consecrated site. The use of the word courts is still more natural, because it originally means enclosures, which might be and no doubt were defined, long before the temple was rebuilt. This explanation seems to be confirmed by the addition of the last clause. In the courts of the Lord's house, that is, on the consecrated spot in the midst of thee, oh Jerusalem, the Holy City.

PSALM CXVII.

THIS, which is the shortest psalm in the collection, has evidently no independent character or even meaning of its own, but was designed to be a chorus or doxology to a longer composition. Its position is sufficiently accounted for by the assumption, that it was primarily meant to serve the purpose just described with reference to the psalm or to the trilogy immediately preceding; while its being separately written as an independent psalm may have arisen from the purpose to use it sometimes in a different connection, with which view it would naturally be left moveable, like the doxologies in our modern books, which may be attached to any psalm or hymn, at the discretion of the person who conducts the service.

1 Praise Jehovah, all ye nations; laud him all ye peoples

The last word is a different plural form from that in Gen. xxv. 16 Num. xxv. 15, and belongs no doubt to the later Hebrew. Here, as in Ps. xlvii. 2 (1.) lxvi. 8. xeviii. 4. the whole world is invited to praise God for his favours shown to Israel.

2. For mighty over us has been his mercy, and the truth of Jehovah (is) to eternity. Hallelujah! The verb at the beginning means not merely to be great, but to be strong or powerful. See above, on Ps. ciii. 11. The preposition over suggests the idea of protection, or, if translated on, that of favour descending from above.

PSALM CXVIII.

AFTER an invitation to praise God for his goodness to his people, vs. 1—4, the occasion of this praise is more particularly stated, namely, that he has delivered Israel from great distress, and thereby proved himself worthy of their highest confidence, vs. 5—14. After another statement of the favour just experienced, vs. 15—18, the people are described as entering the sanctuary, there to give thanks and implore the divine blessing on the enterprise in which they are engaged, vs. 19—29. The ideal speaker, throughout the psalm, is Israel, as the Church or chosen people. The deliverance celebrated cannot be identified with any one so naturally as with that from the Babylonish exile. Some, on account of supposed allusions to the temple as already built, refer the psalm to the times of Nehemiah. Others, with more probability, though not with absolute conclusiveness, infer from the tone of lively joy and thankfulness, pervading the whole composition, that it was written and originally sung soon after the return; and from the allusions in vs. 22, 25, that it has reference to the founding of the second temple, and is the very psalm, or one of the psalms, mentioned in the history, Ezra iii. 10, 11, where its first and last words are recited. The mention of David in that passage is accounted for by the assumption that this psalm was sung only as a part of the whole series, which opens with a Davidic trilogy, Ps. cviii—cx.

1. Give thanks unto Jehovah, for (he is) good, for unto eternity (is) his mercy. The opening formula is common to this psalm with Ps. cvi and cvii. Its elements are also found, combined with others, in Ps. c. 4, 5. With the second member of the sentence compare Ps. xxv. 8. lxxiii. 1.

2. Oh that Israel would say—for unto eternity (is) his mercy. The first clause of this translation is a paraphrase of the original, to which the particle of entreaty (אֲנִי) gives a strong optative meaning. Here, as in Ps. cxvi. 14, 18, the common version (now) is equivocal. That version also has that instead of for, in the last clause of this and the two next verses. This translation is perfectly grammatical, and makes the sentence more complete in itself. But besides that it breaks the studied uniformity of the context by varying the version of the particle (כִּי), the dependence of the clause on the preceding verse, required and denoted by the use of the word for, is really essential to the writer's object. It is as if he had said: the reason for thus urging man to praise Jehovah is because his mercy endureth forever, and oh that Israel would join in affirming this reason. Oh that Israel would say (I will give thanks) for his mercy endureth forever.

3, 4 Oh that the house of Aaron would say—'for unto eternity

(is) his mercy.' Oh that the fearers of Jehovah would say--'far unto eternity (is) his mercy.' The succession of Israel, the house of Aaron, and the fearers of Jehovah, in this and the following verses, is the same as in Ps. cxv. 9—11. This and the trine repetitions in vs. 10—12, 15—16, compared with that in Ps. cxv. 12—13, are corroborations of the assumed affinity between the psalms of this whole series, both in origin and purpose.

5. Out of anguish I invoked Jah; heard me in a wide place Jah. The first noun is a rare one, common to this place and Ps. cxvi. 3, another indication of affinity. Heard, in the pregnant sense of heard favourably, heard and answered. See above, on Ps. xxii. 22 (21.) As the word translated anguish originally means pressure, confinement, the appropriate figure for relief from it is a wide room, ample space, enlargement. See above, on Ps. iv. 2 (1.) To answer in a wide place is to grant his prayer by bringing him forth into such a place.

6. Jehovah (is) for me; I will not fear; what can man do to me? Instead of for me, i. e. in my favour, on my side, the Hebrew (אֲנִי) may also be translated to me, i. e. is or belongs to me, is mine. See above, on Ps. lvi. 5, 10, 12 (4, 9, 11.) Man does not here mean a man, but mankind, or Man as opposed to God.

7. Jehovah is for me, among my helpers, and I shall look upon my haters. Here again, the first clause may be rendered, Jehovah is to me (or I have Jehovah) among or with my helpers. With this last expression compare Ps. xlv. 10 (9.) xcix. 6. The construction in the last clause is the idiomatic one meaning to see with joy or triumph, or to see their punishment and subjugation. See above, on Ps. liv. 9 (7), and with the whole verse compare Ps. liv. 6 (4.) As the ideal speaker is the ancient church or chosen people, the haters or enemies here meant are primarily heathen persecutors and oppressors.

8. It is good to confide in Jehovah (more) than to trust in man. This and the next verse affirm clearly and fully what is more obscurely intimated in Ps. cxvi. 11. As the Hebrew has no distinct form of comparison, this is the nearest possible approach to saying, it is better. Than, literally from, away from, implying difference, and then comparison, but not expressing it. The verb confide is the expressive one originally meaning to take refuge or find shelter. See above, on Ps. ii: 12.

9. It is good to confide in Jehovah (more) than to trust in nobles This merely strengthens the foregoing declaration, by rendering it more specific and emphatic. The Lord is more to be confided in, not merely than the mass of men, but than their chiefs. Nobles is a better translation than princes, because it keeps up the association with the adjective sense noble, generous, liberal, spontaneous, which is otherwise lost sight of. See above, on Ps. li. 14 (12) Even the Persian patrons and protectors of the Jews had not entirely deserved their confidence; nor at all, in comparison with Jehovah their covenanted God.

10. All the nations surround me; in the name of Jehovah—that I will cut them off. The hyperbolical expression, all the nations, is less strange than it might otherwise appear because (גוֹיִם) nations had now begun to be familiarly applied to the gentiles or heathen, not as organized bodies merely, but as individuals, especially when numerous. There is nothing unnatural, therefore, in the use of this expression to describe the heathen adversaries of the Jews at the period of the Restoration, not excepting the Samaritans, who, though they claimed to be a mixed race, were really heathen, both in origin and character. Another way in which the hyperbole may be explained, or rather done away, is by supposing the first clause to be substantially although not formally conditional. Should all nations (or though all nations should) surround me. The strongest sense may then be put upon the words all nations, as the act ascribed to them is merely hypothetical. The construction of the last clause is unusual and doubtful. Some arbitrarily make the ׀ a particle of affirmation, yea, yes, verily, etc. Others gain the same sense by explaining the whole phrase to mean, (it is true, or it is certain) that I will cut them off. The same use of the particle is thought to be exemplified in Isai. vii. 9. Perhaps the best solution is the one afforded by the Hebrew usage of suppressing the principal verb in oaths or solemn affirmations. If this may be omitted even when there is nothing to denote the character of the expression, and when the form of the expression itself is liable to misconstruction, as for instance in the formula with if, much more may it be omitted where the sense of the expression is quite clear, and its juratory or imprecatory character denoted by accompanying words. The sense will then be, in the name of Jehovah (I swear or solemnly affirm) that I will cut them off. This last verb always means to cut, and except in Ps. xc. 6, where one of its derived forms is used, to circumcise. It was here used, as some suppose, to suggest that the uncircumcised enemies of Israel, as they are often called, should be cut or cut off in another sense. Compare the play upon the corresponding Greek words in Phil. iii. 2, 3.

11. They surround me, yea they surround me; in the name of Jehovah (I declare) that I will cut them off. The same sentence is repeated with a slight variation, which consists in the omission of the subject and the iteration of the verb, rendered more emphatic by a change of form. The word translated yea means also, likewise, but cannot be so used in the English idiom. The climax indicated may be, that the act described is no longer hypothetical but actual. They surround me, yes, they really, in fact, surround me.

12 They surround me like bees ; they are quenched as a fire of thorns ; in the name of Jehovah (I declare) that I will cut them off. This completes the trine repetition so characteristic of these psalms. The point of comparison with bees is their swarming multitude and irritating stings. Compare Deut. i. 44. That with thorns is the rapidity and ease with which they are both kindled and extinguished. See above, on Ps. lviii. 10 (9.)

13. Thou didst thrust, thrust at me, to (make me) fall, and Jehovah helped me. By a lively apostrophe, the enemy is here addressed directly, that is, the hostile heathen power, from whose oppressions Israel had just been rescued. See above, on v. 7. The verb to thrust or strike at is the root of the noun translated falling in Ps. lvi. 14 (13.) cxvi. 8.

14. My strength and song (is) Jah, and he has become my salvation. These words are from Ex. xv. 2. The first clause is also borrowed by Isaiah (xii. 2.) My strength and song, my protection or deliverer, and as such the object of my praise. Become my salvation, literally, has been to me for salvation, a stronger though synonymous expression for my saviour.

15. The voice of joy and salvation in the tents of the righteous—the right hand of Jehovah has made strength. The word translated joy means properly the audible expression of it by shout or song, and is sometimes applied even to a cry of distress. Compare Ps. xxx. 6 (5.) xlii. 5 (4.) xlvi. 2 (1) with Ps. xvii. 1. lxi. 2 (1.) Joy and salvation are related as cause and effect, joy occasioned by salvation. Tents, a poetical expression for dwellings. See above, on Ps. xci. 10. The righteous, the true Israel, the people of God, as such considered. See above, on Ps. xxxiii. 1. The substantive verb (is) may be supplied in this verse, so as to make it a complete proposition ; or it may be a kind of exclamation, as if he had said, Hark ! the voice of joy, etc. Compare

Isai. xl. 3, 6. The last clause may then be understood as containing the words uttered by the voice. The idiomatic phrase at the end may either mean that God was acquired or exerted strength. See above, on Ps. lx. 14 (12.) cviii. 14.

16. The right hand of Jehovah is raised, the right hand of Jehovah makes strength. This, with the last clause of v. 15, makes another of the triplets or trine repetitions, which are characteristic of these psalms. See above, on vs. 2—4, 10—12. Instead of is raised some read raises or exalts, which is equally grammatical, as the active and passive forms in this case are coincident. The meaning then is, that his right hand raises or exalts his people, as the other clause says that his right hand gains or exercises strength in their behalf. It seems more natural, however, to explain it as an instance of a common figure which describes God's hand as raised, when he exerts his power.

17. I shall not die but live, and recount the works of Jah. The existence thus to be preserved is that of Israel, and the last clause describes the final cause of that existence, which is here stated as a ground of confidence, and is elsewhere urged as an argument in prayer. See above, on Ps. cxv. 17. cxvi. 9, 15, and compare Ps. lxxi. 20. The original construction of the first clause is, I shall not die, for I shall live.

18. Sorely has Jah chastened me, but to death did not give me. This verse, though simple in its structure and transparent in its meaning, is highly idiomatic in its form. The adverb used in the translation represents the emphatic repetition of the verb in Hebrew, which is sometimes imitated in the English Bible (chastening has Jah chastened me), but seldom so as to convey the whole idea. Of such a repetition we have had an instance in v. 13. Another unavoidable departure from the original form consists in using but for and, at the beginning of the second clause. Did not give, give up, give over or abandon. The chastisement here mentioned must be the calamity from which the people had been recently delivered, and in which we have already seen good grounds to recognize the Babylonish conquest, domination and captivity.

19. Open ye to me the gates of righteousness, I will come in by them, I will thank Jah. This may have been intended to accompany the entrance of the priests and people into the sacred enclosure, for the purpose of laying the foundation of the temple, as when David pitched the tabernacle on Mount Zion. See above, on Ps. xxiv.

20. This (is) the gate (that belongs) to Jehovah; the righteous shall come in by it. Or the meaning may be, since this is the Lord's gate, let the righteous (and no others) enter at it. Many interpreters find obvious indications here of double or responsive choirs, by which the psalm was to be sung. But this, though possible, is not a necessary supposition, nor is there any certain trace of such a usage or arrangement elsewhere in the book of Psalms. See above, vol. i. pp. 198, 200, 203.

21. I will thank thee, for thou hast answered me, and hast become my salvation. This verse assigns the reason for their entrance. Answered, in the specific sense of answering or granting prayer. See above, on v. 5. The last clause is from v. 14.

22. The stone (which) the builders rejected has become the head of the corner. This is a proverbial expression, and as such applicable to any case, in which what seemed to be contemptible has come to honour. This mode of expressing the idea was most probably suggested by the founding of the temple. There is no need, however, of supposing any actual dispute among the Jewish builders in relation to the corner stone of the sacred edi-

fic. The sight of the stone, or the act of laying it, would be sufficient to suggest the proverb and its application to the happy change experienced by Israel, so lately blotted from the list of nations, and regarded by the heathen as unworthy even of an humble place in the proud fabric of consolidated empire, but now restored not only to a place but to the highest place among the nations, not in point of power, wealth, or worldly glory, but as the chosen and peculiar people of the Most High God. As this psalm was sung by the people at the last Jewish festival attended by our Saviour, he applied this proverb to himself, as one rejected by the Jews and by their rulers, yet before long to be recognized as their Messiah whom they had denied and murdered, but whom God had exalted as a Prince and a Saviour, to give repentance to Israel and remission of sins (Acts v. 31.) This, though really another application of the proverb in its general meaning, has a certain affinity with its original application in the verse before us, because the fortunes of the ancient Israel, especially in reference to great conjunctures, bore a designed resemblance to the history of Christ himself, by a kind of sympathy between the Body and the Head. Even the temple, which suggested the original expression, did but teach the doctrine of divine inhabitation, and was therefore superseded by the advent of the Son himself. The head of the corner means the chief or corner stone of the foundation, even in Zech. iv. 7, where it is translated head-stone. The application of the verse before us made by Christ himself (Matt. xxi. 42) is renewed by Peter (Acts iv. 11.)

23. From Jehovah is this ; it is wonderfully done in our eyes. This signal revolution in the condition of the chosen people is not the work of man but of God. From the Lord, i. e. proceeding from him as its author. Is this, literally, has been, i. e. happened, come to pass. In the last clause it is said to be not merely wonderful, but wonderfully done, the Hebrew word being a passive participle, which strictly means distinguished, made to differ, made strange, strangely done. Its plural is continually used as a noun in application to God's wondrous works or doings. This, no less than the proverb to which it is attached, was as appropriate to the case of the Messiah as to that of his people, and is accordingly applied in the same manner by himself (Matt. xxi. 42.)

24. This is the day Jehovah has made, we will rejoice and triumph in it. By the day we are here to understand the happiest times which Israel, through God's grace, was permitted to enjoy. This day he is said, as the author of this blessed revolution, to have made, created. Some understand by day the festival or celebration, at which the psalm was intended to be sung. The day, in this sense, God is said to have made or instituted, not so much by positive appointment as by having providentially afforded the occasion for it. In a still higher sense, the words may be applied to the new dispensation, as a glorious change in the condition of the church, compared with which the restoration from captivity was nothing, except as a preliminary to it and a preparation for it. There is no allusion to the weekly Sabbath, except so far as it was meant to be a type of the rest of the church from the heavy burdens of the old dispensation.

25. Ah now, Jehovah, save, we beseech thee! Ah now, Jehovah, prosper, we beseech thee! The circumlocution, we beseech thee, is the only form in which the force of the supplicatory particle (אָנִי) can be expressed, without the risk of its being mistaken for an adverb of time. The whole phrase (אָנִי הוֹשִׁיעָה נַפְשִׁי), save we pray, became a standing formula of supplication with reference to great public interests or undertakings, and reappears in the New Testament under the form Hosanna. See Matt. xxi. 9, where we find it, in the acclamations of the multitude, combined with other expressions from this same psalm which, as we have seen, they were accustomed to sing at their great festivals. See above, on v. 22.

26. Blessed be he that cometh in the name of Jehovah. We bless you from the house of Jehovah. According to the accents, the construction of the first clause is, blessed, in the name of Jehovah, be he that cometh. This agrees exactly with the frequent mention of blessing in the name of Jehovah. See below, Ps. cxxix. 8, and compare Num. vi. 27. Deut. xxi. 5. 2 Sam. vi. 18. He that cometh is commonly and not improbably supposed to have meant primarily the people or their representatives, to whom, as they approached the sacred spot, these words were to be uttered. There were other thoughts, however, which the words could hardly fail to suggest, for example that of Israel coming back from exile, that of God coming back to his forsaken people, and at least in the most enlightened minds, that of the great Deliverer, to whose coming all the rest was but preparatory, to whom the name קַדְשׁוֹ or $\delta\ \epsilon\theta\lambda\acute{o}\mu\epsilon\tau\omicron\varsigma$ was afterwards given as a standing appellation, in allusion either to this passage or to Mal. iii. 1, or to both, and to whom this very sentence was applied by the multitude who witnessed and attended Christ's triumphal entrance into the Holy City. See Matt. xxi. 9.

27. Mighty (is) Jehovah and hath given light to us. Bind the sacrifice with cords as far as the horns of the altar. The first word does not express the general idea of divinity, but that of divine power, which is no doubt essential to the writer's purpose. It was the power of Jehovah which had turned the night of Israel to day, and illumined the darkness of their sore distress with the light of his returning favour. The figure is borrowed from the pillar of fire, the token of Jehovah's presence with his people in the wilderness. See Ex. xiii. 21. xiv. 20. Neh. ix. 12. The last clause has been the subject of a good deal of dispute. It is commonly admitted that (תָּגִי) a Hebrew word, which properly denotes a periodical or stated festival, is here put for the victim offered at it, as in Ex. xxiii. 18 the fat of my sacrifice is in Hebrew the fat of my festival (תְּגִי), and in 2 Chron. xxx. 22.

another word for festival (מִזְבֵּחַ) is used in precisely the same way, being governed by the verb to eat, although this singular expression is avoided in the English Bible, by the use of the word "throughout." Those who agree in this, however, are at variance in relation to the act required. As the word translated cords is sometimes applied to the thick boughs or branches of a tree (Ez. xix. 11. xxxi. 3, 10, 14), some understand the sense to be, Bind the sacrifice with branches, sacrificial wreaths. But this practice, and the meaning put upon the Hebrew word, are both denied by others who allege moreover the repeated combination of the same verb and noun in the sense of tying, making fast, with cords. See Judg. xv. 13. xvi. 11. Ez. iii. 25. The English Bible makes the clause refer to the fastening of the victim to the altar. To this it is objected that the preposition (עַד) means as far as, and implies a verb of motion, expressed or understood. To avoid this difficulty, some of the latest writers understand the words to signify the conducting of the victim bound until it reaches the altar as the place of sacrifice. Hold fast the sacrifice with cords, until it comes to the horns of the altar, poetically put for the altar itself, not only as its prominent or salient points, but as the parts to which the blood, the essential vehicle of expiation, was applied. Thus understood the clause is merely an invitation to fulfill the vow recorded in Ps cxvi. 14, 17, 18

28. My God art thou, and I will thank thee ; my God, I will exalt thee. The Hebrew words for God are not the same. The second is that commonly so rendered, while the first is that used in v. 27, and denoting the divine omnipotence.

29 Give thanks unto Jehovah, for (He is) good, for unto eternity (is) his mercy. In these words we are brought back to the point from which we started, and the circle of praise returns into itself.

P S A L M C X I X

THERE is no psalm in the whole collection which has more the appearance of having been exclusively designed for practical and personal improvement, without any reference to national or even to ecclesiastical relations, than the one before us, which is wholly occupied with praises of God's word or written revelation, as the only source of spiritual strength and comfort, and with prayers for grace to make a profitable use of it. The prominence of this one theme is sufficiently apparent from the fact, to which the Masora directs attention, that there is only one verse which does not contain some title or description of the word of God. But notwithstanding this peculiar character, the position of the psalm in the collection, and especially its juxtaposition with respect to Ps. cviii—cxviii, its kindred tone of mingled gratitude and sadness, and a great variety of minor verbal correspondences, have led some of the best interpreters to look upon it as the conclusion of the whole series or system of psalms, supposed to have been written for the use of the returned Jews, at or near the time of the founding of the second temple. The opinion, held by some of the same writers, that the ideal speaker, throughout this psalm, is Israel, considered as the church or chosen people, will never commend itself as natural or likely to the mass of readers, and is scarcely consistent with such passages as vs. 63, 74, 79, and others, where the speaker expressly distinguishes himself as an individual from the body of the people. The same difficulty, in a less degree, attends the national interpretation of the psalms immediately preceding. Perhaps the best mode of reconciling the two views is by supposing that this psalm was intended as a manual of pious and instructive thoughts, designed for popular improvement and especially for that of the younger generation after the return from exile, and that the person speaking is the individual believer, not as an isolated personality, but as a member of the general body, with which he identifies himself so far, that many expressions of the psalm are strictly applicable only to the whole as such considered, while others are appropriate only to certain persons or to certain classes in the ancient Israel. To this design of popular instruction, and especially to that of constant repetition and reflection, the psalm is admirably suited by its form and structure. The alphabetical arrangement, of which it is at once the most extended and most perfect specimen, and the aphoristic character, common to all alphabetic psalms, are both adapted to assist the memory, as well as to give point to the immediate impression. It follows, of course, that the psalm was rather meant to be a store-house of materials for pious meditation than a discourse for continuous perusal. At the same time, the fact of its existence in the Psalter is presumptive proof that it was used in public worship, either as a whole, or in one or more of the twenty-two stanzas into which it is divided, corresponding to the letters of the Hebrew alphabet, all the eight verses of each paragraph beginning with the same Hebrew letter.

1. Happy the perfect of way, i. e. blameless in their course of life, those walking in the law of Jehovah. There seems to be allusion to the precept in Lev. xviii. 4. The common version of the second Hebrew word (undefiled) is derived from the Vulgate (immaculati), which is itself too confined a version of the Septuagint (ἄμωμοι.) The essential idea is that of completeness or perfection. The form and construction of the first word are the same as in Ps. i. 1.

2. Happy the keepers of his testimonies (who) with a whole heart seek him. Keepers, observers, those obeying. Testimonies, the divine precepts, which bear witness against sin and in behalf of holiness. With all the heart, undivided affection. See above, Ps. cxi. 1, and compare 2 Kings xxiii. 3. Seek him, the knowledge of his will and the enjoyment of his favour.

3. (Who) also do not practise wrong, (but) in his ways walk. This verse both limits and completes the one before it, by showing that no zeal in seeking God can be acceptable, if coupled with a wicked life. In his ways, not in those of his enemies, nor even in their own.

4. Thou hast commanded thy precepts, to be kept strictly. Commanded, given them in charge, entrusted others with them. The literal meaning of the last clause is, to keep very (much), i. e. not formally or superficially, but really and thoroughly. Compare the use of (רָאָה) as a noun in Deut. vi. 5.

5. Oh that my ways were settled, to observe thy statutes! The optative particle at the beginning occurs only here and, with a slight difference of pointing, 2 Kings v. 3. My ways, my customary modes of acting, my habits. Settled, fixed, confirmed, established, in opposition to capricious vacillation and unsteadiness. To observe, to watch, for the purpose of obeying. The word translated statutes, according to its etymology, means definite and permanent enactments.

6 Then shall I not be shamed, in my looking unto all thy commandments. The then at the beginning has respect to the time mentioned in the last clause. Shamed, put to shame, defeated, frustrated, disappointed in one's highest hopes. In my looking suggests the idea both of time and of causation, when I look and because I look. The act itself is that of looking towards a mark to be attained, or towards a model, rule, or standard, to be followed and conformed to.

7. I will thank thee with rectitude of heart, in my learning the judgments of thy righteousness. It is only my experience of thy righteous judgments that enables me to praise thee as I ought; a sentiment peculiarly appropriate to the period of some great deliverance, for instance that of the return from exile, when the righteousness of God had been so signally displayed in the destruction of his enemies, and in the fulfilment of his promise to his people. Here again, in my learning does not mean merely after I have learned, but in the very act and in consequence of learning.

8. Thy statutes I will keep; oh forsake me not utterly. The fixed resolution to obey is intimately blended with a consciousness of incapacity to do so, unless aided by divine grace. Utterly, unto extremity or still more literally, until very (much.) The initial words of this first stanza are all different, except that vs. 1, 2, both begin with (אשרר) happiness or happy.

9. By what (means) can a youth cleanse his path, (so) as to keep (it) according to thy word? To cleanse is here to keep clean or pure from the stain of sin. Most interpreters regard the last clause as an answer to the question in the first. But this requires the infinitive to be construed as a gerund (by keeping), a construction too rare and doubtful to be anywhere assumed without necessity. See above, on Ps. lxxviii. 18. cxi. 6. It is much more simple and agreeable to usage to regard the whole as one interrogation, and the second clause as supplementary to the first. To keep may then mean to adhere to it, or rather, in accordance with the figure of the first clause, to preserve it clear or pure as God requires. The answer is suppressed, or rather left to be inferred from the whole tenor of the psalm, which is.

that men, and especially the young, whose passions and temptations are strong in proportion to their inexperience, can do nothing of themselves but are dependent on the grace of God. The omission of an answer, which is thus suggested by the whole psalm, rather strengthens than impairs the impression on the reader.

10. With my whole heart have I sought thee; let me not err from thy commandments. While the first clause alleges his sincerity in seeking God, the second and third owns his dependence on him for success and safety.

11. In my heart have I hid thy saying, that I may not sin against thee. The first phrase means within me, as opposed to a mere outward and corporeal possession of the written word. Not in my house, or in my hand, but in myself, my mind, with special reference, in this case, to the memory. Hid, not for concealment, but for preservation. The word saying, elsewhere used to signify God's promise, here denotes his precept, as it does in v. 67 below. Against thee, literally, as to, with respect to thee. See above, on Ps li. 6 (4.)

12. Blessed (be) thou, Jehovah! Teach me thy statutes! The doxology seems designed to break the uniformity of this series of aphorisms, by an occasional expression of strong feeling. At the same time, it furnishes a kind of ground for the petition in the last clause. Since thou art the blessed and eternal God, have pity on my weakness and instruct me in the knowledge of thy will.

13. With my lips have I recounted all the judgments of thy mouth. I have not confined the knowledge of thy precepts to my own mind, but imparted it to others. See above, on Ps. xl. 10, 11 (9, 10.) Judgments, judicial decisions, determinations as to what is right and binding, a description perfectly appropriate to the divine precepts. Of thy mouth, which thou hast uttered. There seems to be allusion to the phrase with my lips in the first clause.

14. In the way of thy testimonies I rejoice as over all wealth. Not merely in the knowledge of God's will, but in the doing of it in treading the path which he prescribes for us. Over may be simply equivalent to in, or intended to suggest the additional idea of superiority, above (or more than) all wealth. As over, as I do over all the wealth I have, or as I should do over all wealth if I had it.

15. In thy precepts will I meditate and look (at) thy paths. Not only of thy precepts or concerning them, but in them, while engaged in doing them. Look has the same sense as in v. 6.

16. In thy statutes I will delight myself; I will not forget thy word. Delight or enjoy myself, seek my pleasure, find my happiness. Here ends the second stanza, in which all the verses except one (v. 12) begin not only with the same letter but the same word, the preposition (נ) in.

17. Grant to thy servant (that) I may live, and I will keep thy word. Grant to, bestow upon, thy servant this favour. See above, on Ps. xiii. 6 (5.) There may be an allusion to the way in which the law connects life and obedience. See Lev. xviii. 5. Deut. vi. 24.

18. Uncover my eyes and I will look—wonders out of thy law! The last clause is a kind of exclamation after his eyes have been uncovered. This figure is often used to denote inspiration or a special divine communication. Out of thy law, i. e. brought out to view, as if from a place of concealment.

19. A stranger (am) I in the earth; hide not from me thy commandments. A stranger, an exile, one without friends or home, a poetical description of calamity in general, not without allusion to the captivity both in Babylon and Egypt, and to the consequent mention of strangers in the Law as objects of compassion. The prayer in the last clause is, that God will not withhold from him the knowledge of his will.

20. My soul breaketh with longing for thy judgments at every time. The Hebrew verb occurs only here, but its meaning is determined by the cognate dialects. The word translated longing belongs also to the later Hebrew. Its verbal root occurs below in vs. 40, 174. Judgments includes God's precepts mentioned in v. 19 and his penal inflictions on the wicked mentioned in v. 21.

21. Thou hast rebuked the proud, the accursed, those wandering from thy commandments. Compare Ps. ix. 6 (5.) Rebuked, not merely by word but by deed, i. e. punished.

22. Roll from off me reproach and contempt, for thy testimonies I have kept. The first verse coincides in form with that at the beginning of v. 18, but is from a different root. There is an obvious allusion to the rolling off of the reproach of Egypt, Josh. v. 9.

23. Also princes sat and at me talked together, and thy servants mused of thy statutes. This is one of the expressions in the psalm not literally applicable to the individual believer, and regarded therefore as a proof of its national design and import. The princes are then the chiefs of the surrounding nations. The also (אֲשֶׁר) seem to be inserted merely on account of the alphabetical arrangement which requires the letter gimel.

24. Also thy testimonies (are) my delights, the men of my counsel. He calls them his counsellors, in opposition to the malignant counsels of the enemy. Delights, enjoyments, happiness, the plural form denoting fulness and completeness. Two of the verses in the stanza ending here begin with (בג) also, and two with (זג), though in different senses.

25. My sou. cleaveth unto the dust; quicken thou me according to thy word. The first clause seems intended to suggest two consistent but distinct ideas, that of deep degradation, as in Ps. xliv. 26 (25), and that of death, as in Ps. xxii. 30 (29.) The first would be more obvious in itself, and in connection with the parallel referred to; but the other seems to be indicated as the prominent idea by the correlative petition in the last clause. Quicken, i. e. save me alive, or restore me to life, the Hebrew word being a causative of the verb to live. See above, on Ps. xxx. 4 (3.) Thy word, the promise annexed to thy commandment, as in v. 28 below.

26. My ways have I recounted, and thou hast answered me, teach me thy statutes. The first clause is not to be restricted to a confession of sin, though that may be included, but extended to a statement of his cares, anxieties, and affairs in general. Hence the correlative expression, thou hast answered me, the Hebrew verb being specially appropriated to the hearing or answering of prayer, i. e. granting what it asks. The last clause expresses a desire to testify his gratitude for God's compassion by obeying his commandments, with the usual acknowledgment that these cannot be executed without divine assistance, or even known without divine instruction.

27. The way of thy precepts make me understand, and I will muse of thy wonders. The first clause expresses the same wish, arising from the same consciousness of weakness, as in v. 26. The verb in the last clause is one of those in the usage of which the ideas of speech and meditation run continually into one another. See above, on Ps. lv. 18 (17.) lxix. 13 (12.) lxxiv. 4, 7 (3, 6.) cv. 2.

28. My soul weeps from sorrow ; raise me up according to thy word. The meaning of the first verb seems to be determined by Job xvi. 20, where the same thing is predicated of the eye. The oldest versions make it mean to slumber (LXX. ἐνύσταξεν. Vulg. dormitavit), which would make the clause remarkably coincident with Luke xxii. 45.

29. The way of falsehood remove from me, and thy law grant unto me graciously. The way mentioned in the first clause is that of unfaithfulness to God's covenant, or of apostasy from it. See above, v. 21. Remove, a causative in Hebrew, meaning make to depart. The common version of the last verb, as above given, is a correct paraphrase of the Hebrew verb (רַחַם) to be gracious, to act graciously, and here still more specifically, to give graciously, to bestow as a free favour. To give the law is still, as in the preceding verses, to make it known by a divine illumination.

30. The way of truth have I chosen ; thy judgments have I set (before me.) Truth, in the sense of faithfulness, fidelity to obligations, the opposite of the falsehood mentioned in v. 29. His own choice coincides with the divine requisitions. Judgments, as in vs. 7, 13, above. I have set, i. e. before me, as an end to be aimed at, and a rule to be followed. The Hebrew verb occurs above, Ps. xviii. 34 (33.) xxi. 6 (5.) lxxxix. 20 (19), and the full phrase, Ps. xvi. 8. The Septuagint renders it here, I have not forgotten.

31. I have cleaved unto thy testimonies, oh Jehovah, put me not to shame. The first verb is the same with that in v. 25. Unto literally in, as if implying a complete absorption in the object

See above, on Ps. i. 2. Testimonies, precepts, as in v. 2 Shame me not, suffer not my hopes to be disappointed and confounded. The Hebrew verb is a causative of that in v. 6.

32. The way of thy commandments will I run, for thou wilt enlarge my heart. The verb to run expresses a more zealous obedience than the usual expression walk. To enlarge is sometimes to relieve from confinement. See above, on Ps. cxviii. 5. But the whole phrase, to enlarge the heart, seems, especially in this connection, to denote a change in the affections leading to more prompt obedience. Of the eight verses in this stanza five begin with the noun (דָּרֶךְ) way or its plural, and two with the verb (פָּקַד) to deare.

33. Guide me, Jehovah, (in) the way of thy statutes, and I will keep it (to the) end. The first verb is here used in its primary sense of showing or pointing out the way, from which is deduced the secondary one of teaching. Keep it, observe it, adhere to it, keep in it. The last word in Hebrew, which occurs above, in different senses and connections, Ps. xix. 12 (11.) xl. 16 (15.) lxx. 4 (3), is used adverbially here and in v. 112 below.

34. Make me understand (it) and I will keep thy law, and will observe it with a whole heart. The first verb is too vaguely rendered in the English versions (give me understanding.) It has here the same sense as in v. 27, and the object is to be supplied from the next member of the sentence. The form of the last verb is one expressing strong desire and fixed determination. With a whole heart, or with all (my) heart, as in v. 2.

35. Make me tread in the path of thy commandments, for in it do I delight. The first verb is the causative of that used in Ps. vii. 13 (12.) xi. 2. xxxvii. 14. xci. 13. I delight, have delighted, not at present merely but in time past.

36. Incline my heart unto thy testimonies, and not to gain Here again the sense of absolute dependence or divine influence is strongly implied. Testimonies, as in v. 31. Gain, profit, lucre, as in Ps. xxx. 10 (9), but here put for overweening love of it, supreme devotion to it.

37. Turn away my eyes from seeing falsehood; in thy ways quicken me. The first verb strictly means to cause to pass (or turn) away. Falsehood is not the word so rendered in v. 29, but the negative term (אָפְרָיִם) meaning vanity, nonentity, and here applied to all objects of religious trust besides God. These the Psalmist desires not even to see, much less to gaze at with delight and confidence. See above, Ps. xxxi. 7 (6.) xl. 5 (4.) lx. 13 (11.) lxii. 10 (9.) Quicken me, save me or make me alive, as in v. 25. In thy ways, by leading me in the way of thy commandments.

38. Make good to thy servant thy word which (thou hast spoken) to thy fearers. The first verb means to cause to stand, to set up, to establish, to confirm, and in this connection to fulfill or verify. To thy servant, not merely to me, but to me who am thy servant, in a special and emphatic sense, which is applicable either to the chosen people as a whole, or to its individual members. Thy word, as in vs. 25, 28. To thy fearers, literally, to thy fear, the abstract being put for the concrete term; or it might be rendered for thy fear, that thou mayest be feared. See below, on Ps. cxxx. 4.

39. Turn away my disgrace which I dread, for thy judgments (are) good. The first word is the same with that in v. 37, meaning make (or cause) to pass away. In this connection it might either mean to remove or to avert; but the latter agrees better with the next phrase, which I dread. The original is not the common Hebrew word for fear, but one used by Moses in precisely the same sense as here. See Deut. ix. 19. xxviii. 60, and compare Job ix. 28. Thy judgments are good, i. e. prompted and controlled by infinite goodness, and should therefore fall upon the wicked, not the righteous.

40. Behold, I long for thy precepts ; in thy righteousness quicken me. The first word is equivalent to see (or thou seest) that it is so, and involves an appeal to the divine omniscience. The first verb is the root of the noun longing in v. 20. To long for God's precepts is to long for the knowledge of them and for grace to obey them. The last clause prays that since God's judgments are good (v. 39), instead of killing they may make alive. See above, on vs. 17, 25, 37. In the stanza closing with this verse, only one initial word is repeated, namely (הַעֲבִיר) cause to pass or turn away.

41. And let thy mercies come (unto) me, oh Jehovah, thy salvation, according to thy word. That the stanzas were not meant to be regarded as distinct and independent compositions, is clear from the copulative (and) at the beginning of this verse. Mercies, suited to my various necessities. Come to me, or upon me, or into me, which are the ideas commonly expressed by this verb when construed directly with a noun. See above, Ps. xxxv. 8. xxxvi. 12 (11.) c. 4. Salvation is in apposition with mercies, being that in which all other gifts and favours are summed up and comprehended. With the last words compare v. 38 above

42. And (then) I will answer my reviler a word ; for I trust in thy word. The best answer to the calumnies and insults of his enemies is that afforded by his manifest experience of God's favour, and the practical vindication thereby afforded. The addition of word, which in our idiom is superfluous, may have some reference to its use in the corresponding clause. As if he had said : only let thy word be fulfilled, and I shall have a word to say in answer to my enemies.

43. And take not out of my mouth (this) word of truth utterly, for in thy judgments do I hope. Deprive me not of this conclusive answer to my enemies, by withholding that providential vindication of my character and practical attestation of thy favour towards me, which I confidently look for. The first verb is used in its primary sense (Gen. xxxii. 12), from which comes the usual but secondary one of snatching out of danger, extricating, saving. For the literal meaning of the Hebrew phrase translated utterly, see above, on v. 8. The last phrase in the verse means, for thy judgments I have waited, i. e. confidently looked for their appearance.

44. And I will observe thy law always, unto eternity and perpetuity. Not merely for a time, or for the purpose of securing this triumph over his enemies, but forever, to express which idea the three strongest terms afforded by the language are combined. As the keeping of the law, so often mentioned in this psalm, has evident reference to the present life, the strong promise of perpetual obedience, in the verse before us, is considered by some writers as a proof that the ideal speaker is not an individual believer, but the church or chosen people.

45. And I will walk in a wide place, for thy precepts have I sought. Free from the pressure and confinement to which he had been previously subject. See above, on Ps. cxviii. 5 Sought thy precepts, i. e. sought to know them and to do them. Compare the combination, keep and seek, in 1 Chr. xxviii. 8.

46. And I will speak of thy testimonies before kings and will not be ashamed. Here again some eminent interpreters have found an indication of the national design and meaning of the whole psalm, as the individual believer could not be expected to bear witness to the truth in such a presence. He might however do so, as one of the component parts of the whole body. But the words are really expressive only of a readiness to declare the divine testimony against sin, in any presence, even the most august, if it should be necessary. This passage seems to have been present to our Saviour's mind when he uttered the prediction in Matt. x. 18. Ashamed has here its strict sense, as denoting a painful feeling of humiliation.

47. And I will delight myself in thy commandments which I love. I will not obey them merely from a selfish dread of punishment or painful sense of obligation, but because I love them and derive my highest happiness from doing them. See above, on Ps. xix. 12 (11.) The first verb has the same sense as in v. 16. The past tense of the last verb (I have loved) represents his love to God's commandments as no new-born and capricious passion, but a settled habit and affection of his soul.

48. And I will raise my hands to thy commandments which I love, and I will muse of thy statutes. The raising of the hands is a symbol of the raising of the heart or the affections to some elevated object. See above, on Ps. xxviii. 2. Which I love, or have loved, as in v. 47, the terms of which are studiously repeated with a fine rhetorical effect, which is further heightened by the and at the beginning, throwing both verses, as it were, into one sentence. As if he had said: I will derive my happiness from thy commandments, which I love and have loved, and to these commandments, which I love and have loved, I will lift up my hands and heart together. For the meaning of the last clause, see above, on v. 27. The connective force of the conjunction and must not be urged in this verse, as it was needed to supply the initial vau, a letter with which scarcely any Hebrew words begin.

49. Remember (thy) word to thy servant, because thou hast made me to hope. The obvious meaning of the first clause is, remember the word (spoken) to thy servant. But Hebrew usage makes it probable, that the first and last words of the clause are to be construed together, so as to mean remember for thy servant, i. e. for his benefit, as in Ps. xcvi. 3. cvi. 45. Word is then absolutely put for promise, as in Ps. lvi. 11 (10), and the meaning of the whole clause is, remember thy promise in compassion to thy servant. The common version of the last clause (upon which etc.) is forbidden by the facts, that the Hebrew verb is never construed elsewhere with the proposition on, and that Hebrew usage would require a different combination (אשר על־זו) to convey the sense supposed. That the one here used (על אשר) may mean because, is clear from Deut. xxix. 24. 2 Sam. iii. 30. The same verb that means to hope in v. 43 is used as a causative, to make hope, here and in Ezek. xiii. 6.

50. This (is) my comfort in my suffering, and thy word quickens me. The reference to continued suffering in the first clause, and to its partial cessation in the second, agrees well with the condition of the chosen people when restored from exile. The terms, however, are so chosen as to be equally appropriate to personal afflictions, restorations, and deliverances. The word for comfort occurs elsewhere only in Job vi. 10, where it has precisely the same form. Thy word includes thy decree or order and thy promise. Quickens, saves alive, or restores to life, according to the prayer in vs. 25, 37, 40. The past tense (has quickened) implies that the conservative or restorative effect has already been experienced, though not yet perfected.

51. Proud (ones) deride me greatly; from thy law I swerve not. Both verbs are in the past tense, which would seem to indicate that the derision here complained of, although recent, had now ceased or been abated. The clause agrees well with the scorn excited in the heathen neighbours of the restored Jews by what seemed to be their mad attempt to build the temple.

The omission of a connective makes the antithesis more pointed. Swerved, declined, or turned aside. See above, on Ps. xlv. 19 (18), and compare Ps. xl. 5 (4.) The first word in the verse is one commonly applied to presumptuous high-handed sinners. See above, on Ps. xix. 14 (13.)

52. I have remembered thy judgments from eternity, Jehovah, and consoled myself. His faith and hope under present trials are sustained by recollection of the past. Thy judgments, not merely the punishments inflicted on thy enemies, but all the exhibitions of thy righteousness in outward act, including the deliverances of thy people. From eternity, or from an indefinite antiquity, which is the primary meaning of the Hebrew word. There is no reason for discarding the reflexive form of the last verb, as some versions do, especially as it suggests the idea, not of a mere passive reception of the comfort, but of an active effort to obtain it.

53. Rage has seized me from wicked (men) abandoning thy law. No English word is strong enough to represent the first one in the Hebrew of this verse except rage or fury. See above, on Ps. xi. 6. It here denotes the highest pitch of indignant disapproval. From, i. e. arising or proceeding from, because of. Forsaking thy law, not only refusing in practice to obey it, but avowedly abjuring its authority.

54. Songs for me have been thy statutes in the house of my sojournings. Instead of abjuring them as presumptuous sinners do, I make them the subject of my thankful and triumphant songs (Isai. xxiv. 16), even while I sojourn as a pilgrim and a stranger in a strange land. The house of my sojournings, i. e. the house where I sojourn, is an imitation of the phrase, land of sojournings, which occurs so often in the patriarchal history. See Gen. xvii. 8. xxviii. 4. xxxvi. 7. xxxvii. 1. Pilgrimage is less exact because it suggests the idea of locomotion rather than of rest. The statutes of God are thus rejoiced in, not as mere requisitions, but as necessarily including promises.

55. I remember in the night thy name, Jehovah, and observe thy law. The night is mentioned as the natural and customary season of reflection and self-recollection, and also as the time when pains of every kind are usually most acute. See above, on Ps. xci. 5. With this clause and the verse preceding compare Job xxxv. 10. Thy name, i. e. all that is denoted by thy names, and more especially by the one here mentioned, thy eternal self existence and thy covenant relation to thy people.

56. This has been to me, for thy precepts I have kept. The usual interpretations, this I had because I kept thy precepts, and this I have (namely) that I keep thy precepts, are almost unmeaning. When taken in connection with the one before it, the true sense of the verse appears to be, that what he was thus wont to promise or resolve, he had performed. The substantive verb is to be taken in the sense which it so often has in history. This has happened to me, come to pass, been verified in my experience. In the stanza which here ends, three verses begin with some form of the verb (זָכַר) to remember, and two with the pronoun (זֶה) this.

57. My portion, oh Jehovah, I have said, (is) to keep thy words. This construction is rejected by Hengstenberg and others, as forbidden by the accents and the analogy of Ps. xvi. 5. lxxiii. 26. But as the same words may either express the sense here given or my portion (is) Jehovah, we are at liberty to choose the one best suited to the context, even in opposition to the accents, which cannot be regarded as an ultimate authority. In favour of the sense first given is its perfect agreement with the close of the preceding stanza. In reference to the resolution there recorded and described as having been fulfilled, he here adds, thus have I said (declared my purpose) oh Lord to obey thy words.

58. I have sought thy favour with all (my) heart ; be gracious unto me according to thy word. In the first clause we have a repetition of the singular and striking idiom used in Ps. xlv. 13 (12), and explained by some as meaning strictly to soothe or stroke the face, and by others to soften or subdue it, i. e. the hostility or opposition expressed by it. With all (my) heart, or with a whole heart, as in vs. 2, 34, above. Thy word or saying, i. e. thy promise. The original expression is not (דבר) the one so constantly employed in this psalm, but (אמר) that used in vs. 10, 41, and derived from the verb (אמר) to say.

59. I have thought on my ways, and turned back my feet to thy testimonies. The first verb here means thought over, pondered, as in Ps. lxxvii. 6 (5.) My ways, i. e., as appears from the last clause, my departures from thy testimonies or commandments. See above, on vs. 2, 14, 31, 36, 46. The common version of the last verb (turned), although correct, is not sufficient to convey the full force of the Hebrew word, which is a causative meaning to bring back or make to return, and implying previous departure, whereas the primitive verb turn carries with it no such implication. While this verse is exactly descriptive of the process of personal conviction and conversion, it is also strikingly appropriate to the effects of the captivity on Israel, as a church and nation.

60. I hastened, and delayed not, to observe thy commandments. This continues the account of his conversion, begun in the preceding verse. The first clause exemplifies the idiomatic combination of a positive and negative expression of the same idea. The second verb is peculiarly expressive and seems to be applied, in the most ancient Hebrew books, to a trifling and unreasonable tarrying in great emergencies. See Gen. xix. 16. xliii. 10. Ex. vii

39. In this respect, as well as in relation to its singular reduplicated form, the Hebrew verb bears some analogy to certain familiar terms in English, which are colloquially used in the same manner.

61. The bands of wicked men environed me, (but) thy law I did not forget. As descriptive of personal experience, this may be translated in the present (environ me, forget not); but in order to include a reference to the Babylonish exile, and the preservation of the people from apostasy at that eventful crisis, the preterite forms of the original must be preserved. The figure of the first clause is borrowed from Ps. xviii. 5, 6 (4, 5), but with the substitution of a verbal form used only here, and represented by the word environed. The relation of the clauses, to denote which in English but has been supplied, is the same as in v. 51 above.

62. At midnight I will rise to give thanks unto thee on (account of) the judgments of thy righteousness. The first phrase, which literally means the half (or halving) of the night, is borrowed from the history of the midnight massacre in Egypt, Ex. xi. 4. xii. 29, to which there is also a historical allusion, as a signal instance of divine interposition and miraculous deliverance. A similar allusion may be traced in Job xxxiv. 20. The judgments of thy righteousness, thy judgments of righteousness, thy righteous judgments, cannot be altogether different in meaning from the very same words in v. 7, as supposed by some interpreters, who there explain the phrase to mean God's precepts or his requisitions, here his penal inflictions. The solution of the difficulty lies in this, that the words mean neither of these things specifically, but something which comprehends them both, viz. the actual manifestations of God's righteousness, in word or deed, by precept or by punishment.

63. A fellow (am) I to all who fear thee, and to the keepers of thy precepts. Not merely a companion or frequenter of their company, but an associate, a congenial spirit, one of the same character. Compare the use of the same Hebrew word in Ps. xlv. 8 (7), where the plural is translated fellows in the English Bible. The verse before us is one of those which it seems most difficult to understand of Israel as a whole; for in what sense was the church or chosen people a companion of those fearing God and keeping his commandments, when all the people in the world of that description were embraced within her own communion? The force of this objection is so great that Hengstenberg applies the description to the pious ancestors of the returned Jews, and refers to Mal. iii. 24 (iv. 6.) The necessity of such a forced construction goes far to confirm the exegetical hypothesis, already stated as most probably the true one, that the psalm was intended to express the feelings of an individual believer, but that some of its terms are, from parity of circumstances, equally descriptive of what had been experienced by the house of Israel as a church and nation.

64. Of thy mercy, oh Jehovah, full is the earth; thy statutes teach me. Since thy mercy fills the whole earth, let it reach to me, enabling me to understand thy will and to obey it. The relation of the clauses is not unlike that in v. 12. The stanza closing with this verse is the first in which the initial words of all the verses are entirely different. See above, on vs. 8, 16, 24, 32, 40, 48, 56.

65. Good hast thou done to thy servant, oh Jehovah, according to thy word. The common version of the first clause (thou hast dealt well with thy servant) is equally correct and has the advantage of retaining the preposition with, which may be used in English after deal but not after do. The sense expressed by both translations is the same, to wit, thou hast treated him graciously on kindly. According to thy word, i. e. the promise annexed to thy commandments, as in vs. 25, 28 (compare vs. 41, 58.) This verse is equally appropriate as a personal thanksgiving, and an acknowledgment of national deliverances, such as that from Babylon.

66. Goodness of judgment and knowledge teach me, for in thy commandments I believe. The first word in Hebrew is not (טו) the adjective good, as in v. 65, but (טו) the corresponding abstract noun meaning goodness, as in Ps. xxv. 7. xxvii. 13. xxxi. 20 (19.) That it here denotes not moral but intellectual excellence, is determined by the addition of (טו) a word originally meaning taste, and then transferred to reason, judgment, understanding. See above, on Ps. xxxiv. 1. Teach me good judgment, i. e. impart it by divine instruction. Judgment and knowledge may be here distinguished as in common parlance, the one denoting the faculty employed, the other the result of its exertion. The knowledge meant is that continually prayed for in this psalm, to wit, the knowledge of God's will. The connection of the clauses seems to be, that he has faith and would fain have knowledge; he takes God's precepts upon trust, but then prays that he may understand them. To believe in God's commandments is to believe that they are his, and therefore right and binding.

67. Before I suffered I (was) going astray, and now thy saying I observe. Going astray, wandering, erring, i. e. habitually, ever straying. And now (on the contrary), where our idiom would require a but. The saying of God is what he says, including both commands and promises, which indeed are represented in the Old Testament, and especially in this psalm, as inseparable. Observe, attend to, keep in view, according to the nature of the object, trusting the promise, obeying the command. The last verb strictly means I have observed, implying that the salutary fruit of the affliction was already realized and still continued. The sentiment of this verse has been echoed, and its very words repeated, by the godly sufferers of every age, a strong proof that it was meant to be so used. At the same time it furnishes an exquisite description of the effect produced upon the Jews, as a body, by the Babylonish exile, and especially the end which it forever put to their continual lapses into idolatry, by which their early history was characterized, and with respect to which the whole race might well have said, Before I suffered I was (ever) straying.

68. Good (art) thou and doing good—teach me thy statutes. Good, both essentially and actively or practically; good in thyself and good to others. The participle, as in v. 67, denotes habitual constant action, (ever) doing good. It is characteristic of this psalm, that the petition founded on the goodness of God's nature, on his beneficence, and even on his infinite perfection, si still, teach me thy statutes! Make me acquainted with thy will, and show me how to do it! See above, on vs. 12, 64.

69. Proud (men) have forged a lie against me; I, with all (my) heart, will keep thy precepts. Proud, presumptuous, overbearing sinners, as in v. 51. Forged expresses the essential meaning of the Hebrew word, but not its figurative form, which seems to be that of sewing, analogous to that of weaving, as applied to the same thing, both in Hebrew and in other languages. We may also compare our figurative phrase, to patch up, which however is not so much suggestive of artifice or skill as of the want of it. The connection of the clauses is, that all the craft and malice of his enemies should only lead him to obey God with a more undivided heart than ever. See above, on v. 58. With the same surprising skill and wisdom as in many other cases which have been already mentioned, this verse is so framed as to be equally well suited to such national and public evils as those described in the fourth chapter of Ezra, and to the sufferings of the pious individual, arising from the pride and spite of wicked enemies.

70. Fat as grease (is) their heart. I (in) thy law delight. The connection of the clauses lies in the figurative use of fat to denote insensibility. See above, on Ps. xvii. 10. lxxiii. 7. While they are utterly insensible to spiritual pleasures, and especially to those springing from the knowledge of thy law, I find therein my highest happiness. The verb in the last clause is a cognate form to that in vs. 16, 47, and identical with that in Isai. xi. 8, where it means to play, sport, or enjoy one's self.

71. (It is) good for me that I was made to suffer, to the end that I might learn thy statutes. The prayer so frequently repeated, teach me thy statutes, is now proved to be sincere by a hearty acquiescence in the painful discipline by which it had been partially fulfilled already. Good for me, and therefore good on God's part. The idea of compulsory subjection to this salutary process is suggested by the passive causative form of the verb used in v. 67. To the end or intent, a phrase corresponding, both in form and meaning, to the Hebrew.

72. Good for me is the law of thy mouth (more) than thousands of gold and silver. For me, for my use as well as in my estimation. The law of thy mouth, that which thou hast uttered. See above, on v. 13. Than, literally, from, away from, as distinguished from, as compared with, which is just the meaning of the English than. The combination good than, or good from, is the nearest approach, of which the Hebrew idiom admits, to better than. The indefinite term thousands may refer to weight or number; to coin or bullion; to coins in general, or to shekels or talents in particular. While this verse primarily expresses the changed estimate which Israel learned in exile to put upon the law it is equally expressive of the feeling cherished by all true believers, in their best estate, as to the value of the word of God. Here ends the ninth stanza, of which five verses begin with the word (טוב) good.

73. Thy hands made me and fashioned me ; make me understand and let me learn thy commandments. As I owe my existence to thy power, so too I rely upon thy grace for spiritual illumination. Compare Deut. xxxii. 6. Fashioned, literally, fixed, established, i. e. framed my constitution as it is.

74. Thy fearers shall see me and rejoice ; for in thy word have I hoped. Compare Ps. v. 12 (11.) xxxiv. 3 (2.) They shall rejoice in my case, as a new proof that they who trust in God cannot be disappointed. The literal meaning of the last clause is, because for thy word I have waited, i. e. patiently and trustfully awaited its fulfilment.

75. I know, Jehovah, that righteousness are thy judgments, and (in) faithfulness thou hast afflicted me (or made me suffer.) Thy judgments, thy sovereign decisions and their execution, are righteousness itself, i. e. perfectly righteous. So in the next clause, for in faithfulness we may read as faithfulness itself, as one absolutely faithful to his promise and engagements. This confession would be untrue, if those who made it were not conscious of their guilt and ill-desert. Compare Deut. xxxii. 4

76. Oh that thy mercy might be for my comfort, according to thy saying to thy servant. The optative expression, oh that, is here used to represent the Hebrew particle of entreaty (אֲנִי), correctly paraphrased in the English Bible, I pray thee. For my comfort, literally, to comfort (or console) me. Thy saying, that which thou hast said or promised. To thy servant, to me as thy servant, and as such in covenant with thee. This description is equally appropriate to the body and its members.

77. Let thy compassions come unto me (or upon me), and I shall live, for thy law (is) my delights. The construction in the first clause is like that in v. 41. And I shall live, or as we might express it, that I may live. See above, on v. 17. He pleads what he has received already as a ground for asking more. The plural (delights) expresses fulness and completeness, or perhaps implies that this joy is equal or superior to all others, or includes them all. The Hebrew noun is derived from the verb in vs. 16, 47, 70.

78. Shamed be the proud, for falsely have they wronged me; I will muse of thy precepts. False, literally, falsehood, i. e. in or by it. Wronged, literally, bent, perverted. With the last clause compare vs. 27, 48.

79. Let them return to me that fear thee and know thy testimonies. Let thy servants who have looked upon me as abandoned by thee now restore to me their confidence. The various reading in the last clause (ידעו and ידעו) does not affect the meaning of the sentence, except that the reading in the text may be included in the wish, and let them know thy testimonies, i. e. let them learn from my experience to understand thy precepts better.

80. Let my heart be perfect in thy statutes, to the end that I may not be shamed. In thy statutes, in the knowledge and the practice of them, or as it is expressed in Ps. xix. 12 (11), in keeping them. Shamed, put to shame by the frustration of my highest hopes. See above, on v. 6. Two of the verses in this stanza begin with the same Hebrew word (יָהִי).

81. For thy salvation faints my soul ; for thy word, do I wait. Both verbs are in the preterite, implying that it is so and has been so. Faints, is spent or wasted. This strong expression for intense desire is borrowed from Ps. lxxxiv. 3 (2.) With the last clause compare v. 74.

82. My eyes fail for thy saying, so that I say, when wilt thou comfort me ? The first verb in Hebrew is the same with the first in the preceding verse. Thy saying, the fulfilment of thy promise. The Hebrew noun is derived from the following verb, to say, so as to say, so that I say. It might also be translated, but with less exactness, while I say.

83. For I have been like a bottle in the smoke ; thy statutes I have not forgotten. The bottle meant is one of skin, still common in the east. The comparison is not entirely clear. Some suppose that the blackening and shrivelling effect of the smoke upon the skin is simply used as a figure for distress. Others understand the words as conveying the additional idea, that as wine-skins are not meant to be involved in smoke, so distress is not the normal or natural condition of God's people. Others, assuming that the skins were intentionally smoked by way of seasoning, suppose the principal idea to be that of painful but salutary discipline. There can be no doubt, that the clause relates, in some way, to the afflictions, either of the chosen people, or of individual believers, or of both. The meaning of the last clause is that, notwithstanding these afflictions, the sufferer has not forgotten God's commandments.

84. How many (are) the days of thy servant ? When wilt thou execute upon my persecutors judgment ? The shortness of life is indirectly urged as an argument for speedy action. See above.

on Ps. xxxix. 5, 14 (4, 13.) lxxviii. 39. lxxxix. 48, 49 (47, 48.) Execute judgment, or do justice, as in Ps. ix. 5 (4.)

85. Proud (men) dig for me pits, which (are) not according to thy law. The presumptuous sinners (vs. 51, 69, 78) who are his enemies use the most treacherous means for his destruction, without regard to the divine command or prohibition. See above, on Ps vii. 16 (15.) lvii. 7 (6.)

86. All thy commandments (are) faithfulness; falsely do they persecute me; help thou me. The promises annexed to God's commandments are infallible. Falsely, as in v. 78, falsehood, i. e. in falsehood, without right or reason, or with (by means of) falsehood, as their instrument. The verb agrees with the remoter antecedent (persecutors) in v. 84.

87. They almost consumed me in the land, and I did not forsake thy precepts. The verb consumed or destroyed (כָּבַד) and the phrase in the land both occur in reference to the Canaanites, 2 Chr. viii. 8. The translation in the earth (v. 19) is admissible, but less significant, and less in keeping with the national import of the psalm. The second clause, as usual in such cases, declares that notwithstanding his afflictions, he still sought to know and do the will of God.

88. According to thy mercy quicken me, and I will keep the testimony of thy mouth. Restore me to life, or save me alive, as in vs. 25, 37, 40. Of thy mouth, as in vs. 11, 72. This closes the eleventh stanza and the first half of the psalm. Two of these eight verses begin with different forms of the verb (כָּבַד) to fail or faint, and three (including v. 84) with the particle (כִּי) as or like

89. To eternity, Jehovah, thy word is settled in heaven. The translation, eternal (art thou) Lord, is contrary to usage, which requires the pronoun, in that case, to be expressed. Settled, literally, made to stand, i. e. unalterably fixed. In heaven, beyond the reach of all disturbing causes. See above, Ps. lxxxix. 3 (2.)

90. To generation and generation (is) thy faithfulness; thou hast fixed the earth and it stands. Resolved into our idiom, the meaning of this verse is, that the truth of God's promises, or his fidelity to his engagements, is secured by the same divine perfection, which brought the world at first into existence, and has ever since preserved it. The verb translated fixed is not the one employed in v. 89, but that used in Ps. vii. 10 (9.) ix. 8 (7.) xl. 3 (2.) xlviii. 9 (8.) lxviii. 10 (9.) xc. 17. xcix. 4. cvii. 36. The sense prepared is rare and doubtful, and too feeble for this context.

91. For thy judgments they stand to day, for all are thy servants. The subject of the first verb, though obscure, is probably the heavens and the earth, mentioned in the two preceding verses. These stand, continue to exist, for the execution of God's judgments, with reference perhaps to the destruction wrought by fire from heaven, by the opening of the earth, etc. All, literally, the whole, τὸ πᾶν, the universe; but the construction of this with the plural servants would be harsh in English. The same expression is applied in Ps. xiv. 3 to all mankind, but here to the material universe. Thy servants, the instruments employed to execute thy will.

92. Unless thy law were my delights, then should I perish in my affliction. The verse admits also of the construction in the English Bible, which refers it to a remoter past, and represents the danger as escaped, whereas the first construction implies a continued state of suffering. The law of God, as usual in this psalm.

is here viewed, not as a body of mere requisitions, but as a covenant, a law accompanied by promises.

93. To eternity I will not forget thy precepts, for in them hast thou quickened me. In them, or by them, which is really included in the other, meaning in the practice of them and by means of them. Quickened, as in vs. 17, 25, 37, 40, 50.

94. Thine am I—save me—for thy precepts I have sought. The original form of the first clause is, to thee (am) I. Sought, as in vs. 2, 10, 45.

95. For me have wicked (men) waited, to destroy me; thy testimonies will I understand. With the first clause compare Ps. lvi. 7 (6.) Consider, though correct, is an inadequate translation of the last verb, which denotes a fixed and intelligent attention. The only effect of his enemies' malignant plots is a still more serious contemplation of God's precepts.

96. To all perfection I have seen an end, (but) wide is thy command exceedingly. By end we are not to understand the end of its existence, but the limit or boundary of its extent. To all other perfection (so called) I can see an end, but that required and embodied in thy law is boundless. All the verses of this stanza except one (v. 92) begin with the preposition (ב) to or for, as all those of the second do with (א) in.

97. How I love thy law! All the day it (is) my meditation, i. e. the subject of my solitary musing. This continual representation of God's law, not as a mere rule, but as an object of affection and a subject of perpetual reflection, is characteristic of the Psalms, and appears at the very threshold of the whole collection. See above, on Ps. i. 2.

98. (More) than my enemies do thy commandments make me wise; for to eternity it is mine (or to me.) This is the construction of the first clause preferred by the latest interpreters, although it requires a singular verb to be construed with a plural noun. But as the same irregularity exists in the construction of the pronoun in the second clause, however the first may be explained, it is best to explain both anomalies alike, i. e. partly by the relative position of the words, and partly by the aggregate sense in which commandments is here used as equivalent to law, and which, agreeably to general usage, may sufficiently account for its construction with a verb and pronoun in the singular. As analogous cases have been cited 2 Sam. xxii. 23—" (as for) his statutes, I depart not from it"—and 2 Kings xvii. 22—" the sins of Jeroboam which he did, they departed not from it." As the sins of Jeroboam were concentrated in one, so the statutes of Jehovah might be viewed as one great comprehensive precept. The meaning of the last clause is not merely, it is ever with me, but it is forever to me, i. e. mine, my inalienable indefeasible possession. See above, v. 94.

99. (More) than all my teachers I act wisely, for thy testimonies (are) a meditation to me. My teachers, my superiors in natural and worldly wisdom. As the Hebrew verb has always elsewhere an active meaning, it is better to retain it here, the rather as it indicates more clearly that the wisdom which he boasts was practical, experimental. See above, on Ps. ii. 10. xiv. 2. xxxii. 3 (7.) xli. 2 (1.) lxiv. 10 (9.) ci. 2. The essential meaning of the last clause is the same with that of v. 97, but the use of the expression (יָדָע) suggests the same idea of possession that is expressed in v. 98. Thy testimonies are mine, belong to me, as an object of incessant contemplation.

100. (More) than old men I understand, because thy precepts have kept. The first verb is the same, and has the same sense as in v. 95. The ambiguous Hebrew word (זְקֵנִים) cannot be expressed by any one in modern English, as it may mean either old men in the proper sense, whose greater experience entitled them to be considered wiser than their juniors; or the ancients, those of former generations, who are popularly looked upon as wiser than their children and successors. One of these senses suits the personal, the other the national design and application of the psalm. In either case, there is really no boast of superior intelligence, as a distinguishing endowment, but merely an assertion, in a striking form, that the highest wisdom is to do the will of God. See above, on Ps. cxi. 10.

101. From every evil path I refrain my feet, to the intent that I may keep thy word. Of the two ideas conveyed by word, that of command is here predominant, but not exclusive of the other. To keep God's word is primarily to obey his precept, but secondarily to verify his promise. This verse teaches clearly that the keeping of God's word is something incompatible with treading any evil path.

102. From thy judgments I do not depart, because thou guidest me. We have here another word of comprehensive meaning, in which sometimes one phase of the essential idea is presented prominently, sometimes another. The divine judgments, in this psalm, are always the external exhibitions of the divine righteousness, in word or deed, by precept or by punishment. Here of course the former are especially intended. The figure of a way, though not expressed, is still indicated by the verbs depart and guide. As to the latter, see above, on v. 33. From this verse it is doubly clear that he claims nothing as belonging to himself, or as accomplished in his own strength, but ascribes all to the power and grace of God. The preterite forms, in this and the preceding verse, merely make the past more prominent than the future, as an accessory idea to the present.

103. How sweet to my palate are thy sayings, sweeter than honey to my mouth! As the Hebrew verb occurs only here, it is better to follow the rabbinical tradition and the ancient versions, which make the idea to be that of sweetness, than the uncertain etymological deductions of the lexicons, which make it to be that of smoothness. The passive form may possibly denote that the psalmist's relish for God's word was not a native but acquired taste. Some interpreters unreasonably give to word the sense of law, excluding that of promise altogether, whereas both must unavoidably have been suggested to a Hebrew reader. The original word means neither more nor less than that which God has said. The figures of this verse are borrowed from Ps. xix. 11 (10.)

104. From thy precepts I get understanding; therefore I hate every path of falsehood. The common version of the first verb comes as near to the exact sense of the original as any other English word or phrase. The Hebrew verb is the same that occurs above, vs. 95, 100. As he knows no wisdom independent of the truth, he hates falsehood as the height of folly, and regulates his life accordingly. All the verses of this stanza begin either with the exclamation (הַיָּהוָה) how, or with the preposition (מֵי) from, than.

105. A lantern for my foot is thy word, and a light for my path. To the figure of a path, so frequently presented in this psalm already, is now added that of a light, to make it plain amidst surrounding darkness. The parallelism is completed by adding the generic term, light, to the specific one, lamp or lantern. For my foot, i. e. to guide it. For my path, i. e. to show it.

106. I have sworn, and will perform (my oath), to observe the judgments of thy righteousness. The second verb occurs above.

v. 23, in its primary sense of raising up, or causing to stand upright. In the later books, particularly that of Esther, it occurs very often in the sense of ratifying or confirming, and might here be rendered, I confirm (my oath already made.) In either case, it merely strengthens the expression which precedes it. Observe, keep, or obey, as in vs. 4, 5, 8, etc. Thy righteous judgments, as in vs. 7, 62. Considered as the language of the whole church or nation, this verse may have reference to the covenant entered into at Mount Sinai and renewed in the plains of Moab, while as a personal profession, it has its counterpart in the experience of every true believer.

107. I am afflicted even to extremity; Jehovah, quicken me according to thy word. That the first clause does not relate merely to past sufferings (I was afflicted), seems to follow from the prayer in the last clause, which may, however, be understood as a petition for deliverance from the deadening effects of a calamity already past, such as the Babylonish exile, the enfeebling influence of which notwithstanding incidental benefits, continued to be felt for ages. The first verb in Hebrew, with the idea of suffering, always suggests that of humiliation. Even to extremity, the same words that occur above, in vs. 8, 43, 51. The meaning of the last clause is, bestow upon me that life which is promised in the Law to those who keep it. See Lev. xviii. 5. Deut. vi. 24.

108. The free-will offerings of my mouth accept, I pray thee, oh Jehovah, and thy judgments teach me. For the meaning of the first Hebrew word, see above, on Ps. cx. 3. It is here a figure for prayers and praises, as appears from the addition of my mouth. The verb accept is one continually used in the Law, with respect to sacrificial offerings. See above, on Ps. li. 18 (16), and compare Ps. l. 14. The recurrence of the prayer, thy judgments teach me, shows that the writer's object was to make everything tend to this conclusion, and that however a sentence may begin, it cannot be complete without a repetition of this favourite idea.

109. My soul is in my hand always, and (yet) thy law I have not forgotten. The sense of the strong figure in the first clause is clear from Judg. xii. 13. 1 Sam. xix. 5. xxviii. 21, where he who risks or jeopardises his own life, in war or otherwise, is said to put his soul into his hand, as if to have it ready to give up or throw away at any moment. The same expression reappears in Job xiii. 14. The meaning of the whole verse is, that even amidst the deadly perils which environed him, he still remembered the divine law, as an object of supreme affection.

110. Wicked (men) have laid a snare for me, and (yet) from thy precepts I have not strayed. Laid for me, literally, given to me, as we might speak of a snare as presented to a person, i. e. set before him. The devices and temptations of the wicked were as powerless as all the other causes previously mentioned, in leading him away from the path of truth and safety.

111 I inherit thy testimonies to eternity, for the joy of my heart (are) they. The first verb means to take as a possession or inheritance, and is here used in allusion to those places of the Pentateuch where it is applied to the possession of the promised land. See for example Ex. xxiii. 30.

112. I incline my heart to do thy statutes to eternity, (even to) the end. The preterite form of the first verb represents the effort as already made but still continued. For the meaning of the last word, see above, on v. 33. This stanza, like the eighth, has a different initial word in every verse.

113 Waverers I hate, and thy law I love. The first word in Hebrew occurs only here. According to the most probable etymology, it means men of divided and unstable minds. See above, on Ps. xii. 3 (2), and compare James i. 8.

114. My hiding place and my shield (art) thou—for thy word I wait, i. e. for the fulfilment of thy promise. See above, on v. 81. The first word in the verse means properly a secret or a secret place. See above, on Ps. xxvii. 5. xxxii. 7. lxi. 5 (4.) xci. 1. The shield is a favourite figure for protection. See above, on Ps. iii. 4 (3.) vii. 11 (10.) xviii. 3, 31 (2, 30.)

115. Depart from me, evil doers, and I will keep the commandments of God. The first clause is borrowed from Ps. vi. 9 (8.) The meaning in both cases seems to be, that he has no fear of the enemy. The reason given in this case is, because he is resolved to do the will of God, and is therefore sure of his protection.

116. Uphold me according to thy promise, and let me live, and let me not be ashamed of my hope. Promise, literally, saying, that which thou hast said, as in v. 82. Let me live might also be translated and I shall live, or paraphrased that I may live. See above, on v. 17. Of my hope, literally from my hope, which some understand in a privative sense, away from, deprived of, without my hope, i. e. without having it fulfilled. Ashamed of my hope does not convey the sense so fully as shamed in my hope, frustrated, disappointed, in my expectations.

117. Sustain me and I shall be saved, and I will look to thy statutes always. The first verb is nearly synonymous with that at the beginning of v. 116, and the same that occurs above, Ps. xx. 3 (2.) xli. 4 (3.) xciv. 18. civ. 15. I shall be saved, or let me be saved, or that I may be saved, precisely as in the preceding verse. The strict future sense is here to be preferred, as the verb is not both preceded and followed by a prayer as in the other case. Look to, have respect to, regard, as the rule of my conduct. The construction of the verb and preposition is the same as in Ex. v. 9.

118. Thou despisest all (those) straying from thy statutes, for a lie (is) their deceit. They are objects not only of disapprobation but of scorn, because in attempting to deceive others they deceive themselves. Their deception of others is a lie to themselves.

119. (As) dross hast thou made to cease all the wicked of the earth; therefore I love thy testimonies. The purifying tendency of God's judgments is itself a reason for delighting in them. The verb in the first clause, which occurs in its primary sense in Ps. viii. 3 (2), is applied to the purging out of leaven at the passover (Ex. xii. 15) and to the extirpation of wild beasts (Lev. xxvi. 6).

120. My flesh shudders from dread of thee, and of thy judgments I am afraid. The first verb in Hebrew occurs only here, but is universally admitted to denote some bodily effect of fear, such as trembling, shuddering, or the instinctive creeping of the flesh. Afraid of, in the last clause, does not fully represent the Hebrew phrase, which denotes not mere apprehension of something still future or absent, but terror in view of something actually present. Judgments has its usual wide sense, but with special reference, in this case, to God's penal visitations. Here ends the fifteenth stanza, in which, as in the one before it, every verse has a distinct initial word.

121. I do justice and righteousness; leave me not to my oppressors. The first verb is in the past tense, I have done and I still do. Do justice, not in the restricted or forensic sense of redressing wrong judicially, but in the wide sense of executing justice or reducing it to practice.

122. Be surety for thy servant for good ; let not the proud oppress me. The sense and construction of the first verb are precisely the same as in Gen. xliii. 9. xliv. 32. Compare Job xvii. 3, and see my note on Isai. xxxviii. 14. It means not merely take me under thy protection, but become answerable for me, stand between me and those who, under any pretext, even that of legal right, may seek to oppress me. For good, i. e. for my good, for my safety or deliverance. Compare Deut. vi. 24. x. 13. xxx. 9. This is noted in the masora as the only verse in which the word of God, or some equivalent expression, is not found.

123. My eyes fail for thy salvation, and for the word of thy righteousness. With the first clause compare v. 82. The word of thy righteousness, thy word of righteousness, thy righteous word, the promise of a righteous God who cannot lie.

124. Deal with thy servant according to thy mercy, and thy statutes teach me. The first words strictly mean do with thy servant, which may be an ellipsis for do good to him, or deal kindly with him, as in v. 65. See above, on Ps. cix. 21.

125. Thy servant (am) I ; make me understand and let me know thy testimonies. That thy servant is not a mere periphrasis for I or me in v. 122 and elsewhere, appears from the first clause of the verse before us, where it constitutes the predicate of the proposition. In the second clause, we have the same choice of constructions as in vs. 116, 117. Let me know, or (then) I shall know, or that I may know, all implying one another, and amounting to the same thing.

126. (It is) time for Jehovah to do—they break thy law. The absolute use of do, without an object, or leaving it to be suggested by the context, is a peculiar Hebrew idiom. See above, on Ps. 22 (21.) We may here supply justice from v. 121 (compare

v. 84) ; or more indefinitely, whatever should be done ; or more indefinitely still, it is time to do (something), i. e. to act, which is substantially the meaning of the common version (time to work.) Retaining the order of the Hebrew words, the sense would seem to be, it is time to do (something) for Jehovah, i. e. for his people to do it. But the direct address to God in the last clause, and the whole tenor of the context, make it more probable, that God himself is here entreated to do something for the vindication of his broken law. The verb in the last clause is to be construed indefinitely ; they, i. e. men in general, or the wicked in particular. With this clause compare Isai. xxiv. 5.

127. Therefore I love thy commandments (more) than gold and (more) than fine gold. The first word refers not to the immediately preceding verse, but to the whole previous description of the excellence of God's commandments. The comparison in the last clause, like that in v. 103, is borrowed from Ps. xix. 11 (10.)

128. Therefore all (thy) precepts (as to) all (things) I think right ; every way of falsehood do I hate. The therefore is coordinate with that in the preceding verse, and to be explained in the same manner. Both were probably occasioned by the alphabetical arrangement here requiring an initial ayin. Precepts of course mean those of God, as word means his word in v. 49. The construction here is very foreign from our idiom, and by no means easily translated into it. The literal meaning of the words is, all precepts of all, which some understand to mean of all kinds, as in v. 14 and Ps. cxviii. 10. But others deny that all has this sense, even in the places cited, and explain it here to mean concerning all, on all subjects. The clause is then condemnatory of all partial distinctions between God's commandments, which may be the way of falsehood specially intended in the last clause. Compare Matt. v. 17—19. The verb in the first clause always elsewhere means to make straight, to go straight, or to direct aright; but the best interpreters agree in making it here mean, to think right or approve. It is worthy of remark, that as to all these points, the true sense of this difficult clause seems to be given in the English Bible. With the last clause compare v. 104. In the sixteenth stanza, which here closes, two of the verses begin with (כִּי-לֹא) therefore, and two with different forms of the verb (עָשָׂה) to do.

129. Wonderful (are) thy testimonies; therefore my soul keepeth them. The first word in Hebrew is a plural form of that in Ps. lxxvii. 12, 15 (11, 14) lxxviii. 12. lxxxviii. 11 (10), and properly means wonders, i. e., miracles or prodigies of moral excellence. My soul, not merely I, but I with all my heart or soul.

130. The opening of thy words enlightens, making the simple understand. The common version of the first word (entrance) is inaccurate, and the one here given, though exact is ambiguous. The clause does not refer to the mechanical opening of the book by the reader, but to the spiritual opening of its true sense, by divine illumination, to the mind which naturally cannot discern it. For the Scriptural usage of the word translated simple, see above, on Ps. xix. 8 (7.) cxvi. 6.

131. My mouth I stretch and pant, because for thy commandments I long. The first verb usually means to gape or yawn, but these verbs are intransitive in English, and cannot be construed with the noun directly. For the meaning of the next verb, see above, on Ps. lvi. 2, 3 (1, 2.) lvii. 4 (3.) Both are figurative expressions of the idea conveyed directly by the third verb, which occurs nowhere else, but differs only in a single letter from the verb of the same meaning used in vs. 40, 174, which also is peculiar to this psalm.

132. Turn to me, and be gracious to me, as (is) due to the lovers of thy name. The first verb does not mean to return or come back, but to turn round to or towards an object from which the looks have been averted. See above, on Ps. cii. 18 (17.) Be gracious or merciful, show favour to or favour me. As is due to, or according to the right of, the lovers etc. The Hebrew word (נַפְשִׁיךָ) has here the meaning of the Latin jus, as in Ps. lxxxi. 5, (4.) For the meaning of the lovers of thy name, see above, on Ps. v. 12 (11.)

133. My steps establish by thy word, and let not any iniquity rule over me. Establish, i. e. make firm, cause me to walk safely. See above, on Ps. xl. 3 (2.) By thy word or saying, what thou hast said, i. e. by the fulfilment of thy promise. The last clause might seem to be a prayer against the power of his own corruption; but the frequent use of the Hebrew noun to denote the mutual injustice of men, together with the language of the next verse, seems to show that this too is a prayer against oppression. The verb in this clause is applied by Nehemiah (v. 15) to the oppression suffered by the restored Jews. The Arabic verb of the same form is the root of the royal title Sultan.

134. Redeem me from the oppression of man, and I will keep thy precepts. These two verses are peculiarly appropriate to the trials and temptations of the Jews at the time of the Restoration. The form of the last verb denotes strong desire and determination.

135. Let thy face shine upon thy servant, and teach me thy statutes. The prayer of the first clause is the same as that which forms the burden of Ps. lxxx. (4, 8, 20.) Thy servant, i. e. me who am thy servant; hence the first person is immediately resumed.

136. Streams of water run down my eyes, for (that) they do not keep thy law. In the Hebrew of the first clause, eye is the subject, not the object, of the verb. See the same or similar idiomatic constructions, Jer. ix. 17. xiii. 17. Lam. i. 16. iii. 48. Ezek. vii. 17. The preposition in the last clause is to be construed with the relative understood, in the sense of for that, forasmuch as, because. The complete phrase occurs above, v. 49. They do not, i. e., men indefinitely, others. Here ends the seventeenth stanza, all the verses of which begin with different Hebrew words.

137. Righteous (art) thou, oh Jehovah, and just thy judgments. The English and the ancient versions make the second adjective agree with judgments, although different in number. This might be justified by making (רַשָּׁרָה) just a neuter adjective or substantive, as in Ps. cxl. 8. It is much more simple and agreeable to usage to apply the epithet to God himself, as in Deut. xxxii. 4, and explain thy judgments as a kind of adverbial or qualifying phrase, very common in Hebrew, but in our idiom requiring the insertion of a preposition, upright (in or as to) thy judgments.

138. Thou hast commanded righteousness thy testimonies, and faithfulness—exceedingly. This is another elliptical construction, wholly foreign from our idiom. Some resolve it by supplying to or to be: thou hast commanded thy testimonies to (or to be) righteousness, i. e. hast made them righteous. It is simpler, however, and more like the syntax of the verse preceding, to supply in or with: thou hast commanded (in) righteousness thy testimonies, etc. The very or exceedingly may belong to faithfulness alone, or to the whole proposition. The mention of faithfulness shows that the idea of God's promise is included in his testimony. With this verse compare v. 86, and Ps. xciii. 5.

139 My zeal consumes me, because my adversaries forget thy word. The verbs strictly mean, has consumed, have forgotten, but without excluding the present, as they might seem to do, if rendered literally into English. Zeal, jealous regard for God's authority and honour. See above, on Ps. lxi. 10, (9.) The first Hebrew verb occurs above, Ps. lxxxviii. 17 (16.) The last clause gives the reason or occasion of his jealousy. Adversaries, persecutors or oppressors. Thy word includes thy promise to me and thy command to them.

140. Pure (is) thy word—exceedingly, and thy servant loves it. Pure, literally, purged, tried, assayed, refined, like precious metal. See above, on Ps. xviii. 31 (30.) Saying, as elsewhere in this psalm alternates with word, and has the same comprehensive meaning. Thy servant, I as thy servant, and because I am so. Loves and has long loved.

141. Little (am) I and despised, (but) thy precepts do I not forget. However proudly or however justly I may be despised, I can still lay claim to one distinction, that I have not, like my despisers, forgotten God's commandments. These words are peculiarly appropriate to Israel, as a body, at the Restoration.

142. Thy righteousness (is) right forever, and thy law (is) truth. Right is here used as a noun, in order to vary the expression in English as in Hebrew, where two cognate forms (צדקה and צדק) are employed. With the first clause compare Ps. ciii. 17. cxi. 3. The idea here is, that God's rectitude is not capricious or mutable, as might be inferred from the afflictions of his people, but unchangeable and to eternity. Thy law, both in its precepts and its promises, is true, is truth itself.

143. Distress and anguish seize (or seized) me; thy commandments (are) my delight. Even in the midst of suffering, thy commandments not only solace me but make me happy. Seize, literally find, as in Ps. cxvi. 3. Delight, literally, delights, a succedaneum for all other pleasures. See above, on v. 24.

144. Right (are) thy testimonies to eternity; make me understand, and I shall live. Right, righteousness, the second of the nouns used in v. 142. Make me understand (them), i. e., these thy testimonies. And (then) I shall live, which includes let me live and that I may live. See above, on vs. 17, 116. Three of the verses in this stanza begin with derivatives of the root קצו.

145. I invoke (thee) with a whole heart—answer me, Jehovah—thy statutes will I keep. I have invoked thy favour with a heart-felt sense of its necessity; grant it to me, according to my prayer, and I am fully resolved to keep thy statutes.

146. I invoke thee—save me—and I will observe thy testimonies. The pronoun implied in the preceding verse is here expressed. The augmented form of the last verb is emphatic or intensive. I WILL observe thy testimonies, i. e. obey thy precepts and believe thy promises.

147. I come before (thee) in the (morning) twilight, and I cry to (thee); for thy words do I wait. The first verb has the same sense as in Ps. xcv. 2. Compare Ps. lxxxviii. 14 (13.) Early prayer implies importunate desire. The twilight meant is that of morning, as in 1 Sam. xxx. 17. Job vii. 4. The second verb means to cry for help. Its augmented form is common in verbs of speaking, and supposed by some grammarians to denote motion or direction towards the object of address, like the local or directive ה in nouns. See Judg. vi. 10. 1 Sam. xxviii. 15. Neh. v. 7. xiii. 11, 17, 21. Dan. ix. 4.

148. My eyes anticipate the watches, to muse of thy promise. Before the stated hours of vigil he is awake and ready for devout meditation. To muse, that I may muse or meditate. See above, on v. 62, and compare Ps. lxxiii. 7 (6). lxxvii. 5 (4.) Lam. ii. 19.

149. My voice hear according to thy mercy, oh Jehovah, according to thy judgments quicken me. According to the promises annexed to thy commandments.

150. Near are those pursuing crime; from thy law they are far off. Pursuing, eagerly devising and attempting. Crime, malicious mischief, as in Ps. xxvi. 10. In the last clause there is a kind of play upon the words far and near, as if he had said, the nearer they are to harming me, the further are they from obeying thee.

151. Near (art) thou, Jehovah, and all thy commandments are truth. The lusus verborum may be said to be continued. As they are near to injure, thou art near to save, and all thy promises to those who do thy will are true, are truth itself.

152. Long have I known from thy testimonies (themselves), that thou unto eternity hast founded them. The first word in Hebrew is a noun used adverbially, as in Ps. lv. 20 (19.) The precepts of the law describe themselves as everlasting. See Ex. xxvii. 21. xxviii. 43. xxxvi. 21. Lev. iii. 17. vi. 11. vii. 36. Num. x. 8. This concludes the nineteenth stanza, two of the initial words in which are derivatives of קרא, two of קרב, three of קדם.

153. See my suffering and deliver me; for thy law I forget not. The first petition, in the same words, occurs above, Ps. ix. 14 (13.) The first verb originally signifies to extricate or disembarass. I forget not, and have not forgotten, both of which ideas would be necessarily suggested to a Hebrew reader.

154. Strive my strife and redeem me; as to thy word, quicken me. With the first clause compare Ps. xliii. 1. lxix. 19 (18.)

As to, according to, in fulfilment of, thy saying, that which thou hast said, thy promise. See above, v. 41.

155. Far from the wicked (is) salvation ; because thy statutes they seek not. The first word in Hebrew is a masculine adjective, and does not agree regularly with salvation, which is feminine, but is construed as a neuter, something far, as the first word in v. 72 means a good thing. Seek not, and have not sought, i. e. desired either to know or do thy will. See above, on v. 45.

156. Many (or manifold are) thy compassions, oh Jehovah, according to thy judgments quicken me. That the first word means many, not great, in this connection, seems clear from the next verse. According to thy judgments, as in v. 149.

157. Many (are) my persecutors and oppressors ; from thy testimonies I decline not. The second noun is often rendered adversaries, as in v. 139, but it may here be taken in its primary sense, which is near akin to that of the preceding word. I decline not, and have not declined, deviated, swerved.

158. I see traitors and am sickened—(those) who thy saying keep not. The wicked are called traitors against God, their rightful sovereign, as in Ps. xxv. 8. The first verb is the reflexive form of that in Ps. xcv. 10, I sicken (or disgust) myself. The common version of the relative (because) conveys an idea not expressed but understood. There is no need of departing from the strict sense of the pronoun. See and have seen, keep and have kept.

159. See how I love thy precepts, Jehovah ; according to thy mercy, quicken me. See how, literally see that, which is tantamount to saying, thou seest that.

160. The head of thy word (is) truth, and to eternity (is) ever judgment of thy righteousness. Head is by some explained as meaning the sum total, by others as synonymous with the cognate form (ראשונה) in Ps. cxi. 10. Every judgment of thy righteousness, every one of thy righteous judgments. Three verses of the twentieth stanza begin with some form of the verb (ראה) to see.

161. Princes persecute me without cause—and at thy words my heart is awed. Both Hebrew verbs are in the past tense. The first verb, like its representative, originally means to follow after, to pursue, but is commonly employed in a hostile sense. Without cause answers to a single Hebrew word (בְּחֵן) an adverb related to the noun (חֵן) favour, as gratis is to gratia in Latin. So in modern English, the idea here might be expressed by the one word gratuitously. At thy words, literally, from them, i. e. because or on account of them. The last verb is not a passive in Hebrew, but a less usual synonyme of (פָּחַד) to fear, correctly paraphrased in the English versions (standeth in awe.) The masoretic reading is thy word in the singular, but, as in most other cases, the best critics now prefer the reading in the text.

162. Rejoicing (am) I over thy saying, like (one) finding much spoil. The participle indicates continued and habitual rejoicing. Thy saying, that which thou hast said, thy law with its attendant promises.

163. Falsehood I hate and abhor; thy law I love. Hate and have hated, love and have loved. Falsehood or lying, as in v. 29. The second verb has the same augmented and intensive form that occurs above, vs. 147, 158.

164. Seven times in the day I praise thee, for the judgments of thy righteousness. Seven times is a proverbial idiom for often or repeatedly. The use of this form of expression here is not the effect but the occasion of the observance of canonical hours. See above, c. Ps. lv. 18 (17.) Praise thee, and have been accustomed so to do. With the last clause compare v. 160.

165. (There is) much peace to the lovers of thy law, and there is to them no stumbling block. Peace, in opposition to the disquietude inseparable from a course of sin. A stumbling-block is a common scriptural figure for an occasion of unbelief or sin. The idea here is, that the best preservative against temptation is a love to God's commandments. The Prayer-Book version (they are not offended at it) and that in the text of the English Bible (nothing shall offend them) convey a very different meaning from the true one to a modern reader. The latter indeed seems directly contradictory to vs. 53, 158. The correct sense is intelligibly given in the margin of the common version.

166. I hope for thy salvation, oh Jehovah, and thy commandments I do. I hope and have hoped, do and have done. In the meantime, while expecting thy salvation, I am careful to perform thy will.

167. My soul observes thy testimonies, and I love them greatly (or exceedingly). I observe them, pay particular regard to them, in regulating my behaviour, not with a mere external conformity, but from or with my soul, because I love them greatly.

168. I observe thy precepts and thy testimonies, because all my ways are before thee. He does not affect to be prompted by a love exclusive of all fear, but only of a slavish dread. He stands in awe of God's omniscience, and is influenced by dread of his disapprobation to obey his precepts, as well as by attachment to the law itself. My ways, my courses of conduct, mode of life, behaviour. Before thee, open to God's infallible inspection, and subjected to his judgment. Two of the verses in this stanza begin with forms of the verb (רָמַז) to observe or keep. It is also worthy of remark that ׀ and ׀ are treated as one letter, three of the verses beginning with the former, namely, the two first and the sixth.

169. Let my cry come near before thee, oh Jehovah; according to thy word, make me understand. The first noun denotes an audible expression of strong feeling, whether sorrowful or joyful. See above, on Ps. xvii. 1. xxx. 6 (5.) Comē near before thee, not only near enough to be heard, but into thy presence, so that he who utters it may be seen. According to thy word, thy commandment which requires, and thy promise which secures, the understanding of thy will. See above, vs. 25, 65, 107, and compare Deut. xxx. 6.

170. Let my supplication come before thee; according to thy promise, free me (or deliver me.) The first noun, according to its etymology, denotes a prayer for grace or favour. See above, Ps. vi. 10 (9.) lv. 2 (1.) In this and the preceding verse, the prayer for deliverance from outward troubles is subjoined, and as it were subordinated, to that for grace to do the will of God. The same connection may be traced in Ps. xc. 11—17.

171. My lips shall pour forth praise; for thou wilt teach me thy statutes. The first verb means to cause to gush or flow, and is the same with that in Ps. xix. 3 (2.) lxxviii. 2. It here denotes eager, abundant, and unceasing praise. The last clause expresses the confident expectation of the blessing so often and importunately asked throughout the psalm. As if he had said, Now shall my lips praise, for I am about to receive what I had prayed for; thou wilt indeed teach me thy statutes. The translation when thou hast taught me (or shalt teach me) is less exact, less forcible, and really included in the other.

172. Let my tongue answer thy saying—that all thy commandments are right. The verb which usually means to answer prayer

(see above, vs. 26, 145) is here used in the sense of responding to a precept or a promise by the language of praise and acquiescence. Compare v. 42. There is no need of treating the optative form of the verb as a poetic license. The strict sense agrees well with the prayer in the next verse. What is here asked is occasion thus to praise God. As the last clause seems to assign no pertinent reason for the prayer in the first, it may be regarded as the response itself. Let my tongue say in answer to all thy requisitions, that all thy commandments are right, or righteousness itself, as in vs. 142, 144.

173. Let thy hand be (near) to help me ; for thy precepts do I choose. The word supplied in this translation is not necessary to the sense, but is introduced for the purpose of retaining the original construction, be to help me, i. e. be my help, or simply help me. The reason given in the last clause is, that as he voluntarily makes choice of God's will as his rule of conduct, he thereby renounces all other protection. The Hebrew verb is a preterite ; I choose, and have already chosen.

174. I long for thy salvation, oh Jehovah, and thy law (is) my delights. I long and have longed. With the first clause compare vs. 40, 81, 131 ; with the second, vs. 24, 77, 92.

175. Let my soul live and praise thee ; and let thy judgments help me. This verse sums up in conclusion the petitions of the whole psalm. Save me, and thereby give me cause to praise thee, for the blessings which I have derived from the promises and precepts of the law. Let my soul live, because it is that which is in danger. Judgments, as in vs. 149, 156.

176. I wander like a lost sheep—seek thy servant—for thy commandments I do not forget. The English versions of the first clause (I have gone astray) although they adhere strictly to the form of the original, seem to make the primary idea that of sin, which is really included, but only as the cause of that which is directly intended, namely misery, represented by the wandering of a lost and helpless sheep. Compare Jer. l. 6. Seek thy servant, deliver from this wretched state one who is still thy servant, and as such remembers thy commandments, even in the midst of his worst sufferings. As the preceding verse sums up the petitions of the psalm, so this sums up its complaints in the first clause and its professions in the last, connected by the short prayer (seek thy servant) as by a single link. The predominant use of the past tense, even to the end, shows how deeply the entire psalm is founded upon actual and previous experience. In this last stanza, the only initial word repeated is (רָחַם) the verb of existence.

 P S A L M C X X .

1. A Song of the Ascents. To Jehovah, in my distress, I called, and he answered me. This is the first of fifteen psalms (cxx — cxxxiv) all bearing the inscription, song of ascents or upgoings, i. e. sung during the periodical journeys or pilgrimages to Jerusalem at the times of the great yearly festivals. On these occasions the people are said, even in historical prose, to go up to Jerusalem, in reference both to its physical and moral elevation. See Ex. xxxiv. 24. 1 Kings xii. 27, 28. The Hebrew verb (רָחַם) employed in such connections is the root of the noun (מַעֲלֹת) ascents in these inscriptions. This explanation of the title is much more satisfactory than any other which has been proposed. A rabbinical tradition represents these psalms as having been sung by the people, as they ascended the fifteen steps (in Hebrew מַעְלֹת, seven on one side and eight on the other, repeatedly mentioned by Ezekiel (xl. 6, 22, 26, 31, 34, 37.)) But apart from the intrinsic improbability of this tradition, some psalms in the series were evidently not meant to be sung at the temple. No less improbable than this very ancient explanation is the modern one, that the inscription has reference to a peculiarity of structure, the repetition of a phrase or clause of one sentence in the next with an addition, forming a kind of climax or progression in the terms as well as the ideas. But even admitting that this peculiarity of form might be described by (מַעְלֹת) the Hebrew word in question, this word could not have been prefixed to each of the fifteen psalms, when the examples of the fact alleged are confined almost exclusively to one or two of them. Much nearer to the truth is the opinion, that these psalms were intended to be sung during the return from Babylon, which is called an ascent (מַעְלֵי) by Ezra (vii. 9.) But this can only be maintained by arbitrarily denying the genuineness of the titles, which ascribe four of the psalms (cxxii, cxxiv, cxxxi, cxxxiii) to David and one (cxxxvii) to Solomon. The position assigned to these, and the difference of tone between them and the rest, are ingeniously accounted for by Hengstenberg's hypothesis, that these five ancient psalms, sung by the people, as they went up to Jerusalem, before the captivity, were made the basis of a whole series or system, designed for the same use by an inspired writer after the Restoration, who not only added ten psalms of his own, as appears from the identity of tone and diction, but joined them to the old ones in a studied and artificial manner, entirely inconsistent with the supposition of fortuitous or random combination. The one psalm by Solomon stands in the centre of the series or system and divides it into two equal parts, in each of which we find two psalms of David and five anonymous or new ones, the former being separated and surrounded by the latter, an additional and strong proof of intended adaptation to the times when the later psalms were written, to which Hengstenberg still further adds the number and distribution of the divine names in the whole series and its subdivisions. The psalm immediately before is anonymous, but its tone and diction mark it as belonging to the period of the Restoration. It begins with an acknowledgment of that great mercy, v. 1, followed by a prayer for deliverance from treacherous and spiteful enemies, v. 2, and a confident anticipation of their punishment, vs. 3, 4, but closes with a further lamentation and complaint of present suffering, vs. 5—7. In this, as in all the other psalms of the series, the ideal speaker is Israel or Judah, considered as the church or chosen people. This first verse, although general in its terms, is perfectly appropriate to the Captivity, as the distress out of which the sufferer cried to God, and to the Restoration, as the answer to his prayer. In my distress, literally, in distress to me, an expression like that in Ps. xviii. 7 (6.) The augmented form of the Hebrew noun is like that in Ps. iii. 3 (2.)

2. Oh Jehovah, free my soul from lip of falsehood, from tongue of fraud. The soul is particularly mentioned as usual when the life or the existence is in danger. The last two nouns in Hebrew are not in construction but in apposition, a tongue (which is) fraud, equivalent in meaning to the same English words in an inverted order, fraud-tongue. See a somewhat similar combination, Ps. xlv. 5 (4.) lx. 5 (4.) The terms of the description are too strong to be applied to mere delusive promises, and necessarily suggest the idea of calumnious falsehood, as in Ps. xxxi. 19 (18.) cxix. 69, 78. The reality answering to this description in the case of the restored Jews is the spiteful misrepresentation, by which the Samaritans retarded the rebuilding of the temple, as recorded in the fourth chapter of Ezra.

3. What will he give to thee, and what will he add to thee, thou tongue of fraud? Having complained to God of the false tongue, the ideal speaker turns to it as actually present and addresses it directly, speaking of God in the third person. The meaning of the question is, what recompense can you expect from an infinitely righteous God for these malignant calumnies? The peculiar form of the interrogation is derived from that of an ancient oath, The Lord do so to me and more also, literally, and so add, i. e. further do, or in addition to the thing in question. See 1 Sam. iii. 17. xiv. 44. As explained by this allusion, the words have a new force. What good or evil may be imprecated on thee, as the consequence of these malicious falsehoods?

4. Arrows of a warrior sharpened, (together) with coals of juniper. The general idea of severe and painful punishment is here expressed by the obvious and intelligible figures of keen arrows and hot coals. The arrows of a mighty man, warrior, or hero, are those used in battle, perhaps with an allusion to the fact, that one of the races mentioned in the next verse excelled in archery. See Isai. xxi. 17. The word which the rabbinical tradition explains to mean the juniper, is by modern lexicographers identified with the Arabic name of a species of broom-plant, which is thought, on account of its inflammatory quality, to make the best charcoal. See Robinson's Palestine, vol. i. p. 299. With the figures of the verse before us compare Ps. vii. 14 (13.) xviii. 13, 14 (12, 13.) xli. 11 (10.)

5. Alas for me, that I sojourn (with) Meshech (and) dwell near the tents of Kedar! The first verb seems elsewhere, in the same construction, to denote the act of dwelling with one, Ps. v. 5 (4.) The Hebrew preposition in the last clause properly means with and denotes association and proximity. The English Bible, by twice employing our preposition in, obscures the meaning of both clauses, which is not that the people were in the power or even in the midst of the enemies here mentioned, but compelled to reside near them and to suffer from their neighbourhood. Meshech is the name given in Gen. x. 2 to the Moschi, a barbarous people inhabiting the mountains between Colchis, Armenia, and Iberia. Kedar was one of the sons of Ishmael, (Gen. xxv. 13), whose name is sometimes used to designate an Arabian tribe (Isai. xxi. 16. xlii. 11), and in later Hebrew the Arabians generally. As these races, dwelling far off, in the north and south, were never in immediate or continued contact with the Israelites, they are probably named as types and representatives of warlike barbarism, just as the names Goths, Vandals, Huns, Turks, Tartars, Cossacks, have at different times been used proverbially in English, to describe those supposed to exhibit the same character, however unconnected or remote in genealogy and local habitation. A slight approach to the same usage was produced among ourselves by the revolutionary war, in reference to the national names, British and Hessian. In the case before us, it is evident from v. 6, that Meshech and Kedar are mere types and representatives of those who hate peace and delight in war. Compare Ezek. xxxviii. 2, where Meshech appears as a chief leader under Gog, the great prophetic representative of heathendom.

6. My soul has dwelt too long for her with (one) hating peace. The substitution of my soul for I implies the intimate conviction and the painful sense of what is here asserted. Too long, literally, much or too much. As to this peculiar idiom, see above, on Ps. lxxv. 10 (9.) For her may be an idiomatic pleonasm, adding nothing to the meaning of the verb, with which it must be read in close connection: or it may have the meaning which the corresponding phrase would naturally seem to have in English, for her good or for her interest. See above on Ps. lxxviii. 8 (7.) Hating peace is clearly a collective or aggregate expression, comprehending all denoted by the Meshech and Kedar of the preceding verse, as an ideal individual.

7 I am peace, and when I speak, they (go) to war The first phrase resembles I am prayer in Ps. cix. 4, and seems to mean, I am all peace, nothing but peace, peace itself, i. e. entirely peaceful or pacific. Speak may be an ellipsis for speak peace, a phrase repeatedly occurring in the Psalms. See above, Ps. xxxv. 20. lxxxv. 9 (8), and below, Ps. cxxii. 8. The sense will then be, whenever I desire or propose peace. If the verb be absolutely understood, the sense is that every word he utters is made an occasion of attack or conflict. The double for, in the common version of this sentence, is as incorrect as the double in of v. 5, and more enfeebling to the sense. I am not only for peace, but am peace itself. They are not only for war, but arise, proceed, or address themselves to it.

PSALM CXXI.

1. A Song for the Ascents. I raise my eyes to the mountains. Whence cometh my help? The title differs from that of the preceding psalm only in the use of the preposition for, instead of the simple genitive construction. This variation, though without effect upon the sense, is favourable to the explanation which has been already given of these titles, as a song for the ascents or pilgrimages to Jerusalem is certainly more intelligible than a song for the steps of the temple, and stil' more so than a song for the returns from exile, while the modern theory of climacteric resumptions fails altogether to account for the expression here used. The whole psalm is a description of Jehovah as the guardian or protector of his people. The only material distinction of the parts is that arising from the alternate use of the first and second person, as in Ps. xci, which has led some to assume without ne-nessity, that the psalm was intended to be sung by alternate or responsive choirs. The phrase to lift the eyes, though sometimes used to signify the mere act of directing them to an object, has its strict and full sense, when a higher object is particularly mentioned, such as hills or heavens. The mountains here meant are the heights on which Jerusalem is built. It is not improbable that this psalm was intended to be sung when the pilgrims came in sight of the Holy City. Some suppose moreover that it was meant to be an evening song and used when they halted for the last night's rest before they reached Jerusalem. The relative construction of the last clause yields a good sense, but is not in perfect keeping with the usage of the compound particle (מֵאַרְבֵּי) which is elsewhere always interrogative.

2. My help is from Jehovah, Maker of heaven and earth. The creative power of Jéhovah is particularly mentioned, to demonstrate his ability to help his people. Compare Ps. cxv. 15.

3. May he not suffer to be moved thy foot ; may he not slumber—thy keeper. This is the expression of a wish, the only sense consistent with the form of the original. Let him not give up to moving thy foot. See above, Ps. xxxviii. 17 (16.) lxxvi. 9 (8.) The figure is peculiarly appropriate in the mouth of pilgrims, making their way among the hills and rocks of Palestine. The same thing is true of the figures in the subsequent verses.

4. Ló, he shall not slumber, and he shall not sleep—the keeper of Israel. What is desired in the third verse, is affirmed in this. The position of the subject at the end of the sentence, in both cases, is emphatic. Most interpreters assume a gradation in the meaning of the two verbs, as if one denoted lighter and the other deep sleep ; but they differ on the question which is the stronger of the two expressions. The latest writers say the first. See above, on Ps. iv. 9 (8.)

5. Jehovah is thy keeper ; Jehovah is thy shade upon thy right hand. The keeper or protector of Israel, who had twice been mentioned by that title, is now named. A shade or shadow is a common figure for protector, and the right hand often mentioned as the place of a protector. See above, on Ps. cix. 6. cx. 5, and compare Num. xiv. 9

6. By day the sun shall not smite thee, and the moon by night The last clause does not necessarily refer to injurious effects produced directly by the moon, but may be understood as a poetical description of all noxious influences operating in the night, over which the moon was constituted ruler at the time of its creation See Gen. i. 16. xxxi. 40. Jer. xxxvi. 30.

7. Jehovah will keep thee from all evil ; he will keep thy soul. The protection which had been repeatedly promised to Israel on the part of God, is now described as extending to all evils and to the very life and soul.

8. Jehovah will keep thy going out and thy coming in, from now even to eternity. This is the third repetition of the phrase, Jehovah will keep, i. e. keep safe, protect, preserve, as if to silence the misgivings of a weak or tempted faith, by the reiterated declaration of this cheering truth. Going out and coming in is a proverbial Hebrew phrase for all the occupations and affairs of life See Deut. xxviii. 6. 1 Sam. xxix. 6. The original reference is to man's going out to labour in the morning and returning home to rest at night. See above, on Ps. civ. 23. With the last clause compare Ps. cxiii. 2. cxvi. 18. cxxv. 2. The promise of eternal preservation is addressed directly to the church as such ; but that it involves the blessed immortality of individual believers, is admitted even by those least disposed to find allusions to the future state in the Book of Psalms.

P S A L M C X X I I .

1. A Song of the Ascents. By David. I rejoice in (those) saying to me, To the house of Jehovah we will go. This psalm, though so much older than the two before it, was probably placed third in the series, because it was intended to be sung, and was actually sung, at the entrance of the Holy City, whereas the others were used at the commencement of the march, and on coming in sight of Jerusalem. The ideal speaker represents the church or chosen people. After the introduction, vs. 1, 2, comes a panegyric on Jerusalem, as the royal and holy city, vs. 3—5, followed by a prayer for her prosperity as such, vs. 6—9. The Ascents, or upward journeys of the people to the sanctuary, as in Ps. cxx. 1. cxxi. 1. To rejoice in those saying is to rejoice because they say. On the last clause is founded Isai. ii. 3, where the gentiles are described as joining in the words here uttered by the Jews.

2. Standing are our feet in thy gates, oh Jerusalem! The common version (shall stand) is entirely ungrammatical. The past tense of the substantive verb with the participle means strictly have been standing, i. e. have begun to stand, or are already standing.

3. Jerusalem, the (one) built like a city which is joined to itself together. This seems to be a continuation of the address in the preceding verse. The unusual expressions in the last clause are intended to describe the city as substantially and strongly built. The sense is correctly given in the English Bible, a city that is compact together. This seems to imply that Jerusalem had recently assumed this character, and may therefore help to determine the period in the reign of David, when the psalm was written. See 2 Sam. v. 9. The abbreviated relative (יְרִיבֵי־יִשְׂרָאֵל) has by some been made a proof of later date; but it no doubt belonged from the beginning to the dialect of common life, though not commonly employed in writing till a later date. It occurs in the song of Deborah, Judg. v. 7, and elsewhere in the Book of Judges (vi. 17. vii. 12. viii. 26.)

4. Where the tribes go up, the tribes of Jah, (as) a testimony, to Israel, to give thanks to the name of Jehovah. There is obvious reference to the requisition in Ex. xxiii. 17. xxxiv. 23. Deut. xvi. 16, which is called a testimony, not merely as the law in general is (Ps. xciii. 5), but as a constant memorial of God's goodness to his people. The mention of the tribes seems to point to the period of the undivided monarchy.

5. For there sit thrones for judgment, thrones for the house of David. This means simply that Jerusalem was a civil as well as a religious capital. There, literally thither, implying that the singers were themselves in motion towards these thrones. Sit; or as we should say in English, stand. See below, Ps. cxxv. 1.

6. Pray for the peace of Jerusalem; may they have peace that love thee! Peace, in both clauses, includes all prosperity. There is obvious allusion to the meaning of the name Jerusalem. See above, on Ps. lxxvi. 3 (2.)

7. Peace be within thy rampart, and repose within thy palaces Peace and repose from all distracting causes, of whatever nature Rampart, breast-work, circumvallation. Rampart and palaces are put for the outer and inner masses of building. Compare Ps. xlviii. 14.

8. For the sake of my brethren and my friends, let me speak, Peace (be) within thee. By brethren and friends we are to understand the whole body of the chosen people. For their sake may include the sense of in their behalf. The last clause admits of a different construction, Let me speak peace to thee, literally in thee. See above, on Ps. lxxxv. 9 (8.) The optative meaning of the verb is determined by the particle (אֲנִי) the use of which here seems to be imitated in Ps. cxv. 2. cxvi. 4.

9. For the sake of the house of Jehovah our God, I will seek thy good. The house of God is here the sanctuary and all the interests of which it was the local centre. Jehovah our God, our patron and protector, our peculiar covenant God. Seek includes every form of effort to promote it; but the prominent idea is that of intercession.

PSALM CXXIII.

1. A Song of the Ascents. Unto thee do I raise my eyes, the (one) sitting in the heavens. This psalm contains an expression of solicitous desire for divine help, v. 1, 2, a direct prayer for mercy, v. 3, and a statement of the circumstances which occasioned it. With the first clause compare Ps. cxxi. 1, with the second, Ps. ii. 4. xi. 4. ciii. 19. cxiii. 3, 5.

2. Behold, as the eyes of servants (are turned) to the hand of their masters, as the eyes of a maid to the hand of her mistress, so our eyes (are turned) to Jehovah our God, until he have mercy upon us. The behold as, at the beginning, is equivalent to see how in English. Some suppose the act of looking towards the hand of a superior to denote desire of protection; others an appeal to his bounty, as in Ps. civ. 27, 28. cxlv. 15, 16; others an implied prayer that punishment may cease. Compare Gen. xvi. 6, 8, 9. Perhaps all these explanations err in being too specific, and the sense of the comparison is simply that they look with deference and trust to the superior power which controls them.

3. Have mercy upon us, oh Jehovah, have mercy upon us; for greatly are we sated with contempt. This petition forms the centre of the psalm, to which what goes before is introductory and what follows supplementary. The contempt is that of heathen neighbours, and especially that of the Samaritans, which is expressly mentioned in the history. See Neh. i. 3. ii. 19.

4. Much sated in itself is our soul with the scorning of the secure, the contempt of the proud. In itself, literally, to or for itself, as in Ps. cxxii. 3. Secure (sinners), those at ease, indifferent to the sufferings of others, and without apprehension of their own. Compare Ps. lxxiii. 12.

PSALM CXXIV.

1. A Song of the Ascents. By David. If (it had) not (been) Jehovah who was for us—oh let Israel say. This psalm consists of two parts, an acknowledgment of God as the deliverer of Israel, vs. 1—5, and a consequent determination to trust in him exclusively for future favours, v. 6—9. The verse before us propounds the theme of the whole composition, in a conditional and imperfect, but for that very reason a more striking form

It is tantamount to saying, what if the Lord had not been for us?—leaving the answer to the imagination of the reader. For us, in our favour, on our side; or to us, belonging to us, ours, which really includes the other. See above, on Ps. lvi. 10 (9.) Oh that in the last clause represents (אֲנִי) the particle of entreaty. The common version (now) conveys the very different idea, at length, after all that we have suffered, let Israel so say. The mistake is rendered more natural or rather unavoidable, to mere English readers, by the seeming antithesis between the now of this verse and the then of vs. 3, 4, 5, of which there is not the slightest trace in the original.

2. If (it had) not (been) Jehovah who was for us, in the rising up of man against us—What was left unfinished in the first verse, as a mere suggestion of the Psalmist's theme, is now repeated, for the purpose of being carried out. This is one of the rhetorical resumptions, which some modern critics hold to be the (מַעֲלֵוֹת) degrees, from which these fifteen psalms derived their common designation. With this verse compare Ps. lvi. 12 (11.)

3. Then alive would they have swallowed us, in the kindling of their wrath against us. With respect to the then at the beginning of this verse, there is danger of an error just the opposite of that already pointed out in reference to the now of v. 1. As the English reader would be almost sure to take that for a particle of time, which it is not, he would be equally certain to mistake this for a term of logic, meaning in that case, upon that supposition, or the like; whereas it really means at that time, the well remembered time of our extremity, when God so wonderfully interposed for our deliverance. The Hebrew particle occurs in this form only here, and is consequently no more a proof of recent than of early date. Another word liable to misconstruction in the English versions of this clause is quick, here used in its primary sense of living or alive, from which may be easily deduced its secondary sense of swift, implying lively motion. The historical allusion, in this and other like passages, is no doubt to the fate of Korah and his company. Compare Num. xvi. 32, 33, where the same verb and adjective occur together. See above, on Ps. lv. 16 (15.) The plural pronoun their refers to the collective man in the preceding verse.

4. Then the waters would have overwhelmed us (and) a stream passed over our soul. The common version (had overwhelmed us) is entirely correct, and more poetical in form than that here given, but at the same time ambiguous, as the sentence, taken by itself, would seem to mean, that before the time signified by then, the waters had actually overwhelmed them, which was not the case. The figures are the same as in Ps. xviii. 5, 17 (4, 16.) cxliv. 7.

5. Then had passed over our soul the waters, the proud (waters.) The waters are so described, partly because of the ideas suggested by their swelling (Ps. lxxxix. 10), partly because they represent dangers arising from the selfish pride of human enemies. Some, without necessity, recur to the primary meaning of the root, and explain the adjective to mean boiling, effervescing.

6. Blessed (be) Jehovah, who did not give us (as) prey to their teeth. By one of those rhetorical transitions which are constantly occurring in the figurative diction of the psalms, the enemies and dangers, which had just been represented as an overwhelming flood or torrent, are suddenly transformed into devouring beasts. See above, on Ps. iii. 8 (7.) lviii. 7 (6.) With the benediction or doxology, blessed (be) Jehovah, compare Ps. xxviii. 6. xxxi. 22 (21.)

7. Our soul is escaped, like a bird, from the snare of the fowlers, the snare is broken and we are escaped. We have here a second transition and a third comparison, to wit, that of the enemies to fowlers, and of their devices to snares or traps used in catching birds. In the second clause there is an obvious climax. Not only is the bird gone, but the snare is broken. This is peculiarly appropriate to the restoration of the Jews from Babylon, which was occasioned by the fall of Babylon itself. With the figures of this verse compare Ps. xviii. 5 (4.) xci. 3. The English phrase is escaped, denoting a change of state, and not, like has escaped, a single act, is well suited to represent the Hebrew verb, which, though active in meaning, has the passive form.

8. Our help is in the name of Jehovah, maker of heaven and earth. The conclusion drawn from the experience here recorded is, that he who had helped them must help them still. Our help for the future no less than the past. In the name of Jehovah, the manifested attributes, which constitute his name, in the peculiar dialect of Scripture, and especially of this book. See above, on Ps. v. 12 (11) xx. 2 (1.) With this verse compare also Ps xxxiii. 22. cxxi. 2.

PSALM CXXV.

1. A Song of the Ascents. Those trusting in Jehovah (are) like Mount Zion, (which) is not moved (but) stands forever. This psalm contains an expression of strong confidence in the divine protection, vs. 1, 2, especially against wicked enemies, v. 3, with a prayer that this confidence may not go unrewarded, v. 4, and a prophetic anticipation of the fate of the ungodly, v. 5. The condition of the chosen people, here described or pre-supposed, as suffering from the spite of heathen enemies, not in captivity or exile, but at home in their own land, and internally divided into two great parties, the sincere and hypocritical, agrees exactly with the period of the Restoration, and especially that part of it in which the building of the temple was suspended, as known to us from history and prophecy. The psalm before us was well suited to alarm and warn the false Israel, as well as to encourage and support the true. According to Hengstenberg, it was intended, with the psalms before and after it, to form a trilogy, consisting of one ancient and two later compositions. Those trusting in Jehovah is a characteristic designation of the true church, the spiritual Israel, the chosen people. The meaning is not merely that they individually exercise this faith, but that collectively, or as a body, they are built upon it, and have no security except in the divine protection. Mount Zion, not as a figure for the church, which would then be compared with itself, but simply as a mountain, and like other mountains solid and enduring, here selected as a sample or an emblem of these qualities, because it had also a religious pre-eminence, as the earthly seat and centre of the true religion. It is not (and shall not be) moved, shaken from its firm position. See above on Ps. xlv. 6 (5.) Stands forever, literally, sits to eternity, the Hebrew idiom using one of these postures as we use the other, or rather using both as we use only one, to denote the opposite of vacillation and prostration. See above, on Ps. cxxii. 5.

2. Jerusalem (has) hills about her, and (so) Jehovah (is) about his people, from now even to eternity. The site of Jerusalem, with its peculiar features, furnishes the psalmist with a striking image of the divine protection. As in v. 1, the permanent security of the church itself is likened to the firmness of Mount Zion on its base, so here the protecting care, which causes this security, is likened to the heights by which the city is surrounded upon all sides. The verb has, supplied in the translation of the first clause, is really a violation of the Hebrew idiom, to which as well as to the kindred tongues the verb to have is utterly unknown. In our own idiom, however, it expresses the precise idea, and enables us to retain the Hebrew collocation, which assigns Jerusalem the first place in the sentence. The Hebrew corresponding to about is a compound phrase, consisting of a local adverb and a preposition, around as to. His people, meaning those who trust him (v. 1), to the exclusion of all hypocrites and unbelievers.

3. For not to rest is the rod of wickedness over the lot of the righteous, to the intent that the righteous may not put forth to iniquity their hands. This unusually long verse clearly shows the actual condition of the chosen people, here assumed or presupposed, as well known to the writer and original readers of the psalm. The present ascendancy of wicked men is not inconsistent with the truth just stated, because it is to be brought to an end, lest the faith and patience of God's people should fail, and they should be tempted to renounce his service as unprofitable nay as ruinous. Compare Ps. lxxiii. 13, 14. To rest, not merely to remain, but to continue undisturbed. The rod or staff is here a symbol of authority, and might be rendered sceptre, if the subject of discourse were kings. See above on Ps. ii. 9. xlv. 7 (6.) The lot of the righteous, their share of the inheritance of the chosen people, at first distributed by lot. To the intent indicates the reason why this undeserved superiority is not to last. The reason is founded not merely on the ill desert of the wicked, but on the interest and welfare of the righteous. Put forth, or stretch out, literally send into. See the same construction, Gen. xxxvii. 22. Ex. xxii. 7, 10 (8, 11.) To touch iniquity is here to meddle with it, not, as some suppose, in the shape of revenge merely, but in all its degrees and forms, by which the righteous can be tempted.

4. Do good, Oh Jehovah, to the good, and to (those) upright in their hearts These are additional descriptions of the true church or spiritual Israel, to whom alone the promise of divine favour and protection had been given. Upright, literally straight, straight-forward, as opposed to all moral obliquity whatever. See above, on Ps. vii. 11 (10.) The prayer involves a prophetic declaration, that to such and such only, God will do good or act kindly in the highest sense. See above, on Ps. lxxiii. 1.

5. And, (as to) those turning aside (in) their crooked (ways), Jehovah will let them go with the doers of iniquity. Peace (be) upon Israel! The participle in the first clause is properly a transitive and means causing to turn aside, but has here the sense of going aside, or turning in the intransitive sense, the English verb having precisely the same double usage. This construction of the Hebrew verb, which occurs also in Isai. xxx. 11. Job. xxiii. 11, may be resolved into the usual one, by supposing an ellipsis of their feet or steps. The adjective translated crooked occurs only here and in Judg. v. 6, where the noun (ways or paths) is expressed. It denotes the bye-ways of corrupt inclination and transgression, by which men deviate from the straight and narrow highway of God's commandments. Compare Deut. ix. 16. Mal. ii. 8, 9. The workers of iniquity are not a different class from these wanderers, but that to which they belong, and the doom of which they would gladly escape; but the Lord will let them go on still with those whom they resemble in character, and as they have been like them by the way, they shall be like them in the end. Compare Ps. xxvi. 9. xxviii. 3. Having thus excluded hypocritical pretenders from the object of the benediction, he concludes by wishing or invoking peace upon (the true or spiritual) Israel. Compare Isai. lvii. 19, 21.

P S A L M C X X V I .

1. A Song of the Ascents. In Jehovah's turning (to) the turning of Zion, we were like (men) dreaming. The church acknowledges the good work of deliverance as joyfully begun, vs. 1—3, and prays that it may be completed, vs. 4—6. For the meaning and construction of the first verb see above, on Ps. xiv. 7. lxxxvi. 5 (4), and compare my note on Isai. lii. 8. Instead of the usual combination (שָׁבוּבָה) return to the captivity, we have here one resembling it in form (שָׁבוּבָה) but meaning to return to the return or meet those returning, as it were, half-way. Compare Deut. xxx. 2, 3. James iv. 8. The Hebrew noun denotes conversion, in its spiritual sense, and the verb God's gracious condescension in accepting or responding to it. The great historical example of this condescension, which the Psalmist had immediately in view, was the deliverance from Babylon; but the terms are so selected as to be appropriate to the most intimate personal experience of the same kind. Zion is here put for the church or chosen people, of which it was the local seat or centre. Like the dreamers or those dreaming, i. e. out of our ordinary normal state, and in an ecstasy or trance, arising from excess of joy. The idea of incredulity may be included, but must not be suffered to exclude all others.

2. Then was filled with laughter our mouth, and our tongue with singing; then said they among the nations, Jehovah hath done great things to these (people.) The particle (אָז) then is followed by the future in the sense of the preterite, in prose as well as poetry. See Ex. xv. 1. Deut. iv. 41. Josh. 10, 12. There is no need therefore of supposing that the writer simply retained the future forms of the passage from which this was copied, namely, Job viii. 21. Laughter and singing, both as signs of joy. Done great things, literally magnified to do, an idiomatic phrase borrowed from Joel ii. 21. To these, literally with these, i. e. in his associations and transactions with them.

3. Jehovah has done great things to us. We are joyful. This last is not a mere appendage to the first clause, we are glad that he has done great things for us, but an independent proposition, containing the proof of that by which it is preceded. He has indeed done much for us, for whereas we were lately wretched, we are now rejoicing, or more closely rendered, have become joyful.

4. Turn, oh Jehovah, to our captivity, like the streams in the south. The prayer is that God will return to or revisit his people in their bondage or distress, and by necessary implication set them free from it. See above on v. 1, where we have a studied variation of this favourite expression. According to the usual interpretation (bring back our captivity), this verse is either inconsistent with the first, or a proof that the restoration is not mentioned there as past already. Like the streams in the south, as the temporary torrents in the dry southern district of Palestine reappear in the rainy season, after having ceased to flow in the preceding drought.

5. Those sowing with weeping with singing shall reap. Those sowing, literally the sowing, i. e. the (same persons or the very persons) sowing. With weeping, or in tears; the Hebrew noun is a singular collective. See above, on Ps. vi. 7 (6.) xxxix. 13 (12.) lvi. 9 (8.) Singing, as a vocal expression of joy. See above, on v. 2. The figures are natural and common ones for means and end, or for the beginning and the issue of any undertaking. They may have been suggested here by the mention of the parched and thirsty south, where the fears of the husbandman are often disappointed by abundant rains and the sudden reappearance of the vanished streams.

6. He may go forth, he may go forth, and weep, bearing (his) load of seed. He shall come, he shall come with singing, bearing sheaves. The emphatic combination of the finite tense with the infinitive is altogether foreign from our idiom, and very imperfectly represented, in the ancient and some modern versions, by the active participle (venientes venient, coming they shall come), which conveys neither the peculiar form nor the precise sense of the Hebrew phrase. The best approximation to the force of the original is Luther's repetition of the finite tense, he shall come, he shall come, because in all such cases the infinitive is really defined or determined by the term which follows, and in sense, though not in form, assimilated to it. Load of seed, literally drawing or draught of seed, an obscure phrase probably denoting that from which the sower draws forth seed to sow, or perhaps the seed itself thus drawn forth. The only analogous expression is in Am. ix. 13, where the sower is called (בַּמִּצְרֵי הַחֶרֶב) a drawer (forth) of seed. The common version (precious seed) has no foundation either in etymology or usage. The contrast so beautifully painted in this verse was realized in the experience of Israel, when "the priests and the levites, and the rest of the children of the captivity, kept the dedication of the house of God with joy" (Ezra vi. 16), "and kept the feast of unleavened bread seven days with joy, because the Lord had made them joyful, and turned the heart of the king of Assyria unto them, to strengthen their hands in the work of the house of God, the God of Israel" (Ezra vi. 22.) See also Nehemiah xii. 43.

PSALM CXXVII.

1. A Song of the Ascents. By Solomon. If Jehovah will not build a house, in vain toil its builders in it, If Jehovah will not keep a city, in vain watches (its) keeper. This is the central psalm of the series, having seven before and seven after it. This position it may owe to its being the only psalm of Solomon, whereas four are by David, and the remaining ten probably by one and the same author. See above, on Ps. cxx. 1. The admission of this psalm among the Songs of Pilgrimage was probably occasioned by its opening words, which, though admitting of a general application, were peculiarly appropriate to the building both of the first and second temple. It was perfectly natural, apart from all particular divine direction, that the rebuilders of the temple should rejoice to appropriate the words of Solomon, their great exemplar. The correctness of the title, which ascribes the psalm to him, is not only free from any plausible objection, but abundantly confirmed by its internal character, its allusions to a state of high prosperity, and its resemblance to the Book of Proverbs, where the sentiment here uttered is frequently reiterated. See for example Prov. x. 22. The general principle, that human care and toil are unavailing without God's blessing, is applied successively to several of the most familiar interests of real life. Beyond this the psalm admits of no subdivision. The first specification has respect to human dwellings, both on a small and on a large scale. The futures, will not build, will not keep, may also be explained as presents, builds not, keeps not. The phrase (בֵּית) in it or on it is to be connected with the verb and not with builders. Watches, wakes, remains awake, but always with a view to the exercise of vigilance. See above on Ps. cii. 8, and compare Prov. viii. 34. The last word in Hebrew is properly the participle of the verb translated keep.

2. It is in vain for you, rising up early, sitting down late, eating the bread of cares (or troubles.) So he giveth his beloved sleep The first phrase means, you labour in vain. Rising up, not merely from sleep, but to labour, addressing yourselves to work. Sitting down, to rest when the work is done. The contrast is sufficiently maintained by the common version, sitting up late; but it is objected that the Hebrews did not work in a sitting posture. Both these phrases are peculiar in their form—making early (or hastening) to rise—making late (or delaying) to sit. Bread of cares (or troubles) is bread earned by hard toil and consumed amidst it. There is obvious allusion to Gen. iii. 17, 19. The last clause is exceedingly obscure. Some understand it to mean that while others labour, God's beloved sleeps. But this is contradicted by notorious facts and inconsistent with the doctrine of the Bible, and especially the Book of Proverbs, with respect to idleness and diligence. See Prov. vi. 9, 10. xxxi. 27. Another possible interpretation is that God gives his beloved refreshing sleep after their labour, but this cannot be said of such exclusively. The latest writers understand the clause to mean, that what others hope to gain exclusively by labour, but in vain, the Lord bestows upon his people while they sleep, they know not how. According to this view of the passage, it must be translated, so, i. e. such, namely, what they thus seek, he gives to his beloved one (in) sleep. This, which is not a very obvious construction, derives some additional colour from the seeming allusion to Solomon's name Jedidiah (2 Sam. xii. 25), the Beloved of the Lord, and to the promise of prosperity communicated to him in a dream (1 Kings iii. 5, 15.)

3. Lo, a heritage from Jehovah (are) children ; a reward (is) the fruit of the womb. What is true of dwellings and the means of subsistence is no less true of those for whom these advantages are commonly provided. An inheritance or heritage, i. e. a valuable possession derived from a father. Children, literally sons, a term very often used indefinitely. A reward or hire, the expression used by Leah, in naming her son Issachar, Gen. xxx. 18. In the same chapter (Gen. xxx. 2) children are called the fruit of the womb, and represented as the gift of God. See also Deut. vii 13.

4. As arrows in the hand of a warrior, so are the sons of youth. The first clause describes them as defenders of their parents. A warrior, literally, a strong or (mighty) one. Sons of youth, i. e. born while their parents are still young. See Gen. xxxvii. 3. Isai. liv. 6. The allusion is not only to their vigour (Gen. xlix. 3), but to the value of their aid to the parent in declining age.

5. Happy the man who has filled his quiver with them—they shall not be put to shame—they shall speak with adversaries in the gate. The first clause carries out the figure of arrows in the verse preceding. The mention of the gate, in the last clause, as the place both of commercial and judicial business, seems to mark a transition from martial to forensic conflict, and to show that the enemies or adversaries here meant are adverse parties in litigation. See above, on Ps. lxix. 13 (12.) For a striking contrast to this picture, see Job v. 4. This last example, although perfectly in keeping with the views of the ancient Israelites in general seems peculiarly natural and life-like in a psalm of Solomon

P S A L M C X X V I I I

1. A Song of Ascents. Happy is every fearer of Jehovah, the (one) walking in his ways. This psalm seems intended to assure the tempted and discouraged people of Judah, under the most adverse circumstances, that devotion to his service cannot lose its reward. As if he had said, however things may now seem to an eye of sense, it is still a certain truth, that the truly happy man is he who fears Jehovah, not in mere profession, but who testifies his fear of him by walking in his ways or doing his commandments.

2. The labour of thy hands when thou shalt eat, happy thou and well with thee. The promise implied is the opposite of the threatening in Deut. xxviii. 33. Lev. xxvi. 16. What the enemies of Israel are there described as doing, it is here said that Israel shall do himself. Well with thee, literally, good for thee. The conjunction (וְ) in the first clause is not to be construed as in Ps. cxviii. 10, but as a particle of time. Happy thou, or oh thy happinesses, is an expression borrowed from Deut. xxxiii. 29.

3. Thy wife, as a fruitful vine at the sides of thy house; thy sons, as olive-plants around thy table. The word translated sides always means the edge or border, and, according to some, the innermost part. See above, on Ps. xlvi. 3 (2.) Sons, as usual, represent the children of both sexes. The olive-plants are emblems of luxuriance and fruitfulness. See above, on Ps. lii. 10

(S), and compare Jer. xi. 16̄. The Hebrew for around or about is the same as in Ps. cxxv. 2.

4. See—for so shall be blessed the man fearing Jehovah. The lo or behold at the beginning is equivalent to saying, Look upon this picture, for it represents the state of one who truly fears the Lord. Although such a connection between goodness and prosperity was far more uniform and constant under the Old Testament than now, it is not to be supposed that these promises were actually verified in the experience of every godly Israelite. This has led some of the most eminent interpreters to the conclusion, that the promises of this psalm are not personal at all, but addressed to an ideal person representing the whole class of true believers, the true Israel.

5. Jehovah bless thee out of Zion, and look thou upon the welfare of Jerusalem. The consecution of the future and imperative is the same as in Ps. cx. 2. The latter might therefore be translated as a promise, the Lord shall bless thee, but the optative meaning seems more natural in this connection. In either case, the imperative conveys substantially the same idea. See above, on Ps. xxxvii. 3, 4, 27. From Zion, as his earthly residence, the seat of the theocracy. See above, on Ps. xx. 3 (2.) Look upon, with joy and triumph. See above, on Ps. xxii. 18 (17.) xxxvii. 4. liv. 9 (8.) Welfare, literally goodness, not of character but of condition, good fortune. The Hebrew word occurs above, Ps. cxix. 66.

6. And see thou sons to thy sons. Peace (be) upon Israel! The first clause is a virtual promise of long life—thou shalt see thy children's children. An interesting parallel is furnished by Zech. viii. 4, the whole of which chapter is indeed a prophetic commentary on this psalm. For the meaning of the last clause, see above, on Ps. cxxv. 5.

P S A L M C X X I X .

1. A Song of the Ascents. Many (a time) have they distressed me from my youth—oh let Israel say! On the recollection of deliverances in times past, vs. 1—4, rests the hope of others in time to come, vs. 5—8. The first word after the inscription properly means much or too much. See above, on Ps. cxx. 6. cxxiii. 4. But most interpreters agree in referring it to time, as in the English version, many a time or often. The youth of Israel, as a nation, was the period of his residence in Egypt. See Hos. ii. 17. Jer. ii. 2. xxii. 21. Ezek. xxiii. 3. For the optative meaning of the last clause, and the true sense of the Hebrew particle (נִּי), see above, on Ps. cxviii. 2. cxxiv. 1. Distressed, persecuted or oppressed me. Compare the use of the participle in Ps. vi. 8 (7.) vii. 5 (4.) xxiii. 5.

2. Many (a time) have they distressed me from my youth; yet have they not prevailed against me. The statement in the first verse is repeated, for the sake of being joined with one of a more cheering character. Yet, literally, also. As if he had said: it is true that they have so done, but it is also true, etc. Prevailed against me, literally, been able (as) to me, i. e. able to accomplish their designs respecting me. See Gen. xxxii. 26 (25), and compare Ps. xiii. 5 (4.)

3. Upon my back ploughed ploughers; they made long their furrows. The expression on my back seems to show that the allusion is to wounds produced by stripes. As if he had said, my back was furrowed by their whips or scourges. We have here then an example of the image of an image. The ploughing is a figure for scourging, and the scourging a figure for the manifold sufferings inflicted upon Israel by his cruel enemies.

4. Jehovah (is) righteous ; he cut the cord of the wicked. He is righteous, and therefore faithful to his promise, and to his covenant engagements to his people. The cord (not *corde*s) is that which fastened the ox to the plough. This continuation of the figure in v. 3 is much more natural than the assumption of a new one, that of confinement by the tying of the limbs, as in Ps. ii. 3. According to the first translation above given, the meaning of the clause is, that Jehovah put an end to their inflictions by a violent separation from their victim.

5. Shamed and turned back are (and shall be) all haters of Zion. What Jehovah has already done for Zion, as recorded in v. 4, creates and justifies the confident belief, that he will do still more. This language was peculiarly appropriate to Israel at the Restoration, when the main deliverance had already been accomplished, but others were still needed to complete the happy revolution. With the first clause compare Ps. vi. 11 (10.) xxxv. 4 (3.) xl. 14 (13)

6. They shall be like the grass of the house-tops, which, before one pulls (it), withers. The flat roofs of the oriental houses being often covered with earth, grass and weeds readily spring up, but having no depth of root soon wither. Compare my note on Isai. xxxvii. 27, from which place the figure is here borrowed. The common version (before it groweth up) is founded on Jerome's (statim ut viruerit.) The other is supported by the Septuagint and Vulgate (πρὸ τοῦ ἐκσπιοθῆναι, priusquam evellatur)

and by the usage of the verb (קָצַף) in the sense of drawing (a sword), drawing off (a shoe) etc

7. (With) which the reaper fills not his hand and his bosom, (when) binding sheaves. The ephemeral and worthless vegetation of the house-top is contrasted still further with the useful products of the earth, in order to contrast still more strongly the end of the righteous and the wicked. The last Hebrew word is translated above strictly as a participle of the verb (עָבַר) to bind or gather sheaves, and may agree with (קָצַר) reaper in the first clause. Since the latter, however, is itself a participle used as a noun, most interpreters put the same construction on the other word, and suppose it to denote a different person from the reaper. With which the reaper fills not his hand nor his bosom the sheaf-binder. The word translated bosom is explained by lexicographers to mean the front fold of the oriental robe, in which things are carried. It might also be translated lap. Hengstenberg's version is his arm. Compare my note on Isai. xlix. 22.

8 Nor do the passers by say, The blessing of Jehovah (come) unto you, we bless you in the name of Jehovah. The negative description is still carried out, with unusual distinctness and particularity. This verse affords an interesting glimpse of ancient harvest usages, confirmed by the historical statement in Ruth ii. 4, from the analogy of which place it is altogether probable, although denied by some, that there is here allusion to the alternate or responsive salutations in common use among the people. We may then supply in thought before the last clause, nor receive the customary answer. As the Hebrew preposition before you does not mean on but to or unto, it seems better to supply come than be. With this verse compare Ps. cxviii. 26.

P S A L M C X X X .

1. A Song of Ascents. Out of the depths do I invoke thee, O Jehovah! This is the penitential psalm of the series, in which the guilt of the chosen people is distinctly acknowledged, as the cause of its calamities, but not as an occasion of despair. After an introductory petition to be heard, vs. 1, 2, comes the indirect confession of sin, vs. 3, 4, then an expression of strong confidence, vs. 5, 6, and an exhortation to Israel to indulge the same, vs. 7, 8. The distinction made in this last stanza, between Israel at large and the penitent who utters the previous confession, would seem to show, that the latter is to be conceived of as an individual, and not as representing the whole people. But the best interpreters are of opinion, that the distinction is entirely formal, and that the object of address in the last stanza is identical with the person speaking in the others. See above, on Ps. lxi. 3, 15 (2, 14), and compare Isai. li. 10, in all which places the word translated depths occurs, and in the same sense, as a figure for extreme dejection and distress. The figure itself is also used in Ps. xl. 3 (2.) Ezek. xxvii. 34.

2. Lord, hearken to my voice; let thine ears be attentive to the voice of my supplications. The first word in Hebrew is (אֲדֹנָי) the one strictly meaning Lord, and showing that the prayer is offered to a sovereign God. The common verb (שָׁמַעַתְּ) to hear is here construed with a preposition (אֶל), thus resembling, in its syntax, our verbs hearken, listen. The adjective attentive is peculiar to the later Hebrew, though its verbal root is of frequent occurrence in the psalms. Supplications, prayers for grace or mercy See above, on Ps. xxviii. 6. xxxi. 23 (22.)

3 If iniquities thou mark, oh Jah—oh Lord, who shall stand? This interrogation clearly implies consciousness of guilt, and is therefore an indirect confession of it. To mark is to note, take notice of, observe. The Hebrew verb is used in precisely the same manner, Job x. 14. xiv. 16. To stand is to stand one's ground, maintain one's innocence, and perhaps in this case, to endure one's sentence. See above, on Ps. i. 6, and compare Nah. i. 6. Mal. iii. 2. The question is equivalent to a strong negation, or an affirmation that none can stand.

4. For with thee (there is) forgiveness, to the intent that thou mayest be feared. The for has reference to a thought suppressed but easily supplied. Since none can stand, oh Lord, forgive, for with thee, etc. Or, since none can stand, our only hope is in free forgiveness, for with thee etc. With thee, belonging to thee, exercised by thee. The word rendered forgiveness is peculiar to the later Hebrew; its plural form occurs in Neh. ix. 17. The forgiveness that we need, the (only) forgiveness that is available or attainable. To the intent, for this very purpose, not merely so that, as an incidental consequence. Fear or godly reverence is here represented as one fruit and evidence of pardoned sin.

5. I wait for Jehovah—my soul waits—and in his word do I hope. The last verb also means to wait for his word, i. e. the fulfilment of his promise, as in Ps. cxix. 74, 81, 82, 114, 147. My soul waits, I wait with all my soul or heart. My powers and affections are absorbed in this earnest expectation:

6 My soul (waits) for the Lord more than (those) watching for the morning—watching for the morning. There is something beautiful and touching in this simple repetition, though it is not easy to account for its effect, which is sensibly impaired by the attempt made in the English version to relieve the baldness of the iteration, I say more than they that watch for the morning. The comparison suggested is between the impatience of nocturnal watchers for the break of day and that of sufferers for relief, or of convicted sinners for forgiveness.

7. Hope thou, Israel, in Jehovah ; for with Jehovah (is) mercy and abundantly with him redemption. The third person used in the English Bible (let Israel hope in the Lord) is an inaccuracy the more remarkable because not found in the Prayer Book Version (Oh Israel, trust in the Lord.) In Jehovah, literally to him, i. e. look to him with confident expectation, as in Isai. li. 5. The construction in the last clause is idiomatic and not susceptible of close translation. The word corresponding to abundantly is the infinitive of a verb meaning to increase or multiply, but is often used adverbially in the sense of much, greatly, or abundantly. See above, on Ps. li. 4 (2.) Redemption, deliverance, especially from bondage, that of Babylon in Ps. cxi. 9, that of sin or condemnation in the case before us.

8. And He will redeem Israel from all his iniquities. The pronoun is emphatic ; only trust him for redemption, and he will himself redeem thee. As the first clause shows by whom Israel is to be redeemed, to wit, by God alone, so the second shows from what, to wit, from sin, as the cause of his sufferings. This is a very significant variation of the older passage, Ps. xxv. 22, where the sufferings alone are expressly mentioned.

P S A L M C X X X I .

1. A Song of Ascents. By David. Oh Jehovah, not haughty is my heart, and not lofty are my eyes, and I meddle not with great (things) and (with things) too wonderful for me. This short psalm is perfectly in David's manner, as well as his spirit, displaying in a high degree that childlike royalty, in which he is resembled by no other even of the sacred writers. Haughty, literally high, but with particular reference to hauteur or loftiness of spirit. Lofty eyes are mentioned elsewhere by David himself as a sign of pride. See Ps. xviii. 28 (27.) ci. 5. The elation here described is elsewhere represented as the natural fruit of undisturbed prosperity. See Deut. xxxii. 15. 2 Chron. xxvi. 16. xxxii. 25. This confirms the Davidic origin of the psalm, and shows that it was only adapted by the later writer to his own purpose, when the original conception would have been almost impossible. Meddle, literally, walk or walk about, i. e. employ or (as the English versions have it) exercise myself. Too wonderful for me, wonderfully done (more) than I (can comprehend.) The great and wonderful things meant are God's secret purposes and sovereign means for their accomplishment, in which man is not called to co-operate but to acquiesce. As David practised this forbearance by his patient expectation of the kingdom, both before and after the death of Saul, so he here describes it as a characteristic of the chosen people.

2. (God knows) if I have not soothed and quieted my soul, as a weaned (child leans) upon his mother; as a weaned (child leans) on me my soul. The first clause contains a strong asseveration, in the idiomatic form of an ancient oath, very feebly represented by our adverb surely. See above, on Ps. lxxxix. 36 (35.) The word translated soothed means rather smoothed, levelled, as in Isai. xxviii. 25. Quieted, stilled, hushed, reduced to silence. The repeated use of the preposition on in this connection is so marked and striking, that it seems to make it necessary to supply a verb with which it may be construed. This is certainly better than to give it a different meaning in the two clauses, or in both one which does not belong to it. In the version above given, the comparison suggested is between a weaned child, quietly reposing on its mother's breast, without desiring to be suckled as of old, and the soul of the Psalmist, by a bold conception represented as his child, and acting in like manner. Hengstenberg denies that there is any reference to the mother's milk, or that weaned has any other meaning here than that of infant or young child, as in Isai. xi. 8. xxviii. 9. The comparison is then coincident with that in Matth. xviii. 3, 4. But the use of the word weaned, which was here required by no parallelism as in Isaiah, and the singular aptness of the figure suggested by the word when strictly understood, have led most interpreters, and will probably lead most readers, to prefer the obvious and strict interpretation.

3. Hope thou, Israel, in Jehovah, from now even to eternity. This is the opposite of the feeling disavowed in the preceding verses. From the first clause that of Ps. cxxx. 7 was no doubt borrowed by the later writer, who prefixed that psalm to the one before us. With the last clause compare Ps. cxxi. 8.

P S A L M C X X X I I .

1 A Song of Ascents Remember, oh Jehovah, for David, all his affliction. This psalm contains a commemoration of David's zeal for the house of God, vs. 1—9, and a prayer that it may be rewarded by the fulfilment of the promise to him and to his house, vs. 10—18. The common version (remember David and all his afflictions) omits a preposition and inserts a conjunction, both without necessity. The same verb and preposition (זָכַר לְ) are combined elsewhere, in the sense of remembering something in a person's favour, to his advantage, for his benefit. See above, on Ps. xviii. 3. cvi. 45. cxix. 49. So here: remember, in behalf of David, how he was distressed. The common version of this last phrase (all his afflictions) supposes the Hebrew word (עָנִיָּה) to be a plural noun, whereas it is the infinitive of the passive verb (עָנָה) to be afflicted or distressed (Ps. cxix. 71), and is therefore more correctly rendered in the Prayer Book (all his trouble.) The precise sense is, his being afflicted. The distress referred to is the great anxiety which David felt, first to reunite the ark and tabernacle, and then to build a more permanent sanctuary. This zeal for the house of God is one of the most characteristic features in the history of David, and for this he was rewarded, not only with a promise that his son should execute his favourite design, but also with a promise that God would build a house for him, by granting a perpetual succession in his family upon the throne of Judah: This promise seemed to be forgotten at the time of the Captivity, and even after the first Restoration, when the house of David was reduced so low, that its hereditary representative, Zerubbabel, never even bore the royal title. The form of the petition in this verse is copied from that of Solomon, at the dedication of the temple, as recorded in 2 Chron. vi. 42.

2. Who swore to Jehovah, vowed to the Mighty One of Jacob. This last expression is borrowed, both here and in Isai. i. 24, from Jacob himself. See Gen. xlix. 24.

3. If I go into the tent (which is) my house, if I go up on the bed (which is) my couch. The elliptical form of swearing here used is equivalent to saying, I will not go. See above, on Ps. cxxxi. 2. The tent my house, the couch my bed, are mere poetical expressions for the house where I dwell, the couch where I lie. Instead of being in apposition, however, they may be in regimen, the tent of my house, the couch of my bed, i. e. the dwelling place of my house, the resting place of my bed.

4. If I give sleep to my eyes, to my eyelids slumber. This is a part of the sentence begun in v. 3 and completed in v. 5. The promise is, of course, not to be absolutely understood, but as meaning, that he would not sleep at ease, or abandon himself to undisturbed repose, till the condition was complied with.

5. Until I find a place for Jehovah, dwellings for the Mighty One of Jacob. The implication in the first clause, that Jehovah was without a place on earth, may remind us of Christ's memorable saying, Matt. viii. 20. Luke ix. 58. The word translated dwellings is peculiarly expressive, because, although strictly a generic term, it is specially applied in usage to the sanctuary with its enclosures and appendages. See above, on Ps. lxxxiv. 2 (1.)

6. Lo, we heard it in Ephrathah; we found it in the fields of the wood. These are most probably the words of David and his contemporaries with respect to the recovery of the ark. We heard it, or heard of it, i. e. of the ark, implying that they did not see it, that it was out of public view. In Ephrathah has been variously explained. Some suppose it to mean Ephraim, as Ephrathi means an Ephraimite, and apply the words to Shiloh, where the ark was long deposited. But Ephrathah itself is never so used elsewhere, and the ark, while at Shiloh, was as much in public view as at Jerusalem. Others, because Bethlehem Ephrathah and Bethlehem Judah are convertible expressions (1 Sam. xvii. 12. Mic. v. 1), make Ephrathah another name for Judah, which it never is, however, when it stands by itself. The only explanation, equally agreeable to usage and the context, is that which makes Ephrathah the ancient name of Bethlehem (Gen. xlviii. 7), here mentioned as the place where David spent his youth, and where he used to hear of the ark, although he never saw it till long afterwards, when he found it in the fields of the wood, or in the neighbourhood of Kirjath-jearim, which name means Forest-town or City of the Woods. Compare 1 Sam. vii. 1 with 2 Sam. vi. 3, 4.

7. Let us come to his dwellings ; let us bow down to his footstool. Another step is here taken in reviewing the history of the sanctuary and of David's zeal for it. These are such words as might have been spoken at the public and solemn introduction of the ark into Jerusalem. As if it had been said : the ark of God has long been lost or out of sight, but now that a dwelling is provided for it on Mount Zion, let us come etc. Without any material change of sense, the future form may be retained, and the paragogic augment understood to express a strong determination. Now that the ark is established on Mount Zion, we will come etc. With respect to the representation of the ark as the footstool of Jehovah, and the act of bowing down to it, see above, on Ps. cxi. 5.

8. Arise, Jehovah, to thy resting-place, thou and the ark of thy strength. Here again the form of expression is borrowed from the words of Solomon at the dedication of the temple, as recorded in 2 Chr. vi. 41. This shows that the Psalmist regarded Solomon as merely carrying out his father's plan, or acting as the executor of his will, which is in fact the mutual relation of these personages as they appear in sacred history. A more remote allusion may be traced to Num. x. 35. See above, on Ps. lxxviii. 2 (1.) The word translated resting-place has here its proper meaning as a local noun. The last clause shows the true import of the ark in the Mosaic system, as a pledge and token of Jehovah's presence, so that its solemn entrance into Zion was the entrance of the Lord himself, and to bow down to it was to worship him. The ark of thy strength is by some, in accordance with a common Hebrew idiom, resolved into thy ark of strength, and that into thy strong (or mighty) ark. It is simpler, however, and in this case yields a better meaning, to retain the original expression in its obvious sense, the ark which assures us of the presence and exertion of thy power for our protection.

9. Let thy priests be clothed with righteousness, and let thy saints shout (or sing.) This is the conclusion of the sentence quoted from 2 Chr. vi. 41. Instead of righteousness we there read salvation, which has led some to explain the two words as synonymous, while others understand by righteousness the practical justification which salvation carries with it. Another possible construction is to take the righteousness as that of God, which is displayed in the salvation of his people, and in which his priests, who officially declared it, might be said to clothe themselves. See the same figure in Job xxix. 14. Saints, gracious ones, or true believers. The parallel passage has, rejoice in good or goodness.

10. For the sake of David thy servant, turn not away the face of thine Anointed. The most obvious construction of this verse is that which makes it intercede, on the ground of the divine partiality to David, for another person, supposed by some to be one or more of his successors in the kingly office, by others Israel at large. A comparison, however, of the place from which the words are borrowed (2 Chron. vi. 42) and of v. 17 below, makes it highly probable that both clauses relate to David himself. This may be rendered clearer and more natural by making the first clause an elliptical petition, entirely distinct from the second. For the sake of David thy servant (grant these requests which are really his); turn not away (his face which is) the face of thine Anointed. The frequency with which God is urged to hear and answer prayer for David's sake (1 Kings xi. 12, 13. xv. 4. 2 Kings viii. 19, etc.) is not to be explained by making David mean the promise to David, nor from the personal favour of which he was the object, but from his historical position, as the great theocratical model, in whom it pleased God that the old economy should reach its culminating point, and who is always held up as the type and representative of the Messiah, so that all the intervening kings are mere connecting links, and their reigns mere repetitions and continuations of the reign of David, with more or less resemblance as they happened to be good or bad. Hence the frequency with which his name appears in the later Scriptures, compared with even the best of his successors, and the otherwise inexplicable transfer of that name to the Messiah himself. It is in this unique character and office, as the Servant of the Lord, that David is here mentioned, first by his own name, and then as the Anointed King of Israel, whose face Jehovah is entreated not to turn away, a figure for refusing him an audience, or at least denying his petition, which we know to have been used in David's times. See the Hebrew of 1 Kings ii. 16, 17, 20.

11. Sworn hath Jehovah to David (in) truth, he will not turn back from it: Of the fruit of thy body I will place on the throne for thee. See above, on Ps. lxxxix. 4, 36 (3, 35), and compare 2 Sam. vii. 28. Turn back, recede from his engagement, or fail to perform it. Of the fruit, from among thy posterity or offspring. On the throne, literally to or for it. See above, on Ps. ix. 5 (4.) For thee, in thy place, as thy representatives, or (belonging) to thee, i. e. thy throne.

12 If thy sons will observe my covenant and my testimonies which I teach them, (then) likewise their sons unto perpetuity shall sit upon the throne for thee. This is the condition of the promise, the breach of which accounts for the apparent violation of the promise itself. Such a suspension of the promise was not only just in itself, but foreseen and provided for (2 Sam. vii. 14, 15), as something perfectly consistent with the perpetuity of the engagement. I teach you refers not only to external legislation, but to spiritual guidance and illumination.

13. For Jehovah has chosen Zion, has desired (it) for a dwelling for him. Besides the oath and promise made directly to David, the petition of the psalm is here enforced by the divine choice of Zion, which was inseparably connected with the exaltation of the family of David. See the same thing asserted or implied, Ps. xliii. 2 (1.) lxxv. 2 (1.) cxxv. 2. As in vs. 11, 12, the last words in Hebrew (יְהוָה) may be also rendered to him, belonging to him, his dwelling.

14. This is my resting-place to perpetuity; here will I dwell, because I have desired it. These are the words of God, though not expressly so described. See above, on Ps. lxxxvii. 4. lxxxix. 4, 5 (3, 4.) The word translated dwell means originally to sit, and especially to sit enthroned, so that this idea would be necessarily suggested with the other to a Hebrew reader. See above, on Ps. xxix. 10. lv. 20 (19.) cii 13 (12.) cxxiii. 1.

15. Her provision I will bless, I will bless; her poor I will satisfy (with) bread. The repetition of the verb may express either certainty or fulness. I will surely bless, or I will bless abundantly. See above, on Ps. cxxvi. 6. The word translated provision is a cognate form to that in Ps. lxxviii. 25. Satisfy, amply or abundantly supply.

16. And her priests I will clothe with salvation; and her saints shall shout, shall shout (for joy.) This is the promise corresponding to the prayer in v. 9. The word salvation, for which righteousness was substituted there, is here restored from the original passage, 2 Chron. vi. 41. The last verb in Hebrew means to express joy by shouting or singing. As to the emphatic repetition, see above, on v. 15.

17. There will I make to bud a horn for David; I have trimmed a lamp for mine Anointed. These are common figures in the Scripture for strength and prosperity. See above, on Ps. xviii (10), 29 (28.) lxxxix. 18 (17.) xcii. 11, and compare 1 Sam. ii. 1 2 Sam. xxi. 17. Ezek. xxix. 21. The last clause contains an allusion to the Law, which cannot be preserved in any version. The word translated lamp is used to designate the several burners of the golden candlestick (Ex. xxv. 37. xxxv. 14. xxxvii. 23 xxxix. 37), and the verb here joined with it is the one applied to the ordering or tending of the sacred lights by the priests (Ex. xxvii. 21. Lev. xxiv. 3.) The meaning of the whole verse is, that the promises of old made to David and to Zion should be yet fulfilled, however dark and inauspicious present appearances

18. His enemies I will clothe with shame, and on him shall bloom his crown. The pronouns refer to David, as the Lord's Anointed, mentioned in v. 17. The figure in the first clause is the converse or counterpart of that in vs. 9, 16, and the same with that in Ps. xxxv. 26. cix. 29. With the last clause compare Ps. lxxxix. 40 (39.) The verb to bloom or blossom agrees well with the idea of a wreath or chaplet. Compare the ἀμαράντινον τίεφανον of 1 Pet. v 4. Some prefer, however, to retain what they regard as the original meaning of the Hebrew verb; on him shall his crown shine (or glitter) See above, on Ps. lxxii. 16.

PSALM CXXXIII.

1. A Song of Ascents. By David. Behold, how good and how pleasant (is) the dwelling of brethren also together. This psalm is an effusion of holy joy occasioned by the sight of the gathering of Israel as one great household at the yearly feasts. It is distinguished from the later compositions of this series by the absence of complaint or lamentation, while its freshness and vivacity and antique phraseology confirm the title which ascribes it to David. The idiomatic use of (אֲשֶׁר) also in the last clause is not easily transferred to any other language. The meaning may be, that although the children of Israel were brethren even when divided and dispersed, it was only in these great convocations that besides being thus related to each other, they also actually dwelt together. There might likewise be allusion, in the first instance, to the previous jealousies and alienations in the family of Israel, which seemed to be exchanged for mutual concord and affection, on David's accession to the throne of the whole nation.

2. Like the oil, the good (oil), on the head, running down upon the beard, the beard of Aaron, which runs down to the edge of his robes. The joyous character of this great family meeting suggests the "oil of joy" (Isai. lxi. 3), the standing symbol of festivity, to which a more specific and religious character is then imparted by a beautiful transition to the good oil (i. e. sweet and costly), with which Aaron was anointed (Ex. xxix. 7. xxx. 22. xl. 13), as a sign of consecration and of spiritual influences. See above, or Ps. ii. 2. As we read of the anointing of no subsequent High Priest, except prospectively (Lev. xxi. 10. Num. xxxv. 25), the reference here may be confined to Aaron himself. This is alleged to have differed from the unction of the other priests, by adding to the simple application of the oil to certain parts of the body, a copious affusion on the head, extending to the beard and even to the sacerdotal vestments. Some interpreters apply the last clause to the beard itself as reaching down to the mouth (𐤒𐤓) or opening at the neck of the official tunic. But the repetition of the verb (𐤒𐤓), and the strong improbability that so much stress would have been laid upon the length of the beard, to which nothing is compared and which illustrates nothing, seem decisive in favour of the other explanation.

3. Like the dew of Hermon, which comes down upon the mountains of Zion; for there has Jehovah commanded the blessing, even life for evermore. The comparison with oil is now exchanged for one with dew, suggesting the idea of a refreshing, fertilizing influence. As the general comparison with oil is rendered more specific by the mention of the kind most highly valued, because made under the divine direction and applied to a most sacred use, so the general term dew is specified in like manner as the dew of Hermon, the dew falling on the lofty heights of Antilibanus. See above, on Ps. lxxxix. 13 (12.) How this dew could be said to fall upon the mountains of Zion, is a question which has much divided and perplexed interpreters. Some have assumed a peculiar theory or system of physics on the writer's part. Others suppose dew of Hermon to be merely descriptive of the quality, irrespective of the actual place of the deposit. Simpler and more natural than either of these, although not without difficulties of its own, is the interpretation which restricts the comparison itself to the first few words, and includes all that follows in the application Like the dew of Hermon (is the influence) which descends upon the hills of Zion, for there, etc. the last clause then explaining what this influence was. Whether this be the true solution of the question as to form or not, it is no doubt the essential meaning of the passage, upon any exegetical hypothesis whatever. The dew of Hermon was mere moisture, but the dew of Zion was the promise of eternal life, there made and verified. Even life for evermore, literally, life even to eternity

PSALM CXXXIV.

1. A Song of Ascents. Behold! bless Jehovah, all ye servants of Jehovah, those standing in the house of Jehovah by night. The whole series of pilgrimage songs closes, in the most appropriate manner, with a summons to bless the Lord, addressed by the people on arriving at the sanctuary to the priests there in attendance, vs. 1, 2, and indirectly answered by a priestly blessing on the worshippers themselves, v. 3. The lo or behold at the beginning is equivalent to saying, See, we are here, or we are come. To bless God, as in all other cases, is to praise him in a reverential and adoring manner. The servants of the Lord here meant are not his people indiscriminately, but his official servants, and most probably the priests, as will appear from v. 3 below. The (ones) standing, the appropriate posture of attendants, even in the courts of earthly monarchs. By night, literally, in the nights, which does not however necessarily mean all night (1 Chron. ix. 33), as appears from Ps. xcii. 3, where it stands opposed to in the morning, and may therefore denote simply in the evening, v. 11:

specific reference, as some suppose, to the evening sacrifice, with which the daily service of the priests concluded. We may then assume, although we cannot prove, that the pilgrims were accustomed to reach the sanctuary at that hour, singing this last "song of ascents."

2. Raise your hands to the holy place, and bless Jehovah! The gesture mentioned in the first clause symbolized the raising of the heart to God. See above, on Ps. xxviii. 2. lxiii. 5 (4.) The word for holy place or sanctuary is the same in form with that so frequently translated as an abstract, holiness. For its local meaning, see above, on Ps. xx. 3 (2.) It here denotes the temple or its site, as distinguished from the courts around it. As to the act of praying to or towards it, see above, on Ps. v. 8 (7.) xcix. 5.

3. Jehovah bless thee out of Zion, Maker of heaven and earth. As the priests were called upon to bless God in behalf of the people, so here they bless the people in behalf of God. Between the verses we may suppose the previous request to be complied with. The priests, having blessed God, turn and bless the people. The obvious allusion to the sacerdotal blessing, Num. vi. 23—27, favours the optative construction of this verse, which really includes a prediction (the Lord will bless thee.) Out of Zion, as in Ps. cxxviii. 5. Maker of heaven and earth, and therefore infinitely able to fulfil this prayer. See above, on Ps. cxv. 15 cxvi. 2. cxxiv. 8.

PSALM CXXXV.

THE people of Jehovah are exhorted to praise him as their peculiar God, vs. 1—4, as the God of nature, vs. 5—7, as the deliverer of Israel from Egypt and in Canaan, vs. 8—12, as their hope also for the future, vs. 13—14, rendered more glorious by contrast with the impotence of idols, vs. 15—18, after which the psalm concludes as it began with an exhortation to praise God, vs. 19—21. According to Hengstenberg's arrangement and distribution, this is the first of a series of twelve psalms (135—146), sung at the completion of the second temple, and consisting of eight Davidic psalms (138—145), preceded by three (135—137) and followed by one (146) of later date. In this way he accounts for the omission of these ancient psalms in the former part of the collection, because they were no longer looked upon as independent compositions, but as inseparable parts of the series or systems into which they had been introduced.

1. Hallelujah! Praise the name of Jehovah. Praise (it), ye servants of Jehovah! The close of the Psalm shows that although the priests are included (v. 19) among the servants of Jehovah, they are not exclusively intended, as in Ps. cxxxiv. 1. Even there, however, the priests are representatives of Israel at large.

2. Who (are) standing in the house of Jehovah, in the courts of the house of our God. The participle indicates continued action. The mention of the courts confirms what has been already said, as to the objects of address in v. 1.

3. Hallelujah (praise ye Jah!) for good (is) Jehovah. Make music to his name, for it is lovely. The last words may also be translated, he is lovely, i. e. an object worthy of supreme attachment.

4. For Jacob did Jah choose for himself, Israel for his own possession. They are particularly bound to praise him, as his chosen and peculiar people. The last word in Hebrew means a possession of peculiar value, set apart and distinguished from all others. See Ex. xix. 5. Deut. vii. 6. xiv. 2. xxvi. 18.

5. For I know that great is Jehovah, and our Lord (more) than all Gods. However ignorant the world may be of his superiority, I, the representative of Israel and as such speaking in his name, know and am assured of the truth from my own observation and experience.

6. All that Jehovah will he does in the heavens and in the earth, in the seas and all depths. Compare Ps. cxv. 3. Ecc. viii. 3. Jon. i. 14. Isa. xlvi. 10, 11. It is not merely as their own peculiar God that they are bound to praise him, but as the universal sovereign. Heaven, earth, and sea, are put for the whole frame of nature, as in Ex. xx. 4.

7. Causing vapours to ascend from the end of the earth—lightnings for the rain he makes—bringing out the wind from his treasures. As certain portions of the world are specified in v. 6 to define the extent of his dominion, so here certain natural phenomena are mentioned as the product of his power. Compare Jer. x. 13. ii. 16. From the end of the earth, i. e. from all parts of it, not excepting the most remote. See above, on Ps. lxi. 3 (2). The second clause is by some explained to mean, turning lightnings into rain, i. e. causing the thunder-cloud to dissolve in rain. But this is not so natural as the common version, he maketh lightnings for the rain, i. e. to accompany it, or according to the paraphrase in the Prayer Book, sendeth forth lightnings with the rain. With the last clause compare Job xxxviii. 22.

8. Who smote the first-born of Egypt, from man even to beast. From the proofs of God's supremacy in nature, he now proceeds to those in history, and especially the history of his dealings with his people and their enemies. This is precisely the relation between Ps. civ and cv. The first example chosen here is the last and greatest of the plagues of Egypt. From man to beast, including both ; in other words, both man and beast.

9. Sent signs and wonders into the midst of thee, oh Egypt, upon Pharaoh and on all his servants. Signs and wonders, i. e. miracles, to wit, those which preceded and accompanied the exodus. See above, on Ps. lxxviii. 43. In the midst of thee, oh Egypt, an expression similar to that in Ps. cxvi. 19, in the midst of thee, oh Jerusalem! Upon Pharaoh, literally, in Pharaoh and in all his servants.

10. Who smote many nations and slew mighty kings. To the miracles of Egypt and the Exode are now added those of Canaan and the Conquest.

11. Sihon king of the Amorites, and Og king of Bashan, and all the kingdoms of Canaan. Each of these three particulars is preceded in Hebrew by the preposition (לְ) to or for; and that this is not an inadvertence or an accident, appears from its repetition in the next psalm (cxxxvi. 19, 20.) Though not in accordance with the usage of the verb (הָרַג) which is construed elsewhere with the verb directly, the particle must be regarded here as an objective sign, as in Ps. cxxix. 3, unless we suppose the sense to be, that what had just been said in general is true in particular as to Sihon, as to Og, and as to the kingdoms (here put for the kings) of Canaan.

12. And gave their land (as) a heritage, a heritage to Israel his people. The land of Canaan was an inheritance to Israel, not as the heirs of the Canaanites, but because it was to be transmitted from father to son, by hereditary right and succession. See above, on Ps. cv. 44. cxi. 6.

13. Jehovah, thy name (is) to eternity. Jehovah, thy memory is to generation and generation. Name and memory are here equivalent expressions, meaning that by which God is remembered or commemorated, namely, his perfections as exhibited in act. The perpetuity of this implies continued or repeated acts of goodness.

14. For Jehovah will judge his people, and for the sake of his servants will repent. He will fulfil the promise in Deut. xxxii. 36. He will judge (i. e. do justice to) his people. See above, on Ps. lxxii. 2. For the sense in which repentance is ascribed to God, see above, on Ps. xc. 13.

15. The idols of the nations (are) silver and gold, works of the hands of man. The divine perfection of the Lord is now exhibited in contrast with the impotence and nullity of idols. The terms of the comparison are borrowed, with several variations, from Ps. cxv. 4—8.

16. (There is) a mouth to them, and (yet) they speak not; (there are) eyes to them, and (yet) they see not. See above, on Ps. cxv. 5, which agrees exactly with the verse before us.

17. (There are) ears to them, and (yet) they hear not; likewise there is no breath in their mouth. See above, on Ps. cxv. 6. This verse contains the most considerable variation of the passages. The second clause in both begins with the same Hebrew word (נָס); but in the one case it is a noun, meaning the nose, in the other an adverb, meaning likewise. This kind of variation.

in which the form is retained but with a change of meaning, is perfectly agreeable to Hebrew usage

18. Like them shall be those making them, every one who (is) trusting in them. See above, on Ps. cxv. 8, with which this verse agrees exactly. If the meaning had been simply, those who make them are like them, Hebrew usage would have required the verb to be suppressed. Its insertion, therefore, in the future form (יִהְיֶה) requires it to be rendered strictly shall be, i. e. in fate as well as character. Idolaters shall perish with their perishable idols. Compare Isai. i. 31.

19. Oh house of Israel, bless Jehovah! Oh house of Aaron, bless Jehovah! Having shown what God is, in himself and in comparison with idols, he repeats the exhortation which this description was intended to explain and justify. With this and the next verse compare Ps. cxv. 9—11. cxviii. 2—4. Instead of trust we have here bless, as at the beginning of the Psalm. Compare Ps. cxxxiv. 1.

20. Oh house of Levi, bless Jehovah! Fearers of Jehovah, bless Jehovah! The Levites are not particularly mentioned in the parallel passages.

21. Blessed (be) Jehovah from Zion—inhabiting Jerusalem—Hallelujah! There is here an allusion to Ps. cxxxiv. 3. As Jehovah blesses out of Zion, so also he is blessed out of Zion, by the diffusion of his praise, as from a radiating centre. This is said to be the only place in which Jerusalem is put for Zion, as the earthly residence of God. But see above, on Ps. lxxvi. 3 (2), and compare Ps. cxxv. 1, 2.

P S A L M C X X X V I .

IN theme and structure, this psalm resembles that before it, a resemblance rendered still more striking by particular coincidences of expression. In this case also, the people are invited to praise Jehovah, vs. 1—3, as the God of nature, vs. 4—9, as the deliverer of Israel from Egypt, vs. 10—15, his guide in the wilderness, v. 16, the conqueror of his enemies, vs. 17—24, the provider of all creatures, v. 25, and the God of heaven, to whom, in conclusion, praise is again declared to be due, v. 26. The grand peculiarity of form in this psalm, by which it is distinguished from all others, is the regular recurrence, at the close of every verse, of a burden or refrain, like the responses in the Litany, but carried through with still more perfect uniformity. The text or theme, which thus forms the second clause of every verse, is one which has repeatedly occurred already, in Ps. cvi. 1. cvii. 1. cxviii. 1—4, 29. Compare 1 Chron. xvii. 34. It has been a favourite idea with interpreters that such repetitions necessarily imply alternate or responsive choirs. But the other indications of this usage in the Psalter are extremely doubtful, and every exegetical condition may be satisfied by simply supposing that the singers, in some cases, answered their own questions, and that in others, as in that before us, the people united in the burden or chorus, as they were wont to do in the Amen. See above, on Ps. cvi. 48.

1. Give thanks unto Jehovah—for unto eternity (is) his mercy
This introductory sentence is identical with those already cited from Ps. cvi, cvii, cxviii.

2. Give thanks unto the God of Gods—for unto eternity (is) his mercy. The divine title or description, both in this verse and the next, is borrowed from Deut. x. 17. Gods does not here mean false gods, but is a superlative plural qualifying that before it. See above, on Ps. lxxvii. 14 (13.) cxxxv. 5.

3. Give thanks unto the Lord of Lords—for unto eternity (is) his mercy. The Lord of Lords, i. e. the supreme Lord, the Lord by way of excellence, as in the English phrase heart of hearts for inmost heart.

4. To (him) doing wondrous (things), great (things), alone—for unto eternity (is) his mercy. Compare the expression doing wonders, Ex. xv. 11. Alone, not merely more than others, but to their exclusion. The for, in this and the following verses, has reference, not to what immediately precedes, but to the verb give thanks, to be supplied at the beginning of the sentence.

5. To him that made the heavens in wisdom—for unto eternity (is) his mercy. That made, literally making, perhaps in reference to the continued exercise of God's creative power. In wisdom, or with understanding. See above, on Ps. civ. 24, and compare Prov. iii. 19.

6. To him that spread the earth above the waters—for unto eternity (is) his mercy. That spread, literally spreading, as in v. 5. Above (not upon, but higher than) the waters. See above, on Ps. xxiv. 2.

7. To him that made great lights—for unto eternity (is) his mercy. The plural lights (אֲוֹרֹת) occurs only here, but is cognate and synonymous with the one used in Gen. i. 14, 16

8. The sun to rule by day—for unto eternity (is) his mercu

The musical design of the composition is especially observable where the burden or chorus is interposed between inseparable parts of the same sentence, as in this one, the substance of which is borrowed from Gen. i. 16, but with some change both in the words and the construction.

9. The moon and stars to rule by night—for unto eternity (is) his mercy. To rule, literally, for rules or dominions, perhaps because the stars are here made sharers with the moon in the dominion of the night.

10. To him that smote Egypt in their first born—for unto eternity (is) his mercy. We have here the transition from nature to history, as in Ps. cxxxv. 8. Him that smote (or the smiter of) Egypt, i. e. the Egyptians. Hence the plural pronoun, their first born.

11. And brought out Israel from the midst of them—for unto eternity (is) his mercy. Here for the first time we have a finite tense (the future conversive), interrupting the long series of participles, all agreeing with Jehovah understood.

12. With a high hand and with an arm outstretched—for unto eternity is his mercy. These are favourite Mosaic figures for the active and energetic exercise of power. See Ex. iii. 19. vi. 1, 6 xiii. 9. xv. 12. Deut. iv. 34. v. 15. vii. 19. xi. 2. xxvi. 8.

13. To him that parted the Red Sea into parts—for unto eternity (is) his mercy. Parted and parts have the same relation to each other as the Hebrew verb and noun.

14. And made Israel to pass through the midst of it—for unto eternity (is) his mercy. Here again we have a finite tense, not the conversive future, as in v. 11, but the preterite. Througn

the midst of it, between the parts into which it was divided. Some suppose an allusion to the covenant transaction in Gen. xv. 17, where the word translated parts is the one used in v. 13 above.

15. And cast Pharaoh and his host into the Red Sea—for unto eternity (is) his mercy. The first verb strictly means knocked off or shook off, and is borrowed from Ex. xiv. 27. A passive form of it occurs above, Ps. cix. 23.

16. To him that led his people in the wilderness—for unto eternity (is) his mercy. Led, literally, caused to go. See above, Ps. cxxv. 5. The participial construction is again resumed.

17. To him that smote great kings—for unto eternity (is) his mercy. Compare the parallel passage, Ps. cxxxv. 10, which is here divided by the theme or chorus. See above, on v. 8.

18. And slew mighty kings—for unto eternity (is) his mercy. The first clause answers to the latter half of Ps. cxxxv. 10, with the substitution of another Hebrew word for mighty.

19. Sihon king of the Amorite—for unto eternity (is) his mercy. Literally, to, for, or as to Sihon, etc. See above, on Ps. cxxxv. 11.

20. And Og king of Bashan—for unto eternity (is) his mercy. To, for, or as to, Og king of Bashan.

21. And gave their land as a heritage—for unto eternity (is) his mercy. As a heritage, literally, for it. See above, on Ps. cxxxv. 12.

22. A heritage to Israel his servant—for unto eternity (is) his mercy. This is the latter half of Ps. cxxxv. 12, divided from the first half by the theme or chorus.

23. Who in our low estate remembered us—for unto eternity (is) his mercy. In our low estate, in our humiliation, in our being humbled or reduced. Remembered us, or for us, for our benefit, as in Ps. cxxxii. 1. From the analogy of Ps. cvii. 16, 18, 26. cxv. 12, we learn that this relates to the captivity in Babylon, which is also the subject of the next psalm.

24. And snatched us from our adversaries—for unto eternity (is) his mercy. The first verb always denotes violent action. See above, on Ps. vii. 3 (2.) It here means to snatch or tear away, as in Lam. v. 8, and has reference to the great catastrophe by which the Babylonian power was broken and the Jews set free.

25. Giving bread to all flesh—for unto eternity (is) his mercy. Here the description passes suddenly from God's acts of mercy towards his people to his general beneficence towards all that lives, perhaps with a design to intimate that he who thus cares for men in general and even for the lower animals, will not and cannot let his people perish. See Matth. vi. 30.

26. Give thanks unto the God of heaven, for unto eternity (is) his mercy. The God of heaven is a new description as to form, but substantially equivalent to that in Ps. vii. 8 (7.) xi. 4. xiv. 2. xxxiii. 13, 14.

PSALM CXXXVII.

THIS is the most direct and striking reminiscence of the Babylonish Exile in the whole collection, and could scarcely have been written but by one who had partaken of its trials. The first part of the psalm recalls the treatment of the Jews in Babylonia, vs. 1—6 ; the second anticipates the punishment of Edom and of Babylon, as persecuting enemies of Israel, vs. 7—9.

1. By the rivers of Babylon, there we sat down, yea we wept, when we remembered Zion. The first word sometimes means along, and especially along the course of streams, as in Ps. xxiii. 2. Babel or Babylon is here put for the whole country which we call Babylonia. Its rivers are the Tigris, the Euphrates, the Chaboras, and the Ulai, with their tributary branches. Various explanations have been given of the exiles being represented as sitting by the rivers ; but none of them are so satisfactory as the obvious and simple supposition, that the rivers are mentioned as a characteristic feature of the country, just as we might speak of the mountains of Switzerland or the plains of Tartary, meaning Switzerland or Tartary itself. There is emphatic ; there, even in that distant heathen country. Sat or sat down, if significant at all, may mean that they sat upon the ground as mourners. Yea, literally also ; we not only sat but also wept. When we remembered, literally, in our remembering, i. e. at the time, and as the effect, of our so doing. Zion, not merely as the mother-country or its capital, but as the seat of the theocracy and earthly centre of the true religion.

2. On willows in the midst of it we hung our harps. It has been objected that the willow is unknown in the region once called Babylonia, which is said to produce nothing but the palm-tree. Some avoid this difficulty by explaining the whole verse as metaphorical, hanging up the harps being a figure for renouncing music, and willows being suggested by the mention of streams, perhaps with some allusion to associations connected with this particular tree. It may also be observed that extraordinary changes have taken place in the vegetable products, and especially the trees, of certain countries. Thus the palm-tree, so frequently referred to in the scriptures, and so common once that cities were called after it, is now almost unknown in Palestine.

3. For there our captors asked of us the words of a song, and our spoilers mirth, (saying) Sing to us from a song of Zion. Words of a song may either be an idiomatic pleonasm meaning simply song itself, or denote, as in English, the words sung as distinguished from the music. Our spoilers is by some taken in a passive sense, our spoiled or plundered ones; but the usual explanation is favoured by tradition and analogy. One of the songs can hardly be the meaning of the Hebrew phrase, in which the noun is singular. The literal translation above given yields a perfectly good sense. A song of Zion is a psalm, a religious lyric, such as many of the heathen knew to be employed in the temple worship at Jerusalem. Many interpreters suppose the object of this request to be contempt or ridicule; but the words themselves necessarily suggest nothing more than curiosity.

4. How shall we sing the song of Jehovah on a foreign soil? These are the words with which the invitation was or might have been rejected at the time. The question implies a moral impossibility. The idea is not, that the psalms themselves would be profaned by being sung there, but that the expression of religious joy would be misplaced and incongruous, implying an oblivion of the sanctuary and its forfeited advantages. A foreign soil, a ground or land of strangeness. See above, on Ps. xviii. 45, 46 (44, 45.)

5. If I forget thee, oh Jerusalem, let my right hand forget (its skill.) This is a disavowal of the forgetfulness which would have been implied in yielding to the wishes of their captors. Jerusalem is here used precisely as Zion is in vs. 1, 3. The object of the verb in the last clause is supposed by some to be me; let my right hand forget me, i. e. let me be forgotten by myself. But most interpreters concur in the correctness of the common version, in which cunning has its old English sense of skill. The only question then is, whether this is to be understood indefinitely of all that the right hand can do, and is wont to do, for the convenience of the person, or whether it is to be understood specifically of its use in playing on an instrument. The former is the more comprehensive meaning, but the latter is more pointed and better suited to this context. The sense will then be: if I so far forget thee as to strike the harp while in this condition, let my right hand lose the power so to do.

6. Let my tongue cleave to my palate if I do not remember thee, if I do not raise Jerusalem above the head of my rejoicing. What he had first wished as to his power of instrumental performance, he now wishes with respect to his vocal organs. If I forget thee, let my hand forever cease to strike the harp, and my tongue to utter sound! The most natural meaning of the last clause is the one paraphrastically given in the English version, if I prefer not Jerusalem above my chief joy.

7. Remember, oh Jehovah, against the sons of Edom, the day of Jerusalem, (against) those saying, Make bare, make bare, to the very foundation in it. Most interpreters regard this as a kind of comment by the Psalmist on the preceding recollection of the Captivity. But the transition then seems too abrupt and unaccountable. The best explanation is, that these are still the real or supposed words of the captives, in reply to the request of their oppressors, far from granting which they break forth in a prayer for the destruction of those who had destroyed Jerusalem. As if they had said: No, instead of singing psalms to gratify your idle or malignant curiosity, we will rather pray God to avenge the insults offered to his holy city. This interpretation is moreover recommended by its rendering the strong terms that follow more natural than if uttered in cold blood and in calm deliberation at a later period. Remember against, literally for or with respect to. See above, on Ps. cxxxii. 1. cxxxvi. 23, where the same idiomatic phrase is used in a favourable sense. The day of Jerusalem is the day of its calamity or great catastrophe. Compare Obad. 11—13, where the same crime is charged upon Edom, namely that of concurring and rejoicing in the downfall of his kinsman Israel. See also Jer. xlix. 7—22. Lam. iv. 21, 22. Ezek. xxv. 12—14.

8. Daughter of Babylon, the desolated! Happy (he) who shall repay to thee thy treatment wherewith thou hast treated us. The daughter of Babylon (or virgin Babylon) is the people or kingdom of Babylonia, personified as a woman. See above, on Ps. ix. 14 (13.) The wasted or desolated is the epithet belonging to her by way of eminence in prophecy and history. There is no need therefore of distinguishing between a partial and total desolation, or between that of the city and the kingdom at large. The last clause may mean nothing more than that such a revolution is at hand that he will be esteemed a fortunate man who treats thee as thou hast treated us. For the true sense of the last verb, see above, on Ps. xiii. 6 (5, 6.)

9. Happy he (who) shall seize and dash thy little ones against the stones. This revolting act was not uncommon in ancient warfare. See 2 Kings viii. 12. Hos. xiv. 1. Nah. iii. 10. Isai. xiii. 16, 18. The more revolting, the stronger the description of the change awaiting Babylon. The day is coming when he shall be deemed fortunate who, according to the usages of war, requites thy own sanguinary cruelties. The word translated dash means really to dash in pieces, as in Ps. ii. 9. The act here meant is commonly expressed by (רָשַׁח) a different Hebrew verb. Takeh and dasheth is equivocal, the first of these verbs being used in familiar English as a kind of auxiliary, whereas the corresponding verb in Hebrew denotes a distinct and independent act.

PSALM CXXXVIII.

THIS is the first of a series of eight psalms (cxxxviii—cxlv), probably the last composed by David, a kind of commentary on the great Messianic promise in 2 Sam. vii. They are found in this part of the Psalter, in consequence of having been made the basis, or rather the body, of a system or series (cxxxv—cxlvi) by a later writer. See above, on Ps. cxxxv. 1. The psalm before us contains an acknowledgment of God's goodness as experienced already, vs. 1—3, an anticipation of his universal recognition by the nations, vs. 4, 5, and in the mean time of additional favours to the Psalmist, or to the church of which he was the temporary head, vs. 6—8. Such a psalm was of course well suited to sustain the faith and revive the hopes of a later generation.

1. By David. I will thank thee with all my heart; before gods I will praise thee. The Davidic style and tone of composition are acknowledged even by the skeptical interpreters. With all my heart implies the greatness of the gift to be acknowledged, which was no doubt the promise of Messiah contained in 2 Sam. vii. See above, on Ps. ix. 2 (1.) Before gods, i. e. in the presence, to the face, and in contempt of all imaginary rival deities. The translation before God is grammatical, but confounds the second and third person in a single clause. The Septuagint and Vulgate have before angels, which is inconsistent with the usage of the Hebrew word. Thank thee, in the strict sense of praising for benefits received; or in a wider sense, acknowledge thee as God. Praise thee, make music, sing and play to thee. With this verse compare Ps. vii. 18 (17.) xviii. 50 (49) liv. 8 (7.) lvii. 10 (9.) ci. 1.

2. I will bow down to thy holy temple, and will thank thy name, for thy mercy and for thy truth; for thou hast made great, above all thy name, thy promise. With the first clause compare Ps. v. 8 (7.) Bow down, or prostrate myself, as an act of worship. Mercy in promising, truth in performing. See above, on Ps. xxv. 10. Above all thy name, i. e. all the previous manifestations of thy nature. Thy word, literally, thy saying, that which thou hast said, but applied specifically to the divine promise. See above, on Ps. xviii. 31 (30.) exix. 38, 50, 103, 140. The transcendent promise here referred to is that of the Messiah in 2 Sam. vii. which is there described as unique by David himself, and which forms the basis of many psalms, but especially of Ps. xviii, xxi, lxi, ci, cii, ciii, and the one before us

3. In the day I called and thou didst answer me, thou makest me brave in my soul (with) strength. This may be connected with what goes before, thou didst magnify thy word in the day when I called etc. The promise in 2 Sam. vii was an answer to his prayer for a perpetual succession. See above, on Ps. xxi. 3, 5 (2, 4.) lxi. 6 (5.) The common version of the last clause (strengthenedst me with strength in my soul) contains a paronomasia not in the original, where the verb and noun have not even a letter in common. The verb is by some translated made me proud, i. e. elated me, not with a vain or selfish pride, but with a lofty and exhilarating hope. In my soul, as opposed to a mere outward influence. Strength, i. e. strength of faith and confidence in God.

4. Jehovah, all kings of the earth shall acknowledge thee, when they have heard the sayings of thy mouth. Not merely one king, though that king be David, shall acknowledge, thank, and praise thee, but all others who receive the true religion, when they know what thou hast promised, and especially when they compare the promise and fulfilment, with particular reference to the promise of Messiah, which is described in Scripture as a grand means for the conversion of the nations and the chiefs which represent them. See above, on Ps. lxxviii. 30, 32 (29, 31.) cii. 16 (15.)

5. And they shall sing in the ways of Jehovah, for great (shall be) the glory of Jehovah. The kings of the earth, representing its nations, shall join in the praise of the true God, walking in his ways, i. e. as converts to the true religion. Compare Mic. iv. 2. Isai. iv. 3. Instead of for we may read when, as in v. 4; when the glory of Jehovah has been duly exalted and diffused by the extension of the true religion. Some make this clause the theme or subject of the praise—they shall sing that the glory of Jehovah is great—a less natural construction, but one which yields an equally good sense.

6. For lofty is Jehovah—and the low he sees—and the haughty from afar he knows. The first two clauses may be in antithesis, and yet he looks upon the low, or simply co-ordinate, and therefore he looks upon the low, i. e. the lowly, who shall be exalted, while the opposite end of the proud is implied in the concluding declaration. Even from afar, from the distant heaven where he seems to behold nothing, he knows precisely what the proud man is, what he deserves, and what is actually to befall him. See above, on Ps. i. 1.

7. If I go through the midst of distress, thou wilt save (or make) me alive; upon the wrath of my enemies thou wilt stretch forth thy hand, and save me (with) thy right hand. The first clause resembles that of Ps. xxiii. 4. Go through or walk in the midst of trouble. To quicken or revive, as in Ps. xxx. 4 (3.) lxxi. 20. Upon the wrath, implying motion from above, which is more significant and graphic than against. The common version of the last words (and thy right hand shall save me) is equally grammatical and found in all the ancient versions; but the other is recommended by its ascribing the deliverance directly to God, and by the analogy of Ps. lx. 7 (5), where hand is adverbially construed with the same verb. See also Ps. xvii. 14.

8. Jehovah will complete for me (what he has begun) Jehovah, thy mercy (is) forever; the works of thy hands do not forsake. The work begun and yet to be completed was the whole series of God's gracious dispensations towards David and his seed, beginning with the first choice of the former and ending in the Messiah. With the first clause compare Ps. lvii. 3 (2.) Phil. i. 6. The second member of the sentence might be read, let thy mercy be forever or unto eternity. But it is more probably an affirmation, similar to that in Ps. ciii. 17, and the clause contains an appeal to the promise of eternal favour, 2 Sam. vii. 13, 26, or perhaps to the eternity of God's compassions, as a reason why he should not and could not abandon what had been so graciously begun.

PSALM CXXXIX.

THE Psalmist describes God's omnipresence and omniscience, vs. 1—12, as attributes necessarily belonging to him as the Creator. vs. 13—18, and appeals to them in attestation of his own aversion to the wicked, vs. 19—24. From its collocation it is probable that this psalm records David's exercises under the powerful impressions of the great Messianic promises in 2 Sam. vii, and is therefore to be regarded as a confession and profession made not merely for himself but for his successors on the throne of Israel, and intended both to warn them and console them by this grand view of Jehovah's constant and infallible inspection.

1. To the Chief Musician. By David. A Psalm. Jehovah, thou hast searched me and knowest. As a later writer could have no motive for prefixing the title to the Chief Musician, it affords an incidental proof of antiquity and genuineness. Thou hast searched me or continually searchest me. The Hebrew verb originally means to dig and is applied to the search for precious metals (Job xxviii. 3), but metaphorically to a moral inquisition into guilt. See above, on Ps. xlv. 22 (21), and compare Job xiii. 9. It is here used in the intermediate sense of full investigation. Thou hast known or knowest all that can result from such a scrutiny, not only my corruptions and infirmities but my cares and sorrows. The object is not expressed in this verse, which is a summary of the whole psalm, because the very object of what follows is to state it in detail.

2. Thou knowest my sitting and my rising ; thou understandest as to my thought from afar. Sitting and rising or standing represent rest and motion, or all the various conditions of the living, waking man. See above, on Ps. i. 1. xxvii. 2. In every posture, state, and occupation, thou knowest me. The next phrase does not merely signify, thou perceivest the meaning of my thought, but thou knowest all about it, its origin, its tendency, its moral quality ; thou understandest (every thing) respecting it. From afar, unimpeded by local distance, by which men are prone to imagine the divine omniscience to be circumscribed. See Job xxii. 12—14, and compare with this verse Ps. cxxxviii. 6 ver. xxiii. 23.

3. My path and my lair thou sittest, and with all my ways art acquainted. Path is here put for going, lair for lying, and these, like the terms of the preceding verse, for motion and rest, or the active and passive parts of human life. The poetical word lair is used to represent a Hebrew one, occurring only here, but the verbal root of which is used by Moses, Lev. xviii. 23. xx. 16. The last verb means to be accustomed (Num. xxii. 30), and then by a natural association, acquainted or familiar (Job xxii. 21.) My ways, my condition and my conduct, what I do and what I suffer.

4. For there is not a word in my tongue, (but) lo, Jehovah, thou knowest all of it. The relation of the clauses may be also expressed thus in English, which, oh Lord, thou knowest not, all of it (or altogether.) In my tongue, in its power, or, as it were, in its possession. This verse merely applies to his words specifically what was said before of all his actions. The lo or behold is equivalent to see there, or to the act of pointing at the words as objects of sight and as actually present.

5. Behind and before thou dost beset me, and layest upon me thy hand. There is here an insensible transition from God's omniscience to his omnipresence, out of which the Scriptures represent it as arising. Behind and before, i. e. on all sides. The idea of above and below is suggested by the last clause. Beset, besiege, hem in, or closely surround. Thy hand, or the palm of thy hand, as the Hebrew word strictly denotes.

6. Such knowledge is too wonderful for me; it is exalted, I cannot (attain) to it. The literal meaning of the Hebrew word is, wonderful knowledge away from me, or more than I (can comprehend); it is exalted, I cannot (do any thing) as to it. With the word wonderful compare the use of the cognate verb, Deut. xxx. 11. Prov. xxx. 18. The knowledge meant is man's finite knowledge of the infinite.

7. Whither shall I go from thy Spirit, and whither from thy face shall I flee? The interrogation involves a denial of all possible escape from God's inspection, when a guilty conscience prompts to seek one. Compare Am. ix. 2.

8. If I scale the heavens, there (art) thou; and if I spread the grave, lo thou (art there.) The word scale is used to represent a Hebrew verb occurring only here, and no doubt belonging to the dialect of poetry. The verb translated spread means specifically to spread a couch or make a bed. If I make sheol my bed, i. e. lie down in the grave or hell, in the wide old English sense. See above, on Ps. vi. 6 (5.)

9. I will raise the wings of day-break. I will dwell in the end of the sea. By supplying if, although the sense is not materially changed, the form of expression becomes much less striking. The conditional construction is forbidden also, or at least rendered highly improbable, by the form of the second verb, expressing strong desire and resolution. The truth is that we have here a bold transition. After speaking of guilty flight from God himself, the Psalmist now speaks of anxious flight from other enemies, and as if visibly surrounded by them, here resolves to escape from them. This, which is Hengstenberg's interpretation, is strongly favoured by the unconditional construction, although he himself retains the other. The same writer objects to the translation raise the wings, that before one can raise wings he must have them. But for that very reason the possession of them may be presupposed, or considered as implied in the act expressed. The same combination is employed by Ezekiel (x. 16, 19), in a way that admits of only one translation. The Hebrew word (שֶׁמֶר) is not the common one for morning, but one denoting day-break or the dawn. See above, on Ps. lvii. 9 (8.) The point of comparison appears to be the incalculable velocity of light. The extremity (or end) of the sea is added to heaven and hell, in order to convey the idea of the most remote points.

10. Even there thy hand guides me, and thy right hand holds me. From the use of similar expressions to denote a friendly guidance and support, in Ps. xviii. 17 (16.) lv. 7—9 (6—8.) v. 9 (8.) xxiii. 3. xxvii. 11. lxxiii. 24, and other places, Hengstenberg infers that this must mean, when I fly to the ends of the earth before my enemies, thou art still there to protect me, and that the psalm was therefore meant not merely to alarm but to console.

11. And I say, only darkness overwhelms me, night is the light become around me. The ideal situation is the same as in v. 9, one of danger and terror, in which he is constrained to say, nothing but darkness comes upon me, smites me, and the very light 's turned to darkness round about me. According to this view of the passage, darkness, as in many other places, is a figure for calamity and danger. See Isai. l. 10. Ps. cxxxviii. 7. According to the usual interpretation it denotes concealment from the eye of God.

12. Even darkness does not make (it) dark to him, and night like day shines; as the darkness, so the light. The interpretation given of the foregoing verse does not necessarily affect the sense of this, which still means that nothing can prevent God's seeing either sin or suffering, either the danger of his people or the malice of their enemies. Make dark, as in Ps. cv. 28. To thee, literally, from thee, i. e. so as to conceal from thee.

13. For thou possessest my reins; thou coverest me in my mother's womb. The meaning of the first clause seems to be: thou hast in thy power and at thy control the very seat of my strongest sensibilities, my pains and pleasures; and this subjection is coeval with my being, for even before birth I was unde thy protection and command, as I am now. The sense of waring, which is given to the last verb by some modern writers rests on a mere etymological deduction and has no foundation either in tradition or in usage. The for at the beginning of this verse marks the transition from the fact of God's omniscience to its origin or reason in his creative character and rights. As a logical particle, the for relates, not to the immediately preceding verse, but to the whole preceding context. God is omnipresent and omniscient, for he is the maker of the universe.

14. I thank thee because fearfully I am distinguished; wonderful (are) thy works, and (that) my soul knoweth right (well.) He makes it a subject of grateful acknowledgment, that God has distinguished him or made him to differ from inferior creatures, both in constitution and in destiny. Because is in Hebrew a compound particle (עַל כֵּן) like for that, forasmuch as. Fearfully, literally fearful (things), but used adverbially, as in Ps. lxxv. 6 (5.) It might here be rendered (by) fearful (things.) The words corresponding to distinguished and wonderful are in Hebrew passive forms from cognate roots (פָּדַח and פָּדַח). The particular statement of the first clause is resolved by the last into the general one, of which it is a mere specification. The concluding words express a strong and, as it were, experimental conviction of the truth

15. Not hid was my frame from thee, when I was made in secret, embroidered in depths of the earth. The not hid is a meiosis, implying that God saw it clearly and fully understood it, inasmuch as he himself created it. Frame, literally strength, as in Deut. viii. 17, but applied to the bones and sinews as the strength or frame-work of the body. See above, on Ps. vi. 3 (2), and compare Job x. 11. The common Hebrew word for bone differs only in the pointing. The word translated when is (אֲשֶׁר) the relative pronoun, and may here retain its proper meaning although then not easily translated, as its antecedent is latent in the phrase my frame, which may be thus resolved, the frame of me who was made, etc. In secret, i. e. in the womb. Embroidered, which is the invariable meaning of the Hebrew verb, is a bold but beautiful expression for the complicated tissue of the human frame, in which so many and such various threads are curiously interwoven. Depths of the earth can only be explained as a comparative expression, corresponding to in secret and denoting the same thing, which it describes as no less dark and hidden from the view of men than subterraneous caverns, or as some suppose sheol, the invisible world. See above, on Ps. lxiii. 10 (9), and compare Job i. 21, where the figure is inverted, and the grave is confounded with the womb.

16. My unformed substance did thine eyes see, and in thy book all of them are written, days are formed, and there is not one among them. This is one of the most obscure and doubtful verses in the book of Psalms. Its difficulty to our own translators may be gathered from the fact, that substance yet being unperfect answers to a single Hebrew word, and that my members is a gratuitous addition to the text. The first word in Hebrew occurs only here, but is clearly derived from a verb which means to roll or roll up (2 Kings ii. 8), and may therefore be supposed itself to signify something rolled up or rolled together, and from this may be deduced the sense of something shapeless or unformed, or more specifically that of an embryo or foetus. The next difficulty lies in the expression all of them, evaded in the English Bible by changing it to all my members and then making this the subject of the plurals following. The best interpreters are now disposed to construe all of them with days by a grammatical prolepsis. In thy book all of them are written, namely, all my days, as they were planned, projected, or decreed, before as yet one of them had really existed. Written and formed are then parallel expressions. All of them are written, days are de lineated or depicted. By days (translated in our Bible in continuance) we are then to understand not merely the length but the events and vicissitudes of life. See Job xiv. 5. Ps. lvi. 9 (8.) This is one of those cases in which the difficulty lies in the particular expressions, while the general import of the passage is clearly determined by the context. Instead of (אֵל) not, the keri or marginal reading in the Hebrew Bible has (אֵלָיו) to him, a variation to which no one has succeeded in attaching a coherent sense. Precisely the same difference of text exists in Ps. c. 3.

17. And to me how precious are thy thoughts, oh God! How great is the sum of them! Having presented this impressive view of God's omniscience, he now tells how he is himself affected by it. So far from thinking it a hardship to be subject to this scrutiny, he counts it a most valuable privilege. However others may regard this truth, to me, my judgment and my feelings, how costly, valuable, are thy thoughts, i. e. thy perpetual attention to me. For the true sense of precious, see above, on Ps. xxxvi. 8 (7.) xlv. 10 (9.) Great is the sum, literally, strong (or many) are their sums, an expression which can hardly be retained in our idiom.

18. I will count them—(but no)—more than sand they are many—I awake and still I (am) with thee. The first clause is equivalent to a conditional proposition, if I would count them etc. but far more striking and poetical in form. See above, on Ps. xl. 6 (5.) I am still with thee has the same essential meaning with the similar expression in Ps. lxxiii. 23, namely, I am still in thy society or company. But there the reference is chiefly to divine protection, here to meditation on the divine attributes. Thou art still before me as an object of adoring wonder, not by day only, but by night; not merely in the watches of the night, but even in my sleep. See above, on Ps. i. 2. xvi. 7. lxxiii. 7 (c.)

19. If thou wilt slay, oh God, the wicked (man)! And ye men of blood, depart from me! The first clause is in fact, though not in form, the expression of a wish. If thou wouldst but slay! In form, there is an aposiopesis, which may be variously supplied by adding, I will praise thee, I will rejoice, it will be just, or the like. Men of bloods, murderers or murderous men. See above, on Ps. v. 7 (6.) xxvi. 9. lv. 24 (23.) Depart from me is the same expression as in Ps. vi. 9 (8.) cxix. 15, but the main idea here is that of disavowal or repudiation. Oh that God would slay them, and until he does, I desire to have no communion with them. Compare Job xxi. 14. Matth. vii. 23

20. Who speak of thee for wickedness and take in vain—thy foes! Speak of thee, or name thee, use thy name, for the accomplishment of wicked ends. The other clause will then be strictly parallel, and take (thy name) in vain, as in Ex. xx. 7. For the meaning of this difficult expression, see above, on Ps. xxiv. 4. The subject of the proposition is placed emphatically at the end.

21. Thy haters, oh Jehovah, shall not I hate, and with thine assailants be disgusted? The simple future in the first clause comprehends several distinct shades of meaning. Do I not, may I not, must I not, hate those hating thee? Hate them, not as man hates, but as God hates. See above, on Ps. v. 6 (5.) The construction of the verb and preposition in the last clause is the same in Hebrew and in English. Be disgusted, literally, sicken or disgust myself, abhor, or loathe. Thine assailants, those rising up against thee, as rebellious enemies. The Hebrew word is a noun formed from the participle used above, Ps. xvii. 7. lix. 2 (1.)

22. (With) perfection of hatred do I hate them, as enemies they are to me. Literally, they are for enemies, i. e. I so esteem them. As enemies of God, they must be mine.

23. Search me, God, and know my heart ; try me, and know my thoughts. The last expression is emphatic, meaning even my most anxious and disturbed thoughts, into which corruption might most easily find entrance. See above, on Ps. xciv. 19, the only other place where the Hebrew word occurs. In this verse, he again appeals to the divine omniscience for the purity of his intentions, and thus comes back to the point from which he started.

24. And see if a way of pain be in me, and guide me in a way of eternity. In the first clause some translate, the way of an idol, an idolatrous way. But the meaning idol is not justified by usage. A way of pain is one that leads to suffering and misery hereafter. The opposite of this is a way of eternity, by which some understand an everlasting way, as distinguished from the perishable way of sinners, Ps. i. 6. Others, more probably, the way that leads to everlasting life. Usage, however, is in favour of a third and very different interpretation, which gives the Hebrew phrase (נְהַרְבוֹתָ עוֹלָם) the same sense with a kindred one (דַּרְךְךָ עוֹלָם) used by Jeremiah (vi. 16), to wit, that of old or ancient way, the one pursued by prophets, patriarchs, and saints of old. Similar expressions are found in Jer. xviii. 15. Job xxii. 15, applied, in a bad sense, to the course pursued by ancient sinners. The prayer, however, still amounts to the same thing, to wit, that God would lead him in the good old way, which is itself the way to everlasting life.

PSALM CXL.

1. To the Chief Musician. A Psalm. By David. We find ourselves, in this psalm, carried back not only to the times of David, but to those of the Sauline persecution, from which the images are evidently borrowed. Besides the warlike tone, the vigorous conciseness, the verbal agreements with Davidic psalms combined with eminent originality, the very structure is Davidic, and exhibits the familiar sequence of complaint, vs. 2—6 (1—5), prayer, vs. 7—9 (6—8), and confident anticipation, vs. 10—14 (9—13.) So clearly do these features of the composition mark its origin, even independently of the inscription, that nothing can account for its position here but the hypothesis already stated, that these ancient psalms were incorporated into a series of later date, and placed in the collection, not according to their individual antiquity, but according to the date of the whole set or system, into which they had been made to enter. Like the psalms immediately preceding, this was probably composed by David after the reception of the great Messianic promise, and with immediate reference to it.

2 (1.) Deliver me, Jehovah, from the bad man; from the man of violences thou wilt preserve me. This is one of those pictures so abundant in the genuine Davidic Psalms, of which Saul seems to have furnished the original. Compare Ps. lii. The first man is the generic term (מַדְּבָרִים), the other the individual designation (מַדְּבָרִים), which seem, however, to be used here as equivalents. The insensible transition from direct prayer to confident anticipation is characteristic of the psalms of David. Man of violence is another favourite expression. See above, on Ps. xviii. 49 (48), and compare the parallel passage, 2 Sam. xxii. 49, where the plural form (violences) is used, as in the verse before us.

3 (2.) Who imagine evils in (their) heart; all the day they gather (for) battles. That the preceding verse, notwithstanding the reference to Saul, is the description of a whole class, is clear from the plural forms in this verse. Think, meditate, devise, imagine. Evils, particularly such as are inflicted on others, well expressed in the common version, mischiefs. Another construction of the last clause, preferred by some interpreters, is, all the day they dwell with wars (or in wars), i. e. are constantly involved in them and busied with them. This use of the verb (גָּרַר) is justified by Ps. v. 5 (4.) cv. 23. cxxv. 5. But the analogy of Ps. lvi. 7 (6.) lix. 4 (3) is decisive in favour of the other explanation. Compare Ps. xxxi. 14 (13.) xxxv. 15. Isai. liv. 15.

4 (3.) They sharpen their tongue as a serpent; the poison of an adder (is) under their lips, Selah. Not as a serpent (does), but (spiteful or venomous) as a serpent. See above, on Ps. lxiv. 4 (3.) With the last clause compare Ps. x. 7. lviii. 5 (4.) The word for asp or adder occurs only here. The only point of exegetical importance is, that it means a poisonous serpent, and is thus a specification of the general expression in the other clause.

5 (4.) Keep me, Jehovah, from the hands of the wicked (man); from the man of violences thou wilt preserve me, who have thought to subvert my steps. A varied repetition of the prayer in v. 1. With the last clause compare Ps. xxxv. 5. xxxvi. 13 (12.) lvi. 14 (13.) cxviii. 13.

6 (5.) High (ones) have hid a snare for me, and cords—they have spread out a net by the side of the road—traps have they laid for me, Selah. This is little more than an accumulation of the various terms in which David elsewhere clothes one of his favourite figures, as if he saw his own perils reappearing in the future. High ones, i. e. proud or haughty men. By the side, literally, the hand, as we say on either hand. The word translated road, according to its etymology, denotes a wagon-road, a track worn by wheels.

7 (6.) I have said to Jehovah, My God (art) thou; give ear, Jehovah, (to) the voice of my supplications. All the component parts of this verse are of constant occurrence in the psalms of David. With the first clause compare Ps. xvi. 2. xxxi. 15 (14.) With the second, Ps. v. 2, 3 (1, 2.) xvii. 1. xxviii. 2, 5 (1, 5.) xxxi. 23 (22.) xxxix. 13 (12.) liii. 4 (3.)

8 (7.) Jehovah, Lord, the strength of my salvation; thou hast covered my head in the day of battle. My covenant God and sovereign, whose power saves me. Head is preceded by a preposition ($\frac{7}{7}$), thou hast been a covering (or afforded shelter) to (or for) my head. The day of battle, literally, of armour or of weapons, i. e. the day when they are used. With this verse compare Ps. v. 12 (11.) ix. 9 (7.) lxii. 2, 12 (1, 11.) cxxxix. 13. 1 Sam. xxviii. 2.

9 (8.) Grant not, Jehovah, the desires of the wicked man—his device succeed not—they will be exalted. Succeed not, suffer not to prosper; literally, draw not out, i. e. to a successful issue. The last clause states what would be the effect of their success; they would be elated, or exalt themselves. With this verse compare Ps. xxvii. 12. xxxi. 14 (13.) xxxvii. 12. lxvi. 7 (6.) Deut. xxxii. 27.

10 (9.) The head of those surrounding me—the mischief of their lips shall cover them. The nominative absolute refers back to the covering of the Psalmist's head in v. 8 (7.) While my head is covered by the divine protection, the head of those by whom I am beset shall be covered with the consequences or the punishment of the mischief occasioned by their calumnies and insults. Or the trouble, which their lips have caused to others, shall return upon themselves. Compare Ps. vii. 17 (16.) Those surrounding me, or, as a noun, my surroundings, as in 2 Kings xxiii. 5. The participle would, according to analogy and usage, mean causing me to turn back or retreat (Jer. xxi. 4), which yields a good sense here. The head of those who once drove me back shall be covered, etc.

11 (10.) Coals shall be cast upon them; into the fire he shall make them fall, and into deep waters, (whence) they shall not rise. The first noun in Hebrew always means burning or live coals. See above, on Ps. xviii. 13, 14 (12, 13.) Shall be cast is the keri or marginal reading, no doubt intended to relieve the harshness and obscurity of the reading in the text, they shall cast or shake, an indefinite or impersonal construction, really equivalent in meaning to the passive. In the second member of the sentence the action is ascribed to God himself. Deep waters answers to a single Hebrew word occurring only here, and by some supposed to mean deep pits or excavations. The first sense above given is founded on an Arabic analogy.

12 (11.) A man of tongue shall not be established in the land, (nor) a man of violence, a bad (man)—he shall hunt him to destruction. A man of a calumnious unbridled tongue (James i. 26) shall not be permanently seated in a prosperous condition. See above, on Ps. ci. 7. cii. 29 (28.) The next words may be variously construed; a man of wicked violence, or, disregarding the accents, a man of violence, evil shall hunt him, etc. According to the other constructions, God is the subject of the verb, as of the second in v. 11 (10.) To destructions, the plural form denoting fulness and completeness. Others render it by strokes, i. e. successive strokes; others again, in haste, which agrees well with the usage of the verbal root. See 2 Chr. xxvi. 20. Esth. iii. 15. vi. 12. viii. 14.

13 (12.) I know that Jehovah will do justice to the sufferer, and judgment for the poor. Compare Ps. ix. 5, 17 (4, 16.) Literally, the right of the sufferer, the judgment of the poor.

14 (13.) Only the righteous shall give thanks unto thy name, the upright shall sit in thy presence. Only the righteous shall have occasion for thanksgiving. There is no need therefore of departing from the proper sense of (שָׁבַע) the Hebrew participle. See above, on Ps. lxxiii. 1. Sit in thy presence, as thy friends or guests or favoured servants. Perhaps it may mean sit (enthroned) before thee. Compare Matth. xix. 28. Some understand the sense to be, shall dwell (in the land) before thee, i. e. under thy protection and inspection. Compare Ps. xxi. 7 (6) xli. 13 (12.) lvi. 14 (13.)

PSALM CXLI.

AFTER an introductory petition for a favourable hearing, vs. 1, 2, the Psalmist prays to be delivered from the power of temptation, vs. 3, 4, comforts himself under his afflictions as paternal chastisements, vs. 5, 6, anticipates the ruin of his enemies, v. 7, and prays for deliverance from them in the mean time, vs. 8—10. This psalm, like the one before it, is distinguished by a pregnant brevity and the use of rare expressions, while at the same time it is full of verbal and real coincidences with the psalms of David. These indications are so clear and undeniable, that a skeptical critic of great eminence (De Wette) pronounces it one of the oldest psalms in the collection. With respect to its position in the Psalter, see the prefatory notes to Ps. cxxxv, cxl.

1. A Psalm. By David. Jehovah, I invoke thee; hasten to me; give ear to my voice in my calling to thee. This verse is entirely made up of phrases frequently occurring in the psalms of David. I invoke thee, Ps. xvii. 6. Hasten to me, Ps. xxii. 20 (19.) lxx. 2 (1.) lxxi. 12. Hear my voice, Ps. cxl. 7 (6.) In my calling, Ps. iv. 2 (1.)

2. Let my prayer continue (as) incense before thee, the offering of my hands (as) the evening oblation. Continue, literally, be established, as in Ps. cxl. 12 (11.) He prays not only for acceptance, but for constant or perpetual acceptance, as the offerings referred to were the stated daily services of the Mosaic ritual. Incense is in scripture the symbol of prayer. In the books posterior to the Pentateuch it is commonly mentioned as an evening oblation (1 Kings xviii. 29, 36. 2 Kings xvi. 15. Dan. ix. 21. Ezra ix. 4, 5), perhaps because in the evening it was reckoned the main offering, whereas in the morning it was merely an appendage to the animal sacrifice. Lifting up is not the meaning of the Hebrew word (מִשְׁאֵה) in any other place, whereas it often means a gift, and especially a portion of food (Gen. xliii. 34. 2 Sam. xi. 8), in which sense it might naturally be applied to the vegetable offerings of the Law.

3. Set, oh Jehovah, a guard at my mouth; watch over the door of my lips. The prayer, for which he had bespoken audience and acceptance, was a prayer against the power of temptation, and first with reference to sins of speech. See above, on Ps. xxxix. 2 (1.) The words translated watch and door are forms occurring only here, but etymologically near akin to others which are in common use.

4. Incline not my heart to an evil word, to practise practices in wickedness with men (who are) workers of iniquity, and let me not eat of their dainties. An evil word may be strictly understood, as referring still to sins of the tongue, or be taken in the idiomatic sense of an evil matter, which last is preferred by most interpreters. The assonance in practise practices is copied from the Hebrew, where the cognate verb and noun are combined in the same manner. Practices in wickedness or wicked practices The last words seem to be a prayer, that he may not be tempted by the luxurious prosperity of wicked men, to follow their example. See above, on Ps. lxxiii. 3—7, 12.

5. Let the righteous smite me (in) mercy and chasten me—oil for the head let not my head refuse—for (it is) still (to come)—and my prayer (must still ascend) in their injuries. This verse is so obscure as to be almost unintelligible. According to the English versions, it expresses his willingness to be rebuked by good men for his benefit. But this sense is not only hard to be extracted from the words, but foreign from the context. Of the many contradictory interpretations which have been proposed the most probable is that which makes the sentence mean, that the sufferings endured by the good man, even at the hand of the wicked, are chastisements inflicted by a righteous God in justice and in mercy, and as such may be likened to a festive ointment, which the head of the sufferer should not refuse, as he will still have need of consolation and occasion to invoke God, in the midst of trials and of mischiefs yet to be experienced.

6. Thrown down among the rocks are their judges; and (then) they hear my words, for they are sweet. When the judgments in reserve for the leaders of my enemies shall come upon them, they will perceive too late how reasonable are my words, and wish that they had hearkened to them sooner. Thrown down, originally let go, here used as in 2 Kings ix. 33. Among the rocks, literally in (or into) the hands of the rock. Some understand this to mean into its power (see v. 9 below); others, against its sides (see Ps. cxl. 6); but the simplest explanation is that which supposes the rock to be personified and represented as standing below and holding out its hands to catch the person or thing falling. Some in the last clause read, that they are sweet. Then, when it is too late, they shall perceive how sweet my words are.

7. Like (one) ploughing and cleaving the earth—scattered as

our bones at the grave's mouth (or the mouth of hell.) There are only two plausible interpretations of this obscure comparison. As the first Hebrew verb (אָרַב), in its derivative forms, has the general sense of cleaving, and the second (פָּרַב) is expressly used (Ecc. x. 9) in that of splitting wood, some interpreters give both verbs that specific meaning here, and suppose the verse to be simply a description of mortality or carnage, the effect of which is, that human bones lie about the opening of the grave, or the devouring jaws of hell (Isai. v. 14), as numerous and as little heeded as so many logs or sticks of wood. To this it is objected, that the phrase in (or on) the earth is then unmeaning, or at least superfluous, and that the verse, if thus explained, does not cohere with the ensuing context, which supposes the contents of this verse to be cheering and consolatory. The other interpretation avoids these objections, by explaining the first clause not of cleaving wood but ploughing, to which the first verb is applied in Arabic. Like (one) ploughing and cleaving (making furrows) in the earth, not for the sake of mangling its surface, but to make it fruitful and productive, (so) our bones are scattered at the mouth of hell, as the necessary means of a glorious resurrection.

8. For unto thee, Jehovah, Lord, (are) my eyes—in thee have I confided—pour not out my soul. The for refers to the consolatory import of the verse preceding. The one before us contains several favourite Davidic phrases. My eyes are unto thee, Ps. xxv. 15. In thee have I confided (or sought refuge), Ps. ii. 12. xxxi. 2 (1.) In the last clause the soul or life is confounded with its vehicle. See Gen. ix. 4. Lev. xvii. 11, 14. The same remarkable expression is applied by Isaiah (liii. 12) to the voluntary death of the Messiah. That the verb literally means to pour out, is clear from Gen. xxiv. 20. Isai. xxxii. 15. This verse resembles Ps. cxl. 8 (7), in two points, the combination Jehovah Adhonai, and the supernumerary ה in סְבוּתָהּ and בָּרָהּ.

9. Keep me from the hands of the snare which they have netted for me, and the nets of the doers of iniquity. The word hands is entirely omitted both in the English Bible and the Prayer Book version. It is put, by a favourite personification, for power or possession. The use of the expression here was probably occasioned by its previous use in Ps. cxl. 4. The verb netted is here employed to represent the cognate verb and noun in Hebrew.

10. Let the wicked fall into their own traps, while I at the same time escape. Compare Ps. vii. 16 (15.) The combination of the singular and plural in the first clause—wicked (men) and his snares—shows that the singular denotes not a real but ideal person, representing a whole class. The best construction of the last clause is that given in the English Bible and retained above, with the single change of withal to the synonymous but less ambiguous expression, at the same time. The transpositions of this clause are unusual, even in Hebrew—at the same time I until (or while) I pass, i. e. pass by uninjured or escape.

PSALM CXLII.

1. Maschil. By David, when he was in the cave. A Prayer It is called a maschil or didactic psalm because it might otherwise have seemed to contain matter wholly personal to David. See above, on Ps. xxxii. 1. When he was, literally, in his being, which does not refer exclusively to time, but suggests the occasion or exciting cause. The reference may be either to the cave of Adullam (1 Sam. xxii. 1), or to that of Engedi (1 Sam. xxiv. 3), or to that period and mode of life in general, when David was obliged to seek refuge in caves, and which he might expect to see reproduced, under other forms, in the experience of his successors, for whose guidance and encouragement this psalm was written. See above, on Ps. lvii. 1. It is called a prayer, because the complaint or description of the danger, vs. 2—5 (1—4), is merely introductory to the petition for deliverance, vs. 6—8 (5—7.) See above, on Ps. xvii. 1. lxxxvi. 1. xc. 1. cii. 1.

2 (1.) (With) my voice to Jehovah I cry; (with) my voice to Jehovah I make supplication. With the first clause compare Ps. iii. 5 (4); with the second, Ps. xxx. 9 (8.) There are also coincidences of expression with Ps. xxii. 6 (5.) lxxvii. 2 (1.) cxl. 7 (6.) cxli. 1. With my voice, i. e. audibly, aloud, as opposed to a mere mental prayer. The word translated supplication means, according to its etymology, a prayer for grace or mercy.

3 (2.) I pour out before him my care; my trouble before him I tell. With the first clause compare Ps. xlii. 5 (4.) lxii. 9 (8.) 1 Sam. i. 15. Lam. ii. 19. The word translated care means properly reflection, meditation, musing, especially such as is anxious and sad. See above, on Ps. lxiv. 2 (1.)

4 (3.) Because my spirit is overwhelmed within me—and thou knowest my path—in the way that I go, they have hid a snare for me. The literal translation of the first words is, in my spirit's being overwhelmed, which may indicate either the time or the cause of his distress. See above, on v. 1. Some adopt this construction: when my spirit is overwhelmed (then) thou knowest my path. Others suppose two reasons to be given for his calling upon God, his distress and his trust in the divine omniscience. Because my spirit is overwhelmed, and (because) thou knowest my path. But as the form of the two phrases is entirely different in Hebrew, the simplest and safest construction is to treat the second clause as parenthetical. Within me, literally upon me; see above, on Ps.

xlii. 5--7 (4--6.) In the way that I go, i. e. along my path. See above, on Ps. cxl. 5 (4.) The words may mean, however, as in Ps. cxliii. 8, in the way that I should go, i. e. in the path of duty. Without my fault they hid a snare for me. With the first clause of this verse compare Ps. xlii. 5 (4.) lxi. 3 (2.) lxxvii. 4 (3), and with the last Ps. cxl. 6 (5.) cxli. 9. cxliii. 8.

5 (4.) Look to the right and see—and there is no one knowing me—refuge has failed me—there is no one caring for my soul. The first two verbs must be translated as imperatives, as in the margin of the English Bible. The right hand is mentioned as the post of a protector. See above, on Ps. cix. 6. cx. 5. cxxi. 5. The and at the beginning of the second clause is foreign from our idiom, which would seem to require that or for. We might however say, look to the right and see, and (you will find that) there is no one etc. Knowing, recognizing, willing to acknowledge, much less to defend. There is none to me, i. e. I have none. Far from having a protector at my right hand, I have not even one who will acknowledge that he knows me. Caring, literally, seeking, asking, or inquiring after it, in order to assist or save it. Nearly the same form of speech is used to express the very opposite idea, that of seeking one's soul to destroy it. See above, on Ps. xxxv. 4.

6 (5.) I have cried unto thee, Jehovah. I have said, Thou (art) my refuge, my portion in the land of life. I have cried and still cry; I have said and still say. With this last expression compare Ps xxxi. 15 (14.) xli. 5 (4.) Thou (art) my refuge, as in Ps. lxii. 8 (7.) lxxi. 7. My portion, as in Ps. xvi. 5. lxxiii. 26. cxix. 57. Land of life (or of the living), as in Ps. xxvii. 13. lii. 7 (5.)

7. (6.) Hearken to my cry, for I am reduced greatly; free me from my persecutors, for they are mightier than I. All these are favourite Davidic phrases. Hearken to my cry, as in Ps. xvii. 1 lxi. 2 (1.) I am reduced (or weakened) greatly, as in Ps. lxxix. 8 (7.) cxvi. 6. Compare Judges vi. 6. Free me from my persecutors, as in Ps. vii. 2 (1.) They are mightier than I, as in Ps. xviii. 18 (17.)

8. Bring out from prison my soul, to thank thy name. Me shall the righteous surround when thou shalt bestow on me (favour.) With the first clause compare Ps. xxv. 17. cvii. 10. cxliii. 11. Some suppose an allusion to Joseph's imprisonment and liberation. See above, on Ps. cv. 17—20. To thank (or praise) thy name, although an exact translation, is restricted by the English idiom to the person mentioned just before, and can only mean in accordance with our usage, that I may thank thy name; whereas the Hebrew infinitive knows no such limitation and in this case simply means, that some one (without defining who) may praise thy name; or, exchanging the active for the passive form, that thy name may be praised; or, retaining the indefiniteness of the original expression, for the praising of thy name. The agents here intended are probably the righteous, who are mentioned in the next clause. The verb surround, which has a hostile sense in Ps. xxii. 13. Hab. i. 4, here means to gather round one with a friendly curiosity and eagerness, which some suppose to be suggested by the construction with the preposition (ז), which cannot be expressed in English. This sympathy of the righteous in his joys and sorrows is a favourite idea with David. See above, on Ps. xxxv. 27. xl. 17 (16.) For the meaning and construction of the last verb, see above, on Ps. xiii. 6. ciii. 10. cxvi. 7.

PSALM CXLIII.

THIS psalm may be divided into two equal parts, separated by the Selah in v. 6. The first contains a complaint, vs. 1—6; the second a prayer for mercy, vs. 7—12. It resembles the preceding psalm, not only in this relation of its parts, but in its whole tone and diction, its Davidic phraseology combined with an originality never exhibited by the mere imitator or compiler.

1. A Psalm. By David. Jehovah, hear my prayer, give ear unto my cries for mercy; in thy faithfulness answer me (and) in thy righteousness. The combination of faithfulness and righteousness is like that in Ps. xxxvi. 6, 7 (5, 6.) They can hardly be regarded as distinct grounds of argument, but rather as modified statements of the same. The faithfulness of God has direct reference to his promise or covenant engagements; his righteousness has reference to the claims of his own people, but claims which owe their existence to those same covenant engagements.

2. And enter not into judgment with thy servant, for just before thee is no one living. To enter into judgment is a forensic phrase meaning to go to law, to prosecute, to sue. See Job ix. 32. xxii. 4. The verb in the last clause is not a passive meaning to be justified, but a neuter meaning to be just or innocent, to be in the right or on the right side of the controverted question. The acknowledgment in this verse has caused the psalm to be reckoned among the penitential psalms. The verse is often imitated or referred to elsewhere. See Job ix. 2. xiv. 3. xv. 14. Rom iii. 20, etc.

3. For the enemy persecutes my soul, crushes to the earth my life, makes me dwell in dark places like the dead of old. This verse assigns a reason for the preceding prayers, a connection indicated by the for. He prays that God will deal with him in mercy, not in justice, by abandoning him to the fate here described. Compare Ps. vii. 6 (5), but especially Ps. lxxxviii. 4—7 (3—6.) See also Lam. iii. 6. The last words some understand to mean forever dead.

4. And overwhelmed within me is my spirit; in the midst of me desolated is my heart. With the first clause compare Ps. cxlii. 4 (3); with the second Ps. xl. 16 (15.)

5. I remember the days of old; I meditate of all thy doing, of the work of thy hands I muse. He recalls and ponders them not as a source of comfort, as in Ps. xlv. 2—4 (1—3), but of sorrow, from their painful contrast with his actual condition. See above, on Ps. xxii. 4—6 (3—5.) lxxvii. 6 (5), and with the last clause compare Ps. xcii. 5

6. I spread my hands unto thee; my soul is like a weary land to thee, i. e. thirsts or longs for thee, as a dry or thirsty land for rain. See above, on Ps. lxiii. 2 (1.) A weary land is an unusual expression, and one of the peculiar features of this psalm. With the first clause compare Ps. xlv. 21 (20.) The close of the complaint or lamentation, and the strength of the feeling with which it is uttered, are both indicated by the Selah.

7. Hasten, answer me, Jehovah—my spirit fails—hide not thy face from me—or I shall be confounded with (those) going down (to) the pit. The meaning of the first clause is, hasten to grant my petition. Fails, is spent or exhausted. See above, on Ps. xxviii. 1. xxxix. 11 (10.) lxix. 18 (17.) cii. 3 (2.) That he is in extremity, is urged as a reason why God cannot fail to hear and answer him. This verse begins the main prayer of the psalm, that in vs. 1, 2, being merely introductory to the complaint in vs. 3—6, which is itself introductory to the prayer that follows.

8. Let me hear in the morning thy mercy ; let me know the way that I must go, for unto thee I raise my soul. All these are familiar thoughts and terms to the readers of the psalms of David, and may be severally found in Ps. xxv. 1—4. li. 10 (8.) lix. 17 (16.) The way that I must go, not merely to be right, but to be safe and happy ; the way of safety as well as that of duty. See above, on Ps. cxlii. 7 (6.)

9. Free me from my enemies, Jehovah, with thee I hide myself. With the first clause compare Ps. lix. 12 (11.) cxlii. 7 ; with the second, Ps. xxvii. 5. xxxi. 21 (20.) The form of expression here, however, is peculiar and original. The literal meaning is to thee I cover, i. e. cover myself, the reflexive use of the Hebrew verb being clear from Gen. xxxviii. 14. Deut. xxii. 12. Jon. iii. 6. The force of the pregnant construction is well though freely given in the English version, I flee unto thee to hide me.

10. Teach me to do thy will, for thou (art) my God. Thy spirit (is) good ; let it guide me in level ground. This is a prayer for external safety, and at the same time for that spiritual guidance, without which it is unattainable. Compare Ps. v. 9 (8.) xxvi. 12. xxvii. 11. xl. 9 (8.) cxxxix. 10, 24. Some make but two clauses, and instead of the short proposition in the middle, read, let thy good spirit guide me etc. or let thy spirit, (which is) good guide me etc. Level ground, literally earth (or land) of evenness ; (or straightness.) See above, on Ps. xxvi. 12.

11. For thy name's sake, Jehovah, thou wilt quicken me; in thy righteousness thou wilt bring out of distress my soul. Here again we have an accumulation of Davidic ideas and expressions. For thy name's sake, as in Ps. xxiii. 3. xxv. 11. xxxi. 4. cix. 21. Thou wilt quicken me, as in Ps. cxxxviii. 7. In thy righteousness, as in Ps. xxxi. 2. Bring my soul out of trouble, as in Ps. xxv. 15. xxxiv. 18 (17.) cxlii. 8 (7.)

12. And in thy mercy thou wilt destroy my enemies and cause to perish all that vex my soul; for I (am) thy servant. With the first clause compare Ps. xxxi. 17 (16.) xviii. 41 (40.) Some find here an allusion to the promise in Deut. vii. 24. Vexers, adversaries, persecutors, of my soul. Thy servant, not merely a believer but a chosen instrument, not merely one of thy people but their chief and representative, and as such entitled to deliverance, both for their sake and my own. In these two verses, the form of direct petition is insensibly exchanged for that of confident anticipation.

PSALM CXLIV.

THIS is a kind of supplement or counterpart to Ps. xviii, in which the view there taken of David's personal experience is applied to the anticipated case of his successors. The design thus assumed accounts for the position of the psalm in the collection. That its being placed precisely here is not fortuitous, may be inferred from its furnishing a kind of link between the urgent entreaties of the preceding psalms and the triumphant praise of those which follow. The Davidic origin of this psalm is as marked as that of any in the Psalter. The accumulation of Davidic phrases is confined to the first part, while the last is independent and original, a fact entirely inconsistent with the supposition of a later compilation. The Psalmist thanks God for his protection of himself and of mankind in general, vs. 1—4, prays for deliverance from present dangers, vs. 5—8, expresses his confident anticipation of a favourable answer, vs. 9—10, renews his prayer, not only for himself but for the chosen people, vs. 11—14, and felicitates them that they are such, v. 15.

1. By David. Blessed be Jehovah, my Rock, the (one) training my hands for fight, my fingers for war. See above, on Ps. xviii. 35, 47 (34, 46), where most of these expressions have already been explained. Fight and war are both verbs and nouns in English, but the Hebrew words are nouns with the article prefixed. David here begins by referring all the successes of himself and his successors to Jehovah.

2. My mercy and my fortress, my high place, and a deliverer for me, my shield and (he) in whom I trust, the (one) subduing my people. No less than five of these descriptive epithets are taken from a single verse of Ps. xviii, viz. v. 3 (2.) Peculiar to the place before us is my mercy, i. e. my God of mercy. See above, on Ps. lix. 18 (17.) The benefit of these relations to Jehovah David claims not merely for himself but for his royal race, which was closed and yet perpetuated in the Messiah. He in whom I trust, literally, and in him I trust. My people, in its widest sense, including Israel and the Gentiles who were to be added to the kingdom of David under the reign of the Messiah. Compare Ps. xviii. 44, 48 (43, 47) with the parallel passages in 2 Samuel.

3. Jehovah, what (is) man, that thou shouldst know him, the son of man, that thou shouldst think of him? The greatness of God's goodness is enhanced by a view of man's insignificance and unworthiness. The original construction seems to be, what is man? (nothing), and (yet) thou knowest him etc. To know is here to recognise as being in existence, to take notice of. The first man is the generic term, the second one denoting weakness. See above, on Ps. viii. 5 (4), and compare 2 Sam vii. 18.

4. Man to vanity is like; his days (are) as a passing shadow. He cannot therefore be a worthy object, in himself, of the divine regard and favour. With the first clause compare Ps. xxxix. 6, 7 (5, 6), lxii. 10 (9); with the second, Ps. cii. 12 (11.) ciii. 15.

5. Jehovah, bow thy heavens and come down; touch the mountains and let them smoke. With the first clause compare Ps. xviii. 10 (9.) What God is there described as doing, he is here besought to do again. With the last clause compare Ps. civ. 32 Mountains, in all such connections, would necessarily suggest the idea of states and kingdoms. See above, on Ps. xlvi. 3, 4 (2, 3.)

6. Lighten lightning and scatter them; send out thy arrows and confound them. The first word in Hebrew is a verb occurring nowhere else, and composed of the same radicals with the common word for lightning which immediately follows. For the meaning of the other terms, see above, on Ps. xviii. 15 (14), and compare the parallel passage, 2 Sam. xxii. 15 (14), with which the writer of the psalm before us was certainly acquainted, as appears from his occasional use of its peculiar readings.

7. Send thy hands from on high; rid me and free me from (the) many waters, from the hand of aliens. With the first clause compare Ps. xviii. 17 (16.) For hand we have here the plural hands, and for the two verbs there used two substantially equivalent, the first of which has the sense here given to it only in this place and the cognate languages, and is therefore well represented by the less usual English word rid. With the last clause, compare

Ps. xviii. 45, 46 (44, 45), where the phrase sons of strangeness (or of foreign parts) has been explained already.

8. Whose mouth speaks fraud, and their right hand (is) a right hand of falsehood. The word translated fraud is properly a negative meaning vanity or emptiness, but applied to the want of moral goodness and especially of truth. See above, on Ps. xxiv. 4. The right hand is mentioned in allusion either to the practice of swearing with uplifted hand (Ps. cvi. 26), or to that of striking hands in bargains (2 Kings x. 15.) There seems to be reference, in this verse, to the feigned obedience of the enemy, Ps. xviii. 45 (44.)

9. Oh God, a new song I will sing to thee ; with a lyre of ten (strings) I will play (or make music) to thee. See above, on Ps. xxxiii. 2, 3, where David exhorts others to do what he here resolves and vows to do himself. The new song still implies a new occasion for it, so that he here begins to anticipate the answer to his foregoing prayers.

10. The (one) giving salvation to kings ; the (one) ridding David his servant from an evil sword. This mode of connecting sentences, by a participle agreeing with a noun in the foregoing context, is a characteristic feature of Ps. xviii. See vol. i. pp. 144, 145. The kings particularly meant are the theocratical sovereigns, the royal family of David. Ridding, the participle of the verb so rendered in v. 7. David (as) his servant, because he is his servant, in the sense repeatedly explained already. See above, on Ps. cxliii. 2, 12. David speaks of himself by name, not only here but in Ps. xviii. 51 (50.) lxi. 7 (6.) lxxiii. 12 (11) 2 Sam. vii. 26. An evil sword, not only dangerous but wicked. Compare Ps. xxii. 21 (20.)

11. Rid me and free me from the hand of aliens, whose mouth

speaks fraud, and whose right hand (is) a right hand of falsehood
 In resuming the language of direct petition, the terms of vs. 7, 8, are studiously repeated, as if to show that this prayer is parallel to that, and not an addition to it.

12. So that our sons (may be) as plants grown large in their youth, our daughters as corner-stones hewn (for) the building of the temple. The reminiscences or imitations of Ps. xviii suddenly cease here, and are followed by a series of original, peculiar, and for the most part no doubt antique expressions. On the supposition that the title is correct in making David the author, this is natural enough. On any other supposition it is unaccountable, unless by the gratuitous assumption, that this is a fragment of an older composition, a mode of reasoning by which any thing may be either proved or disproved. The first word in Hebrew is the relative pronoun, and the literal meaning of the clause is, (by) which (or in consequence of which) our sons, etc. The which refers to the deliverance prayed for in the preceding verse. Grown large, literally magnified or made great. The common version (grown up in their youth) has a paradoxical appearance, arising from the ambiguity of our phrase grown up, which is applied (like the Greek ἡλικία) both to age and stature. The word translated corner-stones has the same sense in Zech. ix. 15. The corner-stones are mentioned as those which were hewn and polished with peculiar care. Likeness or model would agree better with the usage of the Hebrew word (בְּנֵי־בִּינָה), but its primary sense, as a derivative of the verb (בָּנָה) to build, is here still more appropriate. Most interpreters give the last word the vague sense of a palace, considered as a splendid building. There is something, however, far more striking in the translation temple, found in the Prayer-Book and the ancient versions. The omission of the article is a poetic license of perpetual occurrence. The temple was the great architectural model and standard of comparison, and particularly remarkable for the great size and skilful elaboration of its foundation-stones, some of which, there is reason to believe, have remained undisturbed since the time of Solomon. See Robinson's Palestine, vol. i, pp. 422—426.

13. Our garners full, affording from kind to kind ; our flocks bearing thousands, multiplied by myriads, in our streets. From kind to kind seems to denote not only variety but regular succession, as expressed in Hengstenberg's version, one kind after another. Compare Ps. lxxxiv. 8 (7.) The participles in the next clause are highly idiomatic and scarcely reproducible in any other language. A somewhat similar example occurs above, Ps. lxxix. 32 (31.) But there both forms are active, whereas here we have one active and one passive participle, formed directly from the Hebrew words denoting a thousand and a myriad, the last of which is a derivative of the verb to increase or multiply, and would therefore necessarily suggest that idea. See above, on Ps. iii. 7 (6.) lxxviii. 18 (17.) Streets, though not incorrect, is an inadequate translation of the Hebrew word (תַּרְצוֹת), which means external spaces, streets as opposed to the inside of houses, fields or country as opposed to a whole town. Here it includes not only roads but fields.

14. Our oxen loaded—no damage and no loss—and to complain in our streets. The first particular implies abundance. For the use of oxen as beasts of burden, see 1 Chr. xii. 40. Damage and loss, literally, breach and going forth. Complaint, literally, cry, but especially for loss of the fruits of the earth. See Isa. xxiv. 11. Some give the sentence an entirely different meaning, by supposing the word translated oxen to mean princes, as it does in Zech. ix. 7. xii. 5, 6, and giving the participle joined with it the Chaldee sense of raised erect or upright. Going out then means going out to war, as in Am. v. 3, breach the incursion of an enemy, and cry a war-cry. But the first Hebrew word in question (תַּרְצוֹת) is applied only to the chiefs of Edom (Gen. xxxvi. 15), except in the latest books of the Old Testament, such as Zeechariah; and we naturally look for oxen after sheep, as in Ps. viii. 8 (7.)

15. Happy the people (with) whom (it is) thus! Happy the people whose God (is) Jehovah! The clauses are not antithetical but equivalent. The people means the (chosen) people, Israel, with whom, in prosperous times, it was thus, and was thus for the very reason that Jehovah was their God.

PSALM CXLV.

THIS has been happily characterized as the "new song" promised in Ps. cxliv. 9. In other words, it is the song of praise, corresponding to the didactic, penitential, and supplicatory psalms of this series. In form it is an alphabetical psalm, and like others of that class (see vol. i. p. 206) admits of no analysis, being made up of variations on a single theme, the righteousness and goodness of the Lord to men in general, to his own people in particular, and more especially to those who suffer. The letter nun is wanting, being omitted, as some suppose, for the sake of having three equal stanzas, each containing seven verses. The Septuagint supplies the omission, in a very inartificial manner, by anticipating v. 17 before v. 15, with a simple change of righteous (רַחֲמִים) to faithful (אֱמִנָּה), as in Ps. cxi. 7.

1. Praise. By David. I will exalt thee, my God, the King and will bless thy name to eternity and perpetuity. This is the only case in which the word Praise stands alone as the designation or description of a psalm. It evidently bears an antithetical relation to the title Prayer in Ps. cxlii. 1, the rather as the Hebrew words (נָתַתָּהּ and נָתַתָּהּ) are still more alike than their English equivalents, differing only in a single letter. I will exalt thee, as in Ps. xxx. 2 (1), where the reason is expressed that is here implied, to wit, that God had exalted him. The king, the only true king, the king of kings, by whom they are put up and down, protected and punished. See above, on Ps. cxliv. 10, and compare Ps. v. 3 (2.) xx. 10 (9.) xxiv. 8, 10. xxix. 10. xciii. 1. xcv. 3.

vi. 10. xcix. 1. The regal honours paid to himself by others David here transfers as due to God alone. Bless thy name, i. e. reverently praise it. See above, on Ps. v. 12 (11.) xxxiv. 2 (1.) ciii. 1. Forever and ever, in reference not merely to himself but to his royal race, which is to live forever. See above, on Ps. cxxxviii. 8.

2. Every day will I bless thee and praise thy name to eternity and perpetuity. Compare Ps. lxviii. 20 (19.) lxix. 31 (30.) xcii. 2, 3. Every day denotes constancy and regularity.

3. Great (is) Jehovah and to be praised exceedingly, and to his greatness there is no search, i. e. it is unsearchable. The first clause is quoted in Ps. xlviii. 2 (1.) Greatly to be praised, as in Ps. xviii. 4 (3.) xvi. 4. cxiii. 3. His greatness, as displayed in act, his great performance or performances. See above, on Ps. lxxi. 21. With the last words of the verse compare Ps. xl. 6 (5.)

4. Generation to generation lauds thy deeds, and thy mighty doings they declare. With the first clause compare Ps. xix. 3 (2.) The verbs are of the future form, lauds and will laud, declare and will declare. The first verb is the one used in Ps. lxiii. 4 (3.) cxvii. 1. Mighty doings, literally, mights or powers, but always used, like greatness, in an active not an abstract sense. See above, on Ps. xx. 7 (6.) cvi. 2. They declare may agree with men indefinitely, or with the double generation in the first clause, which, however, is there construed with a verb in the singular.

5. (Of) the beauty of the honour of thy majesty, and the words of thy wonders, I will muse (or meditate.) The accumulation of synonymous expressions in the first clause has been falsely represented as a proof of later date and a corrupted taste, whereas it only proves intensity of admiration. For examples of the same thing in undisputed psalms of David, see above, Ps. xviii. 3 (2.) lxii. 8 (7). Beauty and majesty, as in Ps. xlv. 4 (3.) Honour or glory, as in Ps. xix. 1. Words of thy wonders are the wonders or wondrous deeds themselves, considered as subjects of discourse or celebration. See above, on Ps. lxxv. 4 (3.) cv. 27. I will muse, as in Ps. lxxvii. 13 (12.) cxix. 15, 23, 27, 48, 78, 148.

6. And the force of thy dread (deeds) they utter—and (as to thy greatness, I will recount it. Dread, literally, feared, and then to be feared, as praised means to be praised in v. 3 above. Utter, literally say, precisely as in Ps. xl. 11 (10.) Greatness, or according to the reading in the text of the Hebrew Bible, greatnesses, i. e. great deeds, as might means mighty deeds in v. 5.

7. The memory of thy great goodness they pour forth, and (of) thy righteousness they sing (or shout.) Memory, as in Ps. vi. 6 (5.) Great goodness is the order of the words not only in English but in Hebrew, where it is unusual. See above, on Ps. lxxxix. 51 (50.) Pour forth, as in Ps. xix. 3 (2.) lxxviii. 2. Compare Ps. lix. 8 (7.) Thy righteousness, as in Ps. xxxi. 2 (1.) li. 16 (14.) cxliii. 1. Sing or shout for joy. The construction is like that in Ps. li. 16 (14.) lix. 17 (16.)

8. Gracious and compassionate (is) Jehovah, slow to anger and great (is) mercy. Compare Ps. lxxxvi. 15 (14.) ciii. 8. cxi. 4

Instead of the usual expression (רַב) much or abundant, we have here great, in allusion to its previous use in vs. 3, 6.

9. Good (is) Jehovah to all, and his compassions (are) over all his works. All, literally, the all, the whole universe. See above, on Ps. cxix. 91. Over or upon, the first suggesting the idea of a covering, the second that of a descent from above. His works, the things which he has made, his creatures. See above, on Ps. ciii. 22. The argument implied is, how much more to his own people, the creatures of his grace. See above, on Ps. cxxxviii. 8.

10. All thy creatures, oh Jehovah, praise (or thank) thee, and thy saints bless thee. The future forms, as usual, denote that it is so and will be so. The superfluous ן in the last word is an orthographical peculiarity like that in Ps. cxxxix. 3. cxl. 8. cxli. 8. As saints (or gracious ones) are more than creatures, so to bless is more than to praise. See above, on v. 1.

11. The glory of thy reign they utter, and thy might they speak. Compare Ps. ciii. 19. Thy reign or kingdom, which is universal. The whole phrase may mean thy royal dignity or honour.

12. To make known to the sons of man his mighty deeds, and the glory of the majesty of his reign (or kingdom.) Some give the infinitive the force of a gerund, by making known; but the true sense seems to be, so as to (or so that they) make known. See above, on Ps. lxxviii. 18.

13. Thy reign is a reign of all eternities, and thy dominion in generatim and generation. These words are also found in Dan. iii. 33. iv. 31. The meaning of the last clause is, thy dominion still exists and shall exist in every successive generation.

14. An upholder (is) Jehovah for all the falling, a lifter up for all the bowed down. The first word in each clause is properly a participle, here used as a noun, and therefore followed by the preposition to or for. Translated in either way, the words necessarily suggest the idea of habitual action. With the first clause compare Ps. xxxvii. 17, 24. liv. 6 (4.) cxix. 116.

15. The eyes of all unto thee (look and) wait, and thou givest them their food in its season. The verb in the first clause means to wait, expect, or hope, but is here construed with the preposition to or towards, which implies the act of turning or looking to the object confided in. Givest, literally giving, i. e. (art habitually) giving. See above, on Ps. civ. 27, where these words are quoted.

16. Opening thy hand and satisfying to every living (thing its) desire, or the desire of every living thing. Another construction, preferred by some interpreters, is, satisfying (giving satisfaction) to every living thing (in its) desire, viz. that which it desires. See the imitation of this verse in Ps. civ. 28, and compare Ps. ciii. 5. Acts xiv. 17. The words satisfy and will (or desire) are combined, as here, in Deut xxxiii. 23.

17. Righteous (is) Jehovah in all his ways and merciful in all his works. Justice and mercy are not mentioned here as opposites, but rather as equivalents, the goodness of God being really included in the rectitude so frequently ascribed to him.

18. Near (is) Jehovah to all calling upon him, to all calling upon him in truth, i. e. sincerely, with importunate desire and strong confidence. With this verse compare Ps. xxxiv. 7, 19.

19. The will of his fearers he will do, and their cry he will hear, and will save them. He will do what they desire, or grant their prayer, especially their prayer for help in time of danger and distress, as intimated in the last clause. Compare Ps. xxxiv. 10, 16 (9, 15.) xxxvii. 40.

20. Jehovah keeps all that love him, and all the wicked will he destroy. The fearers of v. 19 and the lovers of this verse are identical, which shows that godly fear and love are not incompatible. Keeps, literally keeping, as in v. 15, from all danger and distress, preserving.

21. The praise of Jehovah shall my mouth speak, and all flesh shall bless his holy name forever, or retaining the idiomatic form of the original, all flesh shall bless the name of his holiness (or his name of holiness) to eternity and perpetuity. The use of the word praise connects this verse with the title or inscription in v. 1, which is thereby justified or proved to be correct. All flesh, as in Ps. lxxv. 3 (2.) His holy name, as in Ps. xxxiii. 21.

PSALM CXLVI.

THIS psalm may be divided into two equal parts, the first of which describes the happiness of those who trust in God and not in man, vs. 1—5, while the second gives the reason, drawn from the divine perfections, vs. 6—10. The psalm is distinguished from the Davidic series which precedes it (cxxxviii—cxlv) by its whole internal character. At the same time its coincidences of expression with the one immediately before it show that it was meant to be used in connection with it, and may therefore be regarded as the closing psalm of the whole series beginning with

Ps. cxxxv, and belonging to the time of Haggai and Zechariah, to which the psalm before us is expressly referred in the Septuagint Version.

1. Hallelujah! Praise, oh my soul, Jehovah! See above, Ps. ciii. 1, 22. civ. 1, 35. The Hallelujah never appears in any psalm which bears the name of David, and is indeed as characteristic of the later psalms as the Selah is of the more ancient.

2. I will praise Jehovah while I live; I will make music to my God while I still (exist.) For the literal meaning of these words, see above; on Ps. civ. 33, from which they are borrowed, with the unimportant change of sing to praise.

3. Trust ye not in princes, in the son of man, to whom there is no salvation, who cannot save either himself or others, but is wholly dependent upon God. Compare Ps. xl. 5 (4.) lxxv. 7, 8 (6, 7.) cviii. 13. cxvi. 11. cxliv. 10. This may be regarded as an exhortation to men in general from Israel, an exhortation founded on his own experience.

4. Forth goes his spirit, he returns to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish. For the meaning of the first clause, see above, on Ps. civ. 29. The primary idea of breath and the secondary one of spirit run into each other in the usage of the Hebrew word (רוח), so that either may be expressed in the translation, without entirely excluding the other. His thoughts, his vain notions or ambitious schemes.

5. Happy he whose help is the God of Jacob, (and) his reliance on Jehovah his God. Whose help, literally, in whose help, i. e. engaged, employed in it, or more probably, among whose helpers Compare Ps. xlv. 10 (9.) liv. 6 (4.) xcix. 6. cxviii. 7. The divine name (יהוה) here used suggests the idea of almighty power, as opposed to that of human weakness. Reliance, literally, expectation, hope; but the first idea is necessarily suggested by the preposition on.

6. Who made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that (is) in them—the (one) keeping truth forever. Two reasons are here given for thus relying upon God; his almighty power, as exercised and proved in the creation of the world, and his unchangeable fidelity. See above, Ps. xxv. 5. Who made, literally, making, with the usual reference to God's creative power as still exerted in the sustentation of the universe. See above, on Ps. lxxv. 7 (6.) cxxi. 2. cxliv. 2.

7. Doing justice to the oppressed—giving bread to the hungry—Jehovah, freeing (or the liberator of) the bound. He is not only able but accustomed to relieve those in distress, of whom several distinct classes are here specified as samples. Compare Ps. xxxvii. 19. lxxviii. 6, 7 (5, 6.) cvii. 5, 9, 10. cxlv. 14. Hunger and captivity are both familiar figures for spiritual evils, as well as literal designations of external ones, both which may here be considered as included.

8. Jehovah opens (the eyes of) the blind; Jehovah raises up the bowed down; Jehovah loves the righteous. The ellipsis in the first clause is not so harsh in Hebrew as in English, because the verb (פָּתַח) is almost confined, in usage, to the eyes, and would at once suggest them to a Hebrew reader. All the verbs are of the participial form, opening, raising, loving, i. e. continually doing so. The first clause is applicable both to bodily and mental blindness. Compare Deut. xxviii. 29. Isai. lix. 10. Job xii. 25. The second clause is borrowed from Ps. cxlv. 14.

9. Jehovah preserves strangers; orphan and widow he relieves; and the way of wicked men makes crooked. The stranger, the orphan, and the widow are constantly presented in the Law as objects of compassion and beneficence. See above, on Ps. lxxviii. 6, 7 (5, 6.) Relieves, restores, raises up from their low condition. As a straight path is an emblem of prosperity, to render one's path crooked is to involve him in calamity. The same verb is applied, in a moral sense, to the perverse conduct of the wicked, Ps. cxix. 78.

10. Jehovah (reigns and) shall reign to eternity; thy Goa, oh Zion, to generation and generation. Hallelujah (praise ye Jah): The Psalm closes with a grand sentence from the Song of Moses, Ex. xv. 18, to which a parallel clause is added, and a concluding Hallelujah, winding up the whole series of psalms, supposed to have been sung at the completion of the second temple.

P S A L M C X L V I I .

A SONG of praise to Jehovah on account of his goodness to his creatures generally, and to his church or chosen people in particular. Both these themes run through the psalm; but one is predominant in the first part, vs. 1—11; the other in the second, vs. 12—20. The four remaining psalms (cxlvii—cl), connected together, and distinguished from what goes before, by the Hallelujah with which they all begin and end; by their joyous tone, unmixed with lamentation or complaint; by their frequent allusions to some great deliverance recently experienced; and by the peculiar way in which they bring together the exhibitions of God's glory in the works of nature and in his dealings with the church; have not improbably been represented as a series, intended to commemorate the completion of the walls of Jerusalem by Nehemiah, an event described in the history itself, as putting an end to the reproach of Israel, and restoring the Holy City to its proper rank. See Neh. i. 3. ii. 5, 17. vi. 6, 7, 15, 16. vii. 4. ix. 6, 13, 14. x. 29. xii. 27, 35, 41, 43.

1. Hallelujah (praise ye Jah), for it is good to celebrate our God, for it is sweet (and) praise becoming. This is made up of the beginnings of three other psalms. See above, Ps. xcii. 2 (1.) cxxxv. 3. xxxiii. 1. Celebrate, make music to, with voice and instrument. See above, on Ps. vii. 18 (17.) Instead of it is sweet some read he is lovely, i. e. a worthy object of supreme affection, as in Ps. cxxxv. 3. But even there the construction is a doubtful one, and here the first proposed above is recommended by the fact that the epithets before and after relate not to God himself but to his praise.

2. Building Jerusalem (is) Jehovah; the outcasts of Israel he gathers. The rebuilding of the walls in the days of Nehemiah, may be said to have completed the fulfilment of the promise in Isai. xi. 12. lvi. 8. Compare Ps. cvii. 3.

3. The (one) healing the broken-hearted and binding up their wounds. This was true as a general description, and specially exemplified in the deliverance which Israel had experienced. See above, on Ps. xxxiv. 19 (18.) ciii. 3, and compare Isai. lxi. 1.

4. Telling the number of the stars—to all of them names he calls. The God who thus provides for Israel is the God of nature no less than of grace. Telling, counting, reckoning, estimating. Not determining beforehand, but simply doing what man cannot. See Gen. xv. 5, and compare Gen. xiii. 16, Num. xxiii. 10. Isai. lxxv. 12. He not only counts but names them, calling them all by name. The verse is borrowed from Isai. xl. 26, where as here

God's knowledge and control of nature is presented as a source of consolation to his people.

5. Great is our Lord and of much power ; to his understanding there is no number, i. e. it is incalculable and immense. Compare Isai. xl. 26, 28. Of much power, or abundant in strength.

6. Raising up the humble (is) Jehovah, casting down the wicked to the very earth. See above, Ps. cxlvi. 8, 9. To the very earth, literally, even to the earth.

7. Respond to Jehovah with thanksgiving ; make music to our God with a harp. The first verb has its proper sense of answering or responding, as in Ps. cxix. 172. It may be doubted whether it ever has that of simply singing. Respond, i. e. to his manifold favours.

8. The (one) covering the heavens with clouds—the (one) providing for the earth rain—the (one) causing the mountains to put forth grass. The grass as produced by means of the rain, and the rain by means of the clouds. See above, on Ps. civ. 13.

9. Giving to the cattle its food—to the young ravens which cry. The first noun may also be translated beast, but still with reference to domestic animals, with which is contrasted in the other clause the raven, as a wild bird, unconnected with mankind, and as some suppose with allusion to its harsh and piercing cry. See above, on Ps. civ. 21. cxlv. 15, and compare Job xxxviii. 41. Young ravens, literally, sons of the raven.

10. Not in the strength of a horse does he delight ; not with the legs of a man is he pleased. The best explanation of the singular expressions in the last clause is, that the whole verse was intended to describe horse and foot, or cavalry and infantry, as forming the military strength of armies. It is not to those who trust in these that God is disposed to extend favour, nor do these advantages at all attract him.

11. Pleased (is) Jehovah with those fearing him, with those hoping for his mercy. This implies the want of secular advantages, or at least an absence of reliance on them, and a sense of dependence upon God alone.

12. Laud, oh Jerusalem, Jehovah! Praise thy God, oh Zion! Here begins the second division of the psalm, in which the goodness of God to his people is the theme, and the people itself the object of address.

13. For he hath strengthened the bars of thy gates; he hath blessed thy sons in the midst of thee. Although the first clause admits of a general figurative application, it seems to contain an evident allusion to the historical occasion of the psalm, or at least to favour the opinion, that it was designed to celebrate the renewed fortifications of the Holy City.

14. (It is) he that makes thy border peace, (and with) the fat of wheat he satisfies thee. He that makes, literally, the (one) placing. Border is put for all that it contains or bounds, thy territory or domain. To make it peace is to make it peaceful or to give it peace. See Isai. liv. 12. With the last clause compare Ps. lxxxi. 17. Deut. xxxii. 14.

15. He that sendeth his commandment (upon) earth—very swiftly runs his word. The construction is like that in the preceding verse. He that sendeth, the (one) sending. Commandment, literally, saying, what he says. Very swiftly, literally, even to swiftness. The authoritative word of God is here personified as his messenger or agent, whose swift running signifies the prompt execution of the divine will.

16. He that gives snow like wool, hoar-frost like ashes sprinkles. As easily as a man scatters wool or ashes, does God cover the earth with snow or frost. The selection of phenomena peculiar to winter may have reference to the season when the psalm was written or originally sung. At the same time they were probably designed to serve as emblems of the long distress, to which the Restoration put an end, as spring does to winter. The comparisons in this verse are less striking to us than to the people of countries where snow and frost are less familiar.

17. He that sendeth his ice like crumbs. Before his cold who can stand? The second noun means scraps or morsels, but in usage is specially applied to food. See Gen. xviii. 5. Judg. xix. 5. This seems to be descriptive of hail, which God sends upon the earth as easily and freely as man scatters crumbs or throws away the refuse of his food. The allusion to the feeding of domesticated animals, which some assume, is needless though admissible.

18. He sends his word and melts them—he makes his wind blow—waters flow. Sends his word, utters his command. The plural pronoun (them) refers to snow, frost, and ice, in vs. 16, 17. The winds meant are the warm winds of the spring, attended by a general thaw.

19. Declaring his word to Jacob, his statutes and his judgments to Israel. The God of Nature is the God of Revelation. He who thus controls the elements and seasons is the God of Israel, and will work spiritual changes corresponding to these natural phenomena, for the benefit of the people whom he has entrusted with the revelation of his will.

20. He has not done so to every nation—and (as for) judgments, they know nothing of them. This revelation to Israel is peculiar and exclusive. Every nation, and by implication, any one. This is indeed the only form in which that idea could be expressed in Hebrew. The last clause declares the other nations ignorant not only of his laws or judgments, but of any that deserve the name.

P S A L M C X L V I I I .

• THE universe, in all its parts, is summoned to praise God as its maker, and as infinitely worthy of its adoration. The invitation is addressed, in the first instance, to heaven and its inhabitants, exhorting them to praise God as their maker and preserver, vs. 1—6. It is then addressed to the earth and its inhabitants, exhorting them to praise him for his infinite perfection, as displayed in his works, but especially in his dealings with his chosen people, vs. 7—14. Even the most skeptical critics are constrained to acknowledge that this psalm and the two which follow are admirably suited to their purpose.

1. Hallelujah! Praise ye Jehovah from the heavens! Praise him in the heights! This verse designates the place, or part of the creation, from which the praise is to proceed. Heights, or high-places, is a simple equivalent to heavens, the plural form of which it takes by assimilation. Compare the singular in Ps. xviii. 17 (16.) The preposition from denotes the direction of the sound, the preposition in the place where it is uttered.

2. Praise ye him, all his angels! Praise ye him, all his hosts

As this last expression is applied both to the angels and the heavenly bodies, it here affords a natural transition from the one to the other. See above, on Ps. xxiv. 10. xxix. 1. ciii. 21.

3. Praise ye hîm, sun and moon! Praise him, all ye stars of light! This is a specification of the general term, his hosts, in v. 2. Stars of light is a beautiful poetical expression for bright or shining stars.

4. Praise him, ye heavens of heavens, and ye waters which are above the heavens! The object of address in the first clause is the highest heaven, the heaven of that which is heaven to us. See above, on Ps. lxxviii. 34 (33), and compare Deut. x. 14. 1 Kings viii. 27. 2 Cor. xii. 2. The waters meant are the watery clouds above the lower heavens, as in Gen. i. 7. See above, on Ps. civ. 3

5. Let them praise the name of Jehovah, for he commanded and they were created. The direct invitation to the heavens is followed by a statement of the reason why they should comply with it, expressed in the third person, as if addressed to others. The pronoun he is emphatic. (It was) he (that) commanded (and no other.) See above, on Ps. xxxiii. 9, and compare Gen. i. 3.

6. And made them stand to perpetuity and eternity; a limit he gave (them) and they cannot pass (it.) The immutability ascribed to the frame of nature, Ps. lxxii. 5. lxxxix. 3, 37 (2, 36), is not absolute but relative to the will of the creator. All that is required by the context in such cases is, that they cannot change in opposition to his will or independently of it. See Ps. cii. 27. The first word in the second clause is here used in its primary sense of a definite boundary or limit, from which may be readily deduced the usual one of statute or permanent enactment. See above, on Ps. ii. 7. As the last verb is in the singular number, the most obvious construction is the one given in the English Bible, a decree which shall not pass. Compare Matth. v. 18. But the highest authorities appear to be agreed that the analogy of Job xiv. 5. Ps. civ. 9. Jer. v. 22, requires the verb to be taken in the sense of transcending or transgressing, and construed with the aggregate of the heavenly bodies.

7. Praise Jehovah from the earth, ye dragons and all depths. Here begins the second part, in which the address is to the earth and its inhabitants. From the earth is in antithesis to from the heavens in v. 1. Earth here includes land and water; hence the last clause makes exclusive mention of the latter, as the word translated dragons is applied to huge aquatic animals, (Ps. lxxiv. 13), and the one translated depths to large bodies of water (Ps. xxxiii. 7.) As the first, however, sometimes means serpents (Ps. xci. 13), it may here be the connecting link between land and water.

8. Fire and hail, snow and vapour, stormy wind doing his word. The address here passes to the inanimate and unconscious agencies of nature. Fire and hail, as in Ps. cv. 32. The fire meant is commonly supposed to be lightning; but according to Hengstenberg the word is to be taken in its ordinary sense and is separated from its natural attendant smoke (for such is the meaning of the Hebrew word elsewhere, e. g. Ps. cxix. 83) only for the purpose of contrasting hot and cold, white and black, which seems a little fanciful and far-fetched. The storm-wind (or stormy wind) is mentioned as a natural agent the least likely to be under control, and it is expressly described as doing God's word, i. e. executing his command. See above, on Ps. ciii. 20. civ. 4.

9. The mountains and all hills, fruit-trees and all cedars. Not fruitful trees, as distinguished from barren trees, but fruit-trees

(literally, tree of fruit), as distinguished from forest trees, here represented by the cedar, which is usually spoken of in scripture as the noblest species, and therefore called the cedar of God, Ps lxxx. 11 (10.)

10. The wild (beast) and all cattle, creeping thing and flying fowl. The contrast in the first clause is analogous to that between fruit-trees and cedars in v. 9. The Hebrew word (צִמְרֵךְ) translated creeping thing has no exact equivalent in English. It seems strictly to denote animal or vital motion, or as a concrete term whatever so moves, and is even applied to aquatic animals, Ps. civ. 25. But when used distinctively, it denotes the smaller classes of terrestrial animals, including insects, reptiles, and the smallest quadrupeds. It is here added simply to complete the expression of the general idea, all animals whatever. Flying fowl, literally, bird of wing. The first of the Hebrew words is specially applied to the smaller birds, and sometimes specifically to the sparrow. See above, on Ps. xi. 1. lxxxiv. 4 (3.) civ. 17. cxxiv. 7. This and the preceding item in the catalogue, suggesting the idea of the smallest animals, may possibly have been used to denote the universality of the call here made upon all creatures, from the greatest to the smallest, to praise God their maker.

11. Kings of the earth and all nations, chiefs and all judges of the earth. He here passes from the lower animals to man. Kings and the nations whom they represent. Princes is not an exact translation of the Hebrew (שָׂרֵי צָבָא), which is especially, though not exclusively, applied to military leaders of various rank, and may therefore best be represented by the English chiefs or chieftains.

12. Young men and also maidens, old men with children. The obvious meaning of this verse is, all men, without distinction of sex or age. There is no need, therefore, of refining on the several particulars, or undertaking to explain why old men and young men are both mentioned, since neither of them could have been omitted without failing to accomplish the design of the enumeration. For the etymology and primary meaning of the first word in Hebrew, see above, on Ps. lxxviii. 63, where it stands in precisely the same combination. The two nouns in the last clause may be considered as of common gender.

13. Let (all these) praise the name of Jehovah, for exalted is his name alone, his glory is above earth and heaven. The mention of earth and heaven shows that the first verb relates not merely to that which immediately precedes, but to the whole enumeration of God's creatures with which the psalm is occupied. See above, on Ps. civ. 27. Exalted is his name, as in Isai. xii. 4. His glory or majesty, a Hebrew word especially applied to royal dignity. See above, on Ps. xxi. 6 (5.) xlv. 4 (3.) xevi. 6. civ. 1. cxi. 3. Above earth and heaven, i. e, superior to their mere material splendor, or on earth and heaven, i. e. placed upon them as a crown. See above, on Ps. viii. 2 (1.) lvii. 6 (5.)

14. And he has raised up a horn for his people—praise for all his saints—for the children of Israel—a people near to him. Hallelujah! While all the creatures before mentioned have abundant cause to praise God for his infinite perfection and his goodness to themselves, a peculiar obligation is incumbent on his people; first, for his distinguishing favour through all periods of their history; and then, for a special mercy recently experienced, namely, the restoration from captivity, now completed by the renewal of the temple and the reconstruction of the city walls. This restoration is described, by a favourite Davidic figure, as exalting or lifting up the horn of Israel. See above, on Ps. lxxv. 6, 7 (5, 6.) xcii. 11 (10.) The previous condition of the chosen people might be well represented by the opposite figure, used in Job xvi. 15. Raised a horn for his people seems to be only another way of saying raised the horn of his people. The first form of expression may have been here used for the purpose of assimilating this clause to the next, where praise is still dependent on the verb at the beginning, and to raise up praise for his people is to give them fresh occasion of still higher praise than they had ever yet been called to utter. The ancient church is here described in a fourfold manner; first, simply as his people; then, as his saints or gracious ones, the objects of his mercy and the subjects of his grace; then, by their national title, as the sons (or descendants) of Israel; and lastly as the people near him, i. e. nearer to him than all others, sustaining a more intimate relation to him. The same expression which is elsewhere applied to the priests (Lev. x. 3. Ezek. xlii. 13) is here applied to Israel as “a kingdom of priests and a holy nation” (Ex. xix. 6.)

PSALM CXLIX.

THIS may be regarded as the special song of praise required of Israel at the close of the preceding psalm; first, on account of mercies already experienced by the chosen people, vs. 1—5, and then, in the hope of future triumphs over all heathen and hostile powers, vs. 6—9. Nothing could well be more appropriate to the state of things under Nehemiah, when the city and nation had again been put into a posture of defence and resistance.

1. Hallelujah! Sing unto Jehovah a new song, his praise in the congregation of saints. Compare Ps. xl. 4 (3.) xevi. i. exi. i. cxlviii. 14, to which last there is an obvious allusion, connecting the two psalms in the closest manner.

2. Let Israel rejoice in his Maker! Let the sons of Zion triumph in their King! Not merely the creator of individuals, but of the church and nation as such, and that not only at first, but by a kind of new creation, in the restoration of the people from captivity. They are summoned to rejoice in him, not only as their founder and restorer but their sovereign. See above, on Ps. xcv. 6. c. 3 cxlv. 1, and compare Isai. xliii. 1. xlv. 2. xlv. 13.

3. Let them praise his name in the dance; with timbrel and harp let them play (or make music) to him. The usual modes of expressing joy are here combined. As to the dance, see above, on Ps. xxx 12 (11.)

4. For Jehovah is pleased with his people; he beautifies the humble with salvation. The first clause suggests the idea of a previous alienation and of his having been appeased or reconciled. See above, on Ps. lxxxv. 2 (1.) The verb is one applied in the Law to God's acceptance of the sacrifices, and might therefore awaken here associations with atonement and forgiveness. See above, on Ps. xix. 15 (14.) li. 22 (20.) The verb occurs in its general sense of being pleased or satisfied, Ps. cxlvii. 10, 11 With the last clause compare Isai. lxi. 3.

5. Let the saints exult in glory; let them sing (for joy) upon their beds. The word translated saints is the same that occurs in Ps. cxlviii. 14, and is there explained. In glory (or honour), i. e. the glorious or honourable state into which Jehovah has now brought them. The glory is not that which belongs to God, Ps. xxix. 9. xevi. 7, but that which he bestows, Ps. lxxxiv. 12 (11.) lxxxv. 10 (9.) The very phrase, in honour, occurs above, Ps. cxii. 9. Sing or shout, as audible expressions of strong feeling, and especially of joy. On their beds, where they have been accustomed to lament their previous degradation, or what Nehemiah calls their "affliction and reproach." See Neh. i. 3 iii. 36 (iv. 4.)

6. Praises of God in their throat, and a two-edged sword in their hand. A striking coincidence has been observed between this verse and Neh. iv. 11, 12 (17, 18.) As then they worked with one hand and brandished the sword with the other, so now they might be said at the same time to praise God and defy their enemies. This singular mixture of devotional and martial spirit is characteristic of the psalm and furnishes a valuable index to the date of composition. The conclusion thus reached is corroborated by the account of the military and religious pomp, with which the walls were dedicated, as described by Nehemiah (xii. 31—47.)

7. To execute vengeance among the nations, punishments among the peoples. Not their own vengeance, but that of God, to whom alone it appertains. See above, on Ps. xviii. 48 (47.) xciv. 1, and compare Deut. xxxii. 35. Rom. xii. 19. Heb. x. 30. This is really nothing more than a prediction, that God would use his people as his instruments in punishing the nations by whom they had themselves been persecuted and oppressed. This was partially fulfilled in the successes of the Maccabees, but under a new and unexpected form, in the spiritual triumphs of the true religion, and its actual or prospective subjugation of the world.

8. To bind their kings with chains, their nobles with fetters of iron. The word translated nobles is properly a participle, meaning honoured (ones.) The verse simply carries out the idea of the one before it, that of the subjugation of the gentiles by the true religion. The objection to this, as a spiritualizing explanation of the text, springs from a narrow and erroneous view of the very end for which Israel existed as a nation. Those promises to Israel, which are not still available for us, were but of temporary local value.

9. To execute among them the judgment written. An honour is that for all his saints. This last phrase occurs also at the close of the preceding psalm (cxlviii. 14). As written may mean written in the book of God's decrees, there is no need of supposing a reference to any part of scripture. If there be such reference, however, it is no doubt to the threatening in Deut. xxxii. 41—43. To act as God's instruments in this great judicial process, so far from being a disgrace or hardship, is an honour reserved for all the objects of his mercy and subjects of his grace. The psalm ends as it began, with Hallelujah!

P S A L M C L .

THIS is the closing Hallelujah or Doxology, which marks the conclusion of the last series or cycle (Ps. cxlvii—cl), of the Fifth Book (Ps. cvii—cl), and of the whole Psalter. In form and structure it is perfectly simple, merely reciting, in an animated manner, the place (v. 1), the theme (v. 2), the mode (vs. 3—5), and the extent (v. 6) of the praise due to Jehovah.

1. Hallelujah! Praise God in his sanctuary! Praise him in the firmament of his power! The essential meaning of the verse is, praise him both in earth and heaven. The particulars detailed in Ps. cxlviii are here condensed into a pregnant summary. The sanctuary is the earthly one, and as such stands opposed to the firmament or heaven, called the firmament of his power, as being one of the most glorious proofs and products of its exercise, and still the scene of its most striking exhibitions. The phrase is to be understood as comprehending the hosts of heaven, both inanimate and living, both material and spiritual. The parallelism is rendered still more perfect by the correspondence between power in the last clause and (זֶרַח) the divine name in the first.

2. Praise him for his mighty acts! Praise him according to his plenitude of greatness! His mighty acts, literally, *his might*s or powers. See above, on Ps. cxlv. 4. For, literally, in them, i. e. praise him as exhibited and viewed in these. The corresponding particle means like, in accordance with, in proportion to, in a manner worthy of his greatness. The last phrase in Hebrew is peculiarly expressive, consisting of the two strongest terms denoting magnitude, the abstract forms of much and great, which might be rendered, if our usage suffered it, muchness of greatness.

3. Praise him with blast of trumpet! Praise him with harp and lyre! Here begins an enumeration of the instruments employed in public worship, and therefore necessarily associated with the idea of divine praise. The trumpet was used to assemble the people, and would therefore excite many of the same associations with our church-bells. The other instruments were used as actual accompaniments of the psalms performed in public worship.

4. Praise him with timbrel and dance! Praise him with strings and pipe! The three great classes of instruments are here distinctly mentioned, namely, wind, stringed, and pulsatile. The last, represented by the drum or timbrel, still called by a kindred name in Arabic, is here accompanied by its inseparable adjunct dancing, which might seem misplaced in a list of instruments, and those employed in sacred music, but for the peculiar usages and notions of the ancient Hebrews, with respect to this external sign of joy. See above, on Ps. xxx. 12 (11.) cxlix. 3. The common version of the last word (organ) is derived through the Vulgate from the Septuagint, where it denotes a system or combination of pipes. The Hebrew word, according to the Jewish tradition, means a simple pipe, and is so rendered in the Prayer Book version. It here represents the whole class of wind-instruments. See above, on Ps. lxxviii. 26 (25), and compare 2 Sam. vi. 5.

5. Praise him with cymbals of loud sound! Praise him with cymbals of joyful noise! The dominant idea, that of audibly expressed joy, is sustained to the last, where the cymbals are mentioned in both clauses, as an instrument peculiarly appropriated to occasions of unusual rejoicing. See 2 Sam. vi. 5. Ezr. iii. 10. Neh. xii. 27. The effect is still further heightened by the qualifying epithets, the first of which strictly denotes hearing or the thing heard, i. e. sound, and here by implication, loud sound. To this idea the parallel term adds that of joyful sound, to which it is constantly applied in usage. See above, on Ps. xxvii. 6. lxxxix. 16 (15), and compare Num. xxiii. 21. The distinction, here assumed by some interpreters, between cymbals of a larger and a smaller size, is wholly unnecessary.

6. Let all breath praise Jah! Hallelujah! The very ambiguity of all breath gives extraordinary richness of meaning to this closing sentence. From the simple idea of wind instruments, mentioned in the context, it leads us, by a beautiful transition, to that of vocal, articulate, intelligent praise, uttered by the breath of living men, as distinguished from mere lifeless instruments. See above, on Ps. lxxviii. 26 (25.) Then lastly, by a natural association, we ascend to the idea expressed in the common version, every thing that hath breath, not merely all that lives, but all that has a voice to praise God. There is nothing in the Psalter more majestic or more beautiful than this brief but most significant finale, in which solemnity of tone predominates, without however in the least disturbing the exhilaration which the close of the Psalter seems intended to produce, as if in emblematical allusion to the triumph which awaits the church and all its members, when through much tribulation they shall enter into rest.

THE END.

